PERKINS MFG. CO. v. CLINTON CONST. CO. OF CALIFORNIA.

S. F. 13367.

Supreme Court of California.
Dec 30, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 29, 1931.

1. Corporations 🔑636.

Under police power, state may exclude foreign corporations from doing intrastate business, and hence may permit doing of business on conditions or restrictions.

2. Corporations 🔑657(3).

As penalty for foreign corporation's noncompliance with statute regulating intrastate commerce, state may make corporate contracts absolutely void (St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended; St. 1923, p. 1034).

St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended in 1923 (repealed by St. 1927, p. 396, and re-enacted as Civ. Code, §§ 405, 406, 408, 409), provides that, as condition precedent to doing intrastate business, foreign corporation must file certain papers, etc., and, as penalty for noncompliance, statute imposes fine, prohibits actions by corporation, and, in addition, provides that contracts of corporation affecting its liability or property shall be void on its behalf, but shall be enforceable against it.

3. Corporations 🔑657(3).

Under statute regulating intrastate business, making contracts of foreign corporation void for noncompliance, subsequent compliance does not render contracts enforceable by corporation (St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended; St. 1923, p. 1034).

4. Corporations 🔑657(3).

Repeal of statutory penalty, rendering foreign corporation's contracts void for noncompliance with intrastate business regulations, does not revive void contracts.

5. Corporations 🔑641.

Statute repealing provisions regulating foreign corporations doing intrastate business, and re-enacting substantially same provisions simultaneously, held merely modified continuation thereof, rather than abrogation or annulment (St. 1915, p. 422, as amended; St. 1923, p. 1034; St. 1927, p. 396).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by the Perkins Manufacturing Company against the Clinton Construction Company of California. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Gaylord & Smith and Willard P. Smith, all of San Francisco (W. L. Southwell, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Ernest K. Little, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This case involves an interpretation of certain provisions of the law dealing with foreign corporations never before passed upon by the courts of this state. Plaintiff is a foreign corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, while defendant, as its name implies, is a California corporation. On November 20, 1923, plaintiff entered into a written contract with defendant, by and through its duly authorized California agent, whereby plaintiff agreed to "furnish and install all steel rolling doors" at a specified price in a certain building then being constructed by defendant in California. The contract was entered into in California, and, at least as far as performance by plaintiff was concerned, was to be performed here. The doors were duly and properly installed by the California agent of plaintiff, and accepted by defendant. The latter then issued two checks in the correct amounts as payment for the same, and delivered the checks to the California agent of plaintiff. It appears that the agent cashed the checks and has failed to account to his principal for the proceeds. Plaintiff contends that the payment to the agent was not authorized.

On August 24, 1925, plaintiff herein commenced an action in the superior court of San Francisco against this same defendant for the full amount alleged to be still due on the doors, relying on the written contract, which is likewise the basis of this present action, and also setting forth a cause of action based on a common count. The defendant answered, setting up as a defense, payment to the agent, and likewise setting up that the plaintiff had not complied with the statute of this state prescribing the terms and conditions upon which foreign corporations may transact intrastate business in this state. St. 1915, c. 190, p. 422, as amended; St. 1923, c. 443, p. 1034. That action proceeded to trial on April 21, 1926, and, upon the evidence showing that the plaintiff was a foreign corporation and had not complied with the terms of the above statutes, the court ordered a judgment of dismissal in favor of defendant. In that case the court made a specific finding that the contract involved was a contract dealing with intrastate commerce. No appeal was taken from this judgment, and the same has since become final.

On April 20, 1927, section 1 of the Act of 1915, as amended, said section being the section prescribing the terms and conditions upon which foreign corporations can do business in this state, was repealed. St. 1927, c. 221, p. 396. By a statute enacted the same day, all of the provisions of section 1 of the Act of 1915 were re-enacted as sections 405, 406, 408, and 409 of the Civil Code. St. of 1927, c. 222, p. 396. The repeal of the old statute and the re-enactment in the Code became effective simultaneously on July 29, 1927.

On September 28, 1927, plaintiff complied with the provisions of the 1927 statute in reference to filing a copy of its articles, etc., and on September 29, 1927, commenced this present action on the written contract, and likewise on an open book account. The answer of defendant denies the allegations of the complaint, and sets up as a defense on the merits payment to the agent. As a special defense, defendant likewise sets up that plaintiff had failed to comply with the provisions of the statute concerning foreign corporations at the time the contract was entered into. The action proceeded to trial, the court finding for defendant on the merits, and likewise finding that plaintiff had not complied with the statute on the date the contract was entered into, and that the contract was therefore void as to it. From the judgment thus entered, plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The theory upon which appellant seeks to evade the effect of the prior adjudication, and the effect of the provisions of the 1915 act as amended, as hereafter set forth, is substantially as follows: Appellant contends that the provisions of the 1915 act, imposing certain penalties on foreign corporations for failure to comply with the provisions of the act, merely rendered contracts entered into in violation of the act voidable and not void; that the penalties imposed merely cut off the remedy of the foreign corporation to enforce such contracts; that it is within the power of the Legislature to remove such a disability; that the repeal of the 1915 act in 1927 served to remove this disability; that the repeal operates retrospectively so as to remove disabilities existing before its passage; that the re-enactment of 1927 only has prospective application; that compliance with the 1927 act before suit is all that is required. This argument, although ingenious, is unsound.

Section 1 of the Act of 1915, as amended in 1923, supra, provides that every foreign corporation engaged in intrastate commerce in this state, must, as a condition precedent to doing business in this state, file with the secretary of state and with certain county clerks, certain designated papers and affidavits; it must pay a filing fee and appoint a process agent. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section renders the noncomplying corporation subject to certain penalties:

(1) Such noncomplying corporation is subject to a $500 fine.

(2) Such noncomplying corporation is prohibited from maintaining or defending any action or proceeding concerning its property or transactions in this state in the courts of this state.

(3) "In addition to the penalty herein provided, every contract made by or on behalf of any such foreign corporation, affecting the personal liability thereof or relating to property within the state, shall be void on its behalf and on behalf of its assigns, but shall be enforceable against it or them."

It is admitted that appellant had not complied with the terms of this statute on the date the contract was entered into, nor on the date the contract was performed by it, and it is conceded that the contract involved is one in intrastate commerce within the meaning of the above penalty provisions.

The courts of this state have never passed upon the effect of the third penalty provision quoted, supra, upon contracts coming within its operation. This point will first be discussed without reference to the question as to the effect of the subsequent repeal of the statute.

[1] The law is well settled that a state, by virtue of its police power, may entirely exclude foreign corporations from the right to do intrastate business within its borders, and therefore may permit them to do business here upon such conditions or subject to such restrictions as it may see fit to impose. Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 S. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297; London, etc., Bank v. Aronstein (C. C. A.) 117 F. 601; H. K. Mulford Company v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 P. 236; San Francisco v. Liverpool, etc., Company, 74 Cal. 113, 15 P. 380, 5 Am. St. Rep. 425; Jameson v. Simonds Saw Company, 2 Cal. App. 582, 84 P. 289; Black v. Vermont Marble Co., 1 Cal. App. 718, 82 P. 1060.

The constitutionality of such restrictions as are contained in the 1915 statute is no longer open to attack. All states agree on this point. The decisions of the various states, however, are in substantial conflict on the question as to whether the failure of the corporation to comply with such restrictive statutes before undertaking to do business in the domestic state will render its contract void or voidable, and whether compliance with the statute any time before suit is sufficient. See annotation in 24 L. R. A. 315; 14 A. Cor. Jur. 1294, § 4002; 9 Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations, 10,027, § 5941; 8 Thompson on Corporations (3d Ed.) 899, § 6662 et seq. This conflict in the decisions is at least partially due to a difference in the language of the statutory or constitutional provisions of the different states.

It will be noted that the California statute imposes three penalties for failure to comply, viz. $500 fine; prohibition against the maintenance of any action on such a contract; and finally the statute declares any such contract void as to the corporation. The second penalty—the prohibition against the maintenance of an action—has been, in a slightly different form, part of our statute law since long before 1915. Under the former statute (old section 406, Civ. Code [1915]) it was held that, as to transactions included within it, if the defendant failed to plead noncompliance in the answer or before trial, he waived this defense. In other words, under that provision, failure to comply with the statute rendered the contract voidable and not void, and compliance any time before suit was sufficient. Cal. Jur. 212, § 698; 8 Thompson on Corporations (3d Ed.) 894, § 6659; 9 Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations 10,112, § 5972.

[2] In many states the only penalties imposed for failure to comply with the statute are the prohibition against the maintaining of an action and a money penalty. But, as we have seen, California, and some other states, have seen fit to declare, in addition, that certain contracts of such noncomplying corporations, such as the contract herein involved, are void. This the state has an unquestioned right to do. 8 Thompson on Corporations (3d Ed.) 899, § 6662; 9 Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations 10,051, § 5947; State v. American Book Co., 69 Kan. 1, 76 P. 411, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041, 2 Ann. Cas. 56; Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Highlands Amusement Co., 192 Mo. 404, 90 S. W. 1020, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511, 4 Ann. Cas. 808; Fruin-Colnon Contracting Co. v. Chatterson, 146 Ky. 504, 143 S. W. 6, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 857. Although the point, as stated above, has never been passed on in this state, in other states that have seen fit to declare such contracts void the decisions are uniform as to the effect of noncompliance. All contracts coming within the prohibition are absolutely void as to the foreign corporation, and no action may be maintained by the corporation thereon. Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 23 S. Ct. 206, 47 L. Ed. 328; In re Springfield Realty Co. (D. C.) 257 F. 785; Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., 114 Wis. 66, 89 N. Talley-Bates Const. Co., 162 Ala. 396, 50 So. 341; Hanchey v. Southern Home Building & Loan Ass'n, 140 Ala. 245, 37 So. 272; Goodner Krumm Co. v. J. L. Owens Mfg. Co., 51 Okl. 376, 152 P. 86; Tripp State Bank v. Jerke, 45 S. D. 448, 188 N. W. 314, affd. in 45 S. D. 580, 189 N. W. 514.

In the case of Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., supra, 114 Wis. 66, 89 N. W. at page 908, the Wisconsin court used the following language, which has often been quoted by other courts: "We must hold that the words, 'shall be wholly void on its behalf, and on behalf of its assigns, but shall be enforceable against it and them,' mean just what they say; and, if they [the statutes] are valid, they render the contract in question absolutely void and a nullity, in so far as it is sought to be enforced on behalf of the defendants by way of counterclaim in this action."

In First National Bank of Price v. Parker, supra, 57 Utah, 290, 194 P. at page 663, the Utah court thus referred to its statute: "In our judgment the language of our statute with reference to noncomplying foreign corporations is susceptible of but one construction. Its meaning is not doubtful. Courts uniformly hold that in the application of such statutes there is but one thing to do, namely, enforce the statute as it is. 'Whenever the statute has expressly declared that the contract is unenforceable, that, of course, is the end of the controversy. Such a statute is self-construing, and the court has no other duty than to give it effect.'"

[3] In those states which have declared the contract void, the decisions are practically uniform that subsequent compliance with the statute in no way enlarges the legal rights of the noncomplying corporation as far as the particular contract is concerned. In other words, subsequent compliance with the statute can have no legal efficacy to change the status of a contract declared to be wholly void at the time it was entered into.

In Alabama, etc., Co. v. Talley-Bates Const. Co., supra, 162 Ala. 396, 50 So. at page 344, the Alabama Supreme Court stated the rule as follows: "That purpose is not to be accomplished by a filing at the pleasure of the corporation, or when it may be to its interest to appeal to the courts of this state. We may safely affirm that nothing short of a compliance before any business is engaged in or transacted in this state satisfies either the literal requirement of the statute and Constitution or their policy."

In Interstate Const. Co. v. Lakeview Canal Co., 31 Wyo. 191, 224 P. 850, at page 851, the Wyoming Supreme Court stated the rule as follows, after referring to an earlier case holding such contracts unlawful: "The holding in that case is inconsistent with the contention that a compliance with our law subsequent to the making of an unlawful contract, but before suit is started, avoids the necessity of declaring such a contract void. If a contract, or any business that gives rise to a claim is unlawful, it cannot well be made lawful by anything that is done subsequently. * * * But the courts are agreed, we think, that where the claim sued on arises out of a transaction unlawful by reason of noncompliance with the Constitution or laws, a subsequent compliance has no effect."

See, also, 9 Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations, 10,112, § 5972, where many cases are cited in support of the above rule.

The situation involved is analogous to that presented by the question as to the validity of acts performed by a corporation while its powers are suspended by virtue of its failure to pay the license tax. The law is settled in this state that a subsequent payment of the tax in no way validates prior transactions. 7 Cal. Jur. 155, § 643. The same result follows in reference to the problem here presented. Subsequent compliance, at least where defendant sets up as a defense the failure to comply at the time the contract was entered into, does not render the contract enforceable by the noncomplying foreign corporation.

We are therefore irresistibly led to the conclusion that, since the Legislature has seen fit to declare such contracts "void" as to the noncomplying foreign corporation, the Legislature meant what it said, and such contracts must be deemed to be void, and subsequent compliance cannot validate the same so as to permit the maintaining of any suit thereon by such corporations.

[4] The above analysis would dispose of this appeal, were it not for the fact that the act imposing the penalty was repealed, and simultaneously similar provisions were enacted into the Civil Code. We turn now to a discussion of the problem thus presented.

The new sections added to the Civil Code (sections 405, 406, 408, 409) contain exactly the same provisions as were contained in section 1 of the repealed 1915 act, with the following exceptions: (1) The order of certain sentences is reversed; (2) the fee required upon compliance with the law is raised from $75 to $100; (3) some repetitious phrases are omitted; (4) various minor changes in the administrative features of the act are provided for; (5) minor changes are provided for in reference to the papers necessary to be filed upon compliance with the statute.

It is to be noted that the provisions in reference to the imposition of the three penalties above enumerated, found in the 1915 act, were re-enacted into the 1927 act without change.

Appellant contends that the penalties imposed by the 1915 act merely cut off its remedy to enforce the contract, and that the Legislature has power to remove the disability thus imposed; no vested rights being involved. This, appellant contends, the Legislature did by the repeal of the law imposing the penalty, the repeal acting retroactively as to the penalty. Appellant therefore contends that, since the penalty has been removed and since it has now complied with the provisions of the 1927 act, it may maintain this action.

The result reached by appellant is non sequitur for two reasons. In the first place, the whole argument is based upon the premise that the penalties imposed by the 1915 act merely served to render the contract unenforceable and not void, but this premise, we have seen, is incorrect. The contract herein involved was void as to appellant when entered into and performed. The rule in reference to repeal of statutes imposing penalties would seem to have no application to a contract rendered void by statute. In other words, we are of the opinion that the repeal of a penalty rendering a contract void, would not serve to revive the void contract.

[5] However, there is another principle of law that applies to the facts of this case that seems to us conclusive of the facts herein involved. As stated above, simultaneously with the repeal of the 1915 act, the same provisions, slightly modified, were re-enacted into the Civil Code. In other words, there was not a moment in which the repealing act stood in force without being replaced by the new sections added to the Code. The correct principle applicable to such a situation was thus stated by the United States Supreme Court in interpreting the repeal and re-enactment of several California statutes in the case of Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (69 U. S.) 450, at page 458, 17 L. Ed. 805:

"The new act re-enacts substantially all the provisions of the original act, relating to pilots and pilot regulations for the harbor of San Francisco. It subjects the pilots to similar examinations; it requires like qualifications; it prescribes nearly the same fees for similar services. * * * The new act took effect simultaneously with the repeal of the first act; its provisions may, therefore, more properly be said to be substituted in the place of, and to continue in force with modifications, the provisions of the original act, rather than to have abrogated and annulled them. The observations of Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, in Wright v. Oakley, 5 Metc. [Mass.] 406, upon the construction of the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, which in terms repealed the previous legislation of the State, may with propriety be applied to the case at bar.

"'In construing the revised statutes and the connected acts of amendment and repeal, it is necessary to observe great caution to avoid giving an effect to these acts which was never contemplated by the legislature. In terms, the whole body of the Statute law was repealed; but these repeals went into operation simultaneously with the revised statutes, which were substituted for them, * * * with such modifications as were intended to be made by that revision. There was no moment in which the repealing act stood in force without being replaced by the corresponding provisions of the revised statutes. In practical operation and effect, therefore, they are rather to be considered as a continuance and modification of old laws than as an abrogation of those old and the re-enactment of new ones.'"

The principle has been recognized by the California courts many times. In the Estate of Martin, 153 Cal. 225, 94 P. 1053, a former succession tax statute was expressly repealed and simultaneously a new succession tax act was passed, containing most of the provisions of the old act. It was contended that, since the old act had been repealed, the right of the state to collect taxes accrued thereunder was lost. The court held that the new act should be construed as a continuation of the old, with the modifications found in the new act, stating at page 229 of 153 Cal., 94 P. 1053, 1055: "These re-enactments come within the scope and effect of section 325 of the Political Code, declaring that, when a part of a statute is amended, it is 'not to be considered as having been repealed and re-enacted in the amended form; but the portions which are not altered are to be considered as having been the law from the time when they were enacted.' The rule particularly applicable to this case is thus stated in Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 238: 'Where there is an express repeal of an existing statute, and a re-enactment of it at the same time, or a repeal and a re-enactment of a portion of it, the re-enactment neutralizes the repeal so far as the old law is continued in force. It operates without interruption where the re-enactment takes effect at the same time.' Speaking of a similar case, the Supreme Court of the United States in Bear Lake I. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 11, 17 S. Ct. 7, 41 L. Ed. 327, say: 'Although there is a formal repeal of the old by the new statute, still there never has been a moment of time since the passage of the act of 1888 when these similar provisions have not been in force. Notwithstanding, therefore, this formal repeal, it is as we think, entirely correct to say that the new act should be construed as a continuation of the old, with the modification contained in the new act'"—citing many cases. See, also, Carter v. Stevens, 208 Cal. 649, 284 P. 217; Riley v. Havens, 193 Cal. 432, 225 P. 275; San Joaquin, etc., Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 221, 128 P. 924; 23 Cal. Juris., page 699, § 87; Spokane & Eastern Trust Co. v. Hart, 127 Wash. 541, 221 P. 615.

The above reasoning appeals to us as applicable here. The new act must be deemed to be a continuance and modification of the old law, and not the complete abrogation of it so as to work the result sought by appellant herein, which, if arrived at, would abrogate the entire policy of this state in reference to foreign corporations as to past offenders. This result was never intended by the Legislature. Moreover, it must be remembered that the provisions in reference to penalties for noncompliance are identical in both the old and new statutes, and, at least as far as they are concerned, it must be held that the repeal and re-enactment merely operated to continue them in effect.

From the foregoing, it follows that the judgment of the trial court holding the contract herein involved void for failure to comply with the provisions of the statute in reference to foreign corporations was and is correct, and should be and hereby is affirmed.

VENTURA COUNTY HARBOR DIST. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF VENTURA COUNTY et al.

S. F. 13755.

Supreme Court of California.

Dec. 31, 1930.

1. Statutes 🔑76(1).

Where existing general statutes authorized harbor districts, as well as harbor improvements and developments, special act for construction of harbor held unconstitutional (St. 1915, p. 1459, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1314; St. 1927, p. 1819, and p. 362 as amended by St. 1929, p. 817; Const. art. 1, § 11; art. 4, § 25, subd. 33).

It appeared that certain harbor district sought to construct harbor at designated place under special act, called the Ventura County Harbor District Act (St. 1927, p. 1819); that proposed improvement could be carried out either under General Harbor Act (St. 1927, p. 362, as amended by St. 1929, p. 817), or under St. 1915, p. 1459, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1314; and that general statutes were more equitable because they gave landowner opportunity to be heard, and made harbor bonds lien on both personal and real property, instead of real property only, as under special act. Const. art. 1, § 11, requires all laws of general nature to have uniform operation, and article 4, § 25, subd. 33, forbids Legislature to pass local or special laws where general law could be made applicable.

2. Evidence 🔑83(1).

Public officers are presumed to have discharged duties properly.

3. Constitutional law 🔑48.

In absence of judicial determination to contrary, statutes are presumed valid.

4. Constitutional law 🔑70(2).

Question whether special act can be made applicable is addressed in first instance to Legislature, and will be upheld, unless invalidity appears on face, or from facts of which court takes judicial cognizance.

5. Evidence 🔑5(1), 29.

Court judicially notices existing general harbor acts, and facts appearing on face of special harbor act, and matters of common knowledge and observation.

6. Constitutional law 🔑70(2).

Whether special act can be made applicable is ultimately judicial, not legislative, question.

7. Constitutional law 🔑48.

Presumptions that both general and special statutes are valid, and that special act controls, are inoperative, where question is whether special act can be made applicable, in view of existing general act.

Petition for a writ of mandate by the Ventura County Harbor District, a public corporation and body politic, to compel the Board of Supervisors of Ventura County and T. G. Gabbert and others, as members of and constituting the Board, to call a special election to vote on a proposal to incur a bonded indebtedness for a harbor.

Alternative writ discharged, and petition denied.

Farrand & Slosson, of Los Angeles (Ross C. Fisher, of counsel), amici curiæ for petitioner.

James C. Hollingsworth and Don R. Holt, both of Ventura, for respondents.

J. M. Mannon, Jr., Edwin S. Pillsbury, and McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ for respondents.

Walter J. Forest, Blackstock & Rogers, and Sheridan, Orr, Drapeau & Gardner, all of Ventura, for City of San Buenaventura.

PRESTON, J.

The petitioner, asserting itself to be a public corporation created by special act of the Legislature (St. 1927, p. 1819), seeks to compel respondent board of supervisors of the county of Ventura to call a special election in said district under said act to vote upon the proposition of incurring a bonded indebtedness of $2,000,000 to be used in constructing and maintaining a land-locked harbor at a place called Hueneme in said county.

Issue is made by demurrer and answer to the petition, supported by a stipulation of facts. Respondent, in refusing to comply with the demand of petitioner, attacks the validity of said special act. Secondly, assuming the act to be valid, respondent alleges failure of petitioner to faithfully follow certain jurisdictional steps requisite for calling the said election. Numerous questions of both types are elaborately briefed and argued both by the respective parties and numerous amici curiæ as well. But we have been led to a conclusion upon one of the constitutional questions which disposes of the entire case; hence a consideration of the other matters urged becomes unnecessary.

The provisions of the Constitution involved are: Article 1, § 11, which reads: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation"; and article 4, § 25, subd. 33, which reads: "The legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Thirty-third—In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable."

The facts necessary to a discussion of said question are: There are three statutes in existence relating to harbor development by the district assessment plan. Two are of general application; the third is the special act here under consideration. The first Harbor Act was passed in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1459), amended in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1314). This act applies to all counties wherein a harbor exists and provides for "the improvement, development, or protection of any harbor, bay, inlet, or other arm of the sea existing within any county of this state"; then follows a line of procedure for the organization of a harbor district, voting upon a bond issue, construction of the development works, and management of same. It is not necessary to our inquiry to set forth these steps in detail, but it should be noted that this act is known as a county harbor improvement act, and the bond issue is a lien upon the property of the whole county, and the project was to be managed by the board of supervisors, unless a state board of harbor commissioners was in existence authorized to manage and control same.

In 1927 the Legislature passed another General Harbor District Act, approved April 20, 1927, effective July 29, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 362), which provides that "any portion of a county in this state, the exterior boundaries of which include a bay, harbor, or inlet of the Pacific ocean, may be formed into a harbor district for the improvement or development of such harbor, upon proceedings being had and taken as provided for in this act." The word "harbor" is therein defined as follows: "The word 'harbor' means any bay, harbor, inlet, or other arm of the sea in which the tides of the Pacific ocean ebb and flow." Section 3 of the act provides that the improvement and development work proposed to be done in the harbor "may include the dredging of channels, shipways, ship berths, anchorage places and turning basins, the construction of jetties, breakwaters, bulkheads, sea walls, wharfs, ferry slips, and warehouses. * * *"

The act further provides that the organization of the district may be set in motion by a petition signed by fifty or more persons of the county who are registered voters, residents, and freeholders within the proposed harbor district, which petition shall pray for the organization of a harbor district; shall specify the harbor to be improved or developed, the nature of the work to be done; shall describe the boundaries of the proposed district; and shall be filed with the board of supervisors of the county in which the district is located. Publication of the petition is then provided for, and also hearing thereof by the board of supervisors. Power is vested in the board of supervisors to change the exterior boundaries of the proposed district by excluding therefrom such lands as in its judgment would not be benefited by the improvement or development of the harbor and to include therein such other contiguous lands as in its judgment would be benefited thereby.

It further provides that, if the owners of more than 10 per cent. of the lands to be included shall object to having their lands so included, no further proceedings shall be had until the boundaries of the proposed district shall have been changed to exclude said lands. It provides also for notice to the owners of the lands proposed to be added to said district. After a consideration of the feasibility of the project and whether the cost thereof is proportionate to the benefits to be derived therefrom, the board may call an election and submit to the voters a proposal to form the district and incur the necessary bonded indebtedness to carry out the improvement. If the proposition carries by a majority vote, the district is formed, and the bonds authorized may be issued and sold by the board of supervisors. Further steps provided for in the act need not be here recited, except to say that the assessment upon the said district covers all classes of property, real and personal, located therein.

It should here be noted also that, before the respondent was required to act in the present case, the said General Harbor Act of 1927 was amended (St. 1929, p. 817), so as to make section 1 of said act read as follows: "Any portion of a county in this state, the exterior boundaries of which include a bay, harbor, inlet or navigable water of the Pacific ocean, may be formed into a harbor district for the improvement or development of such harbor, upon proceedings being had and taken as provided for in this act." This amendment made it doubly sure that a harbor might be located, constructed, or developed under this act at any point in the state bordering upon the navigable waters of the Pacific Ocean.

The legislature, however, on June 1, 1927, approved an act effective July 31, 1927, called the "Ventura County Harbor District Act" (St. 1927, p. 1819). This is the act under which petitioner is attempting to proceed. It creates a district out of practically the whole of Ventura county, excepting alone two islands and a national forest reserve therein, and it has for its purpose "to provide for the location, development, improvement and protection of a harbor on the coast of the Pacific ocean in said Ventura county and within said district including the construction, operation, and maintenance of said harbor. * * *" Section 2.

The peculiar feature about this district is that its boundaries are inflexible and fixed by law; no method being allowed for testing the question as to whether or not any landowner therein is benefited by the improvement. It also provides that a harbor commission of sufficient members be appointed who shall ascertain "the best, most feasible and practical plan and system for the location, improvement, development and protection of a harbor on said coast." Section 6. It further provides that the bonds to carry the plan into execution shall become a lien upon the taxable real property only in said district, excluding all other classes of property assessment for liabilities of the district. The remaining provisions of the act are not necessary to relate.

It is plain, therefore, from the above recital of facts, that under either of the general laws above referred to, and particularly under the latter one, the proposed improvement could have been carried out. It also appears that it would be more consonant with justice and equity that the general plan be followed rather than the special act, for the general act is more flexible and allows the property owner a chance to be heard as to whether or not it is proper to include his property within the said district. It is also preferable because the assessments may be provided for from personal as well as real property of the district, which is not the case in the special act.

[1] This brings us to a consideration of the above-quoted sections of the Constitution. Is it possible that the special act and the general acts may all stand? Is it not true that either the general law is invalid because it lacks uniformity of operation or the special act is invalid because it is a case where a general law may be made applicable? No conceivable reason exists for any lack of uniformity to result from operation of the general laws alone. Every purpose of the special law may be obtained by invoking the one, if not both, the general acts. It seems clear to us that, if the Legislature itself defines, declares, and puts in operation a general law upon a subject, the courts can do nothing less than apply the constitutional provisions quoted and declare the special act invalid under the mandatory provisions of the Constitution.

[2-6] In coming to this conclusion, we have in mind, of course, that there is a presumption that public officers have discharged their duties properly, and that every act of the Legislature is valid until there is a judicial determination to the contrary. We realize also that in the first instance the question as to whether or not a special act can be made applicable is addressed to the Legislature, and that, unless we can see from the face of the act or from facts of which we take judicial cognizance that the case is one in which a special act may not be passed, we will uphold the validity of such legislation. But these presumptions do not aid us where, as here, the Legislature itself has by its own solemn act declared that a general act may be passed covering the subject-matter contained in the special act. We then have the Legislature itself deciding that a general statute is applicable to the subject covered by the special act. This court, of course, will take judicial knowledge of the existence of the general act and its terms and judicial knowledge of facts appearing on the face of the special act and judicial knowledge of those matters of common knowledge and observation taught by the experience of mankind, and, when these matters are considered, we must either declare the question a legislative one or else assume the responsibility of declaring it to be a judicial one, and holding the act invalid by reason of the undisputed facts of which we take judicial knowledge. Although great deference must be shown to the implied findings of a co-ordinate branch of the government still, in its last analysis, this question is a judicial one.

In making this holding we are not unmindful of the case of People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 217, 222, 64 P. 299, 301, wherein the court had under consideration a special act relating to the improvement of the harbor of San Diego, and where against the claim that it was special legislation the court said: "The act in question, if made general, could only apply to the harbors within the state. These are of different size and importance, and we may well assume that the legislature determined that laws suitable and adapted to one would not be suitable or adapted to the others, or to any of the others. There would seem to be the same necessity for diversity of laws and regulations for the different harbors that exists in the case of cities and counties; but the constitution has not directed the classification of harbors, nor would their classification at all simplify or diminish the legislation required."

But it must be observed that at that time there was in existence no general law upon the subject, and the court presumed that the Legislature had before it the facts which made it impractical to pass a general law covering the subject-matter, and by reason of the indulgence of this presumption it declared the act valid, and it may be here said that, were the special act under consideration alone all the legislation upon the subject, we might be disposed to indulge the same presumption, but, as above stated, where the Legislature has spoken, the matter does not rest upon presumption but upon the open facts which show that the general law is valid and the special act is therefore invalid.

We might also say that a special law creating a drainage district has been declared valid, there being no general law on the subject (People v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., 155 Cal. 373, 103 P. 207); that a special act creating a flood control district has also been upheld (Los Angeles C. F. C. Dist. v. Hamilton, 177 Cal. 119, 169 P. 1028), and other similar statutes have been upheld, but in no instance have we found that, where a general law fully applicable and complete on the subject is in existence, a special law has been upheld.

As authority for a contrary holding to the one here announced, counsel cite us two other cases: Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 92 P. 353; Rec. Dis. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 154 P. 845. We regard the first case as distinctly in favor of, and not opposed to, our conclusion. There it is recited that new counties had been uniformly created by special act prior to the constitutional amendment of 1894 requiring it to be done by general law—and it was later done by such an act. In that case, however, a special act was passed altering the boundary between the counties of Fresno and Kings. This, the court held, was a different matter from the creation of a county. The holding is simply that, until it is demonstrated that a general law can be made applicable, the courts will presume the special act had sufficient facts to support it, as it theretofore did as to counties. The other case simply holds that, inasmuch as drainage districts had uniformly been held to be a proper subject for special legislation, such legislation could coexist with a general law on the subject. Here, as above set forth, we are to consider the propriety of having the subject of harbor development provided for by special law. In other words, the citation of this case seems to beg the question here before us.

Authority for the holding we here make is not wanting. In the case of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604, 606, plaintiff city sought to condemn a right of way for a sewer. Defendant appealed from the decree of condemnation, and raised the point that Pasadena, being a city of the sixth class, was required under the law to make an effort to agree with property owners before commencing eminent domain proceedings, which it had not done. The same sections of the Constitution here quoted were there invoked, and in disposing of the question the court said: "It seems to us perfectly clear that the clause of the incorporation act requiring cities of the fifth and sixth classes to make an effort to agree, while all other persons are exempt from such condition, is in plain and direct conflict with both of these constitutional inhibitions. It destroys the uniform operation of a general law, and is special in a case where a general law not only can be made applicable, but in which a general law had been enacted, and in which there is no conceivable reason for discrimination."

In Cullen v. Glendora Water Company, 113 Cal. 503, 39 P. 769, 45 P. 822, 1047, an act was declared invalid which provided special procedure for seeking new trials in proceedings for the confirmation of irrigation districts, a procedure different from that described in the Code of Civil Procedure. The court approved the language above quoted from the case of Pasadena v. Stimson, supra.

In Krause v. Durbrow, 127 Cal. 681, 60 P. 438, an act providing for a special mode of conducting the election of mining corporation directors was declared invalid upon the same line of reasoning.

In Pratt v. Browne, 135 Cal. 649, 67 P. 1082, a special act fixing the salaries of official reporters in counties of the thirtieth class was held void because of a general law on the subject fixing their compensation.

In re Raleigh, 177 Cal. 746, 171 P. 950, a special act which purported to except from the real estate brokers' license law a certain class of individuals was held unconstitutional.

In Mordecai v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 192 P. 40, the California Irrigation Act of 1919 was held unconstitutional because it excepted from its operation any district wholly or in part within a county of the state which had prior to a certain date adopted a freeholders' charter under the Constitution.

In fact, in the recent case of Mojave River Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 717, 727, 262 P. 724, 728, this court held unconstitutional a special provision of the Water Commission Act providing that a party interested in the application before the water commission should have the right to commence an action in the superior court for the review of an order granting or denying such application. The court held the provision unconstitutional in these words: "The inhibition of the Constitution against special enactments regulating the practice and procedure in courts of justice is further enforced by the subsequent clause in the same section of the Constitution, which forbids the Legislature to enact local or special laws upon any subject, 'where a general law can be made applicable.' Const. subd. 33, § 25, art. 4. We have been pointed to no reason why a general law could not be made applicable to the situation presented by the amendment under review, nor, in fact, why the general laws of the state already in existence are not entirely adequate to deal with the controversies of those who are claiming or seeking to exercise conflicting rights in or to the use of waters of the state."

[7] Petitioner asserts that, in view of the presumption that both the general and special statutes are valid and may operate together, and in view of the presumption that the special act controls the general act, we are thereby required to declare the special act valid. As above noted, these presumptions referred to by counsel are proper in a case where the right to legislate both generally and specially upon a subject exists but are inapplicable to a case like the present where we are testing the question as to whether or not there is room for the operation of a special act, in view of the existing general law. Our conclusion is that the special act of 1927 above discussed is inoperative and void.

We deem this a disposition of all the questions raised, and it follows that the alternative writ of mandate is hereby discharged and the petition denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

DAIRY DALE CO. v. AZEVEDO et al.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 8, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Good will ⇨7.
Injunction ⇨56.

Names, addresses, and requirements of employer's customers on milk route in city constitute good will and trade secrets, which equity will protect.

2. Injunction ⇨56.

Dairy company selling and distributing milk over regular route held entitled to injunction restraining former employee, who operated route, from disclosing trade secrets.

> Dairy company was engaged in business of selling and distributing milk and other dairy products in large city. It dealt with customers through persons employed as drivers and collectors. Milk was distributed on regular routes, and drivers were under duty to solicit new customers and build up routes. One of dairy company's employees for several years learned names, addresses, and requirements of its customers on certain route, and, before terminating employment, commenced to solicit such customers on behalf of competing milk company.

Action by the Dairy Dale Company, a corporation, against Thomas Foster Azevedo and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals.

Affirmed.

Daniel A. Ryan and G. F. Snyder, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse H. Steinhart and John J. Goldberg, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco enjoining the defendants from soliciting the patronage of certain customers of plaintiff.

Plaintiff is engaged in the business of selling and distributing milk and other dairy products in San Francisco. It deals with its customers through persons employed as drivers and collectors. The milk is distributed on regular routes, and it is the duty of the drivers and collectors to solicit new customers and thus build up the routes. They are paid a monthly salary, and are aided in their efforts by advertising carried on by plaintiff.

For a period of seven years up to February 15, 1928, defendant and appellant, Azevedo, was employed by plaintiff as a driver and collector. In the course of such employment he learned the names and addresses and requirements of plaintiff's customers on certain routes. Just prior to the termination of his employment with plaintiff, he commenced to solicit these customers on behalf of defendant Russell Milk Service Company. It is to this solicitation of customers listed in the particular routes on which appellant was employed that the injunction is directed.

[1, 2] These facts clearly present a proper case for an injunction. It is settled in this state that the names, addresses, and requirements of an employer's customers on such a route, which constitute part of the good will of the business, are trade secrets; and equity will restrain their disclosure by an employee. We recently gave full consideration to this question and restated the principles upon which such relief is granted in Pasadena Ice Company v. Reeder, 206 Cal. 697, 275 P. 944, 947, 276 P. 995.

Appellant argues that in the particular districts where the routes in question are located plaintiff serves nearly one-half of the people, and that therefore the knowledge which the employee has of such customers is not actually secret and confidential. There is no merit in this assertion, since obviously it is not merely the knowledge of the identity of the customers, but the friendly contact with them, which is important to the solicitors: "* * * They became personally acquainted with the customers of the respondent, their respective places of residence, their peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics, a knowledge of which would greatly aid them in securing and retaining the business of said former customers." COMMERCIAL CASUALTY INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Supreme Court of California.

Dec. 30, 1930.

1. Master and servant 🔑347.

Constitutional provision limits power of Legislature in enacting Workmen's Compensation Act to provide for compensation by employers of their own employees (Const. art. 20, § 21, as amended in 1918).

2. Master and servant 🔑347.

Statutory provision conferring upon Industrial Commission power to entertain proceedings to enforce payment into "subsequent injuries fund" held void as beyond Legislature's power (St. 1917, p. 839, § 9(b)(10)(d), as amended by St. 1929, p. 423; Const. art. 20, § 21, as amended in 1918).

3. Statutes 🔑64(2).

Invalidity of statutory provision respecting proceedings before Industrial Commission to enforce payment into "subsequent injuries fund" does not affect validity of other provisions (St. 1917, p. 839, § 9(b)(10)(d), as amended by St. 1929, p. 423).

> Invalidity of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 839) § 9(b)(10)(d), as amended by St. 1929, p. 423, relating to proceedings before Industrial Commission to enforce payment into "subsequent injuries fund" did not affect validity of other provisions, in view of fact that the statute expressly provides that decision holding any section, subsection, or clause unconstitutional shall not affect validity of remaining portions, and that subsection 10(d) is not so related to other portions of the section that its invalidity would in any way affect them.

In Bank.

Application for certiorari by the Commercial Casualty Insurance Company against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and others, for the purpose of annulling an award of the Industrial Accident Commission against petitioner.

Award annulled.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven and R. P. Wisecarver, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J.

This proceeding was instituted for the purpose of annulling an award of the Industrial Accident Commission against the petitioner, requiring it to pay to the treasurer of the state of California, for the benefit of the "subsequent injuries fund," the sum of $300. The proceeding was instituted and the award made under an amendment by the Legislature of 1929 to the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1929, p. 420), which, for the sake of brevity, will be hereinafter referred to as the Workmen's Compensation Act. The amendment so far as it applies to the questions presented in the present proceeding is designated as section 9(b) (10) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and reads in part as follows:

"(10) (a) The fact an employee has suffered previous disability or received compensation therefor shall not preclude compensation for a later injury nor preclude compensation for death resulting therefrom; but in determining compensation for the later injury or death his average weekly wages shall be such sum as will reasonably represent his earning capacity at the time of the later injury; provided, however, that an employee who is suffering from a previous permanent disability or physical impairment and shall sustain permanent injury thereafter shall not receive compensation for a later injury in excess of the compensation allowed for such injury when considered by itself and not in conjunction with or in relation to the previous disability or impairment. The employer shall not be liable for compensation to such employee for the combined disability but only for that portion due to the later injury as though no prior disability or impairment had existed. If an employee who has previously incurred permanent disability or impairment incurs such additional permanent disability that the combined effect of such subsequent injury and previous disability or impairment shall amount to seventy per cent or more of total permanent disability as the result of any subsequent injury, as defined in this section he shall be paid in addition to the compensation for permanent partial disability hereinbefore provided, and after the cessation of the payments for the period of weeks prescribed therefor special additional compensation, which shall compensate him for the remainder of the combined disability existing after the last injury to him. Such additional compensation shall be paid out of a special fund created for such purpose in the following manner: The employer, or if insured his insurance carrier, shall pay into such special fund whenever any fatal injury is suffered within this state by an employee under such circumstances as to entitle him to the benefits of this act, but for his death, and such employee does not leave surviving him any person entitled to a death benefit as a dependent under this act the sum of three hundred dollars for each such fatal injury in addition to all other payments required by said act; provided, that the total payments required of the employer under this section shall not exceed the maximum payment due from the employer under this act. All moneys payable under this section shall be paid to the state treasurer and be placed into a special fund to be known as the 'subsequent injuries fund,' which fund is hereby created and appropriated for the purposes set forth in this section.

"(b) The subsequent injuries fund shall be used to pay the special additional compensation provided for in this section. The industrial accident commission is hereby authorized, and it shall be its duty, to administer said fund, to fix and award the amounts of special additional compensation to be paid under this section, to authorize payments from said fund to carry out the provisions of this section, and to make any orders, rules or regulations which may be necessary or convenient for the administration of said fund.

"The industrial accident commission may draw upon said fund for the purposes specified in this section, and the controller is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant on said fund from time to time in accordance with the direction of the commission, and the treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same.

"(c) Proceedings to enforce the payment into the subsequent injuries fund, of any sum for which an employer or insurance carrier may become liable under the provisions of this section may be brought by the attorney for the industrial accident commission in the name of the people of the state of California in the superior court, or municipal court, of the county, or city and county, in which such fatal injury shall have occurred or in which the defendant resides. Costs shall be allowed or not as in other cases, and if allowed for or against said commission, said costs shall be paid into or from the subsequent injuries fund in the same manner as other expenditures provided by this section. The commission's expenses of litigation shall be payable out of said fund or the general revenues of the commission.

"(d) Proceedings to enforce the liability created by this section may as an alternative remedy and without interfering with the right to proceed under the preceding subdivision of this section, be instituted before the industrial accident commission of its own motion or upon application of any interested party, in the name of the people of the State of California, and such proceedings shall be tried and determined in the same manner and with the same procedure and effect as other proceedings before said commission. In any proceeding before said commission brought by any person to collect compensation benefits the commission may, if it shall appear from the evidence in said proceedings that the employer is liable under the provisions of this section, award payment of the sum of three hundred dollars herein prescribed to the subsequent injuries fund without joining the people of the State of California as a party."

The facts upon which this proceeding is predicated are, briefly stated, that one W. Pitts, while employed as a laborer on August 14, 1929, at Oakland, Cal., by Rex Floor Company, sustained injury arising out of and occurring in the course of his employment, which injury caused the death of said employee on the same day; that at said time said employer's insurance carrier for workmen's compensation was the petitioner herein, the Commercial Casualty Insurance Company; that at the time of said injury and death said employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, and the amendments thereof; and that said W. Pitts did not leave any known dependents at the time of his injury and death.

Acting upon the purported authority conferred upon the Industrial Accident Commission by section 9(b) (10) (d) of said act as amended in 1929, the Industrial Accident Commission by and through its secretary filed with itself an application for adjustment of claim against the petitioner herein. At the hearing of said application said commission found the facts as hereinbefore stated, and upon the facts so found made the award which the petitioner herein seeks to have annulled by this proceeding.

There is no dispute as to the facts, and no claim is made that the commission in the proceeding before it, which resulted in the making of said award, did not strictly follow and comply with the provisions of said section of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The principal contention made by petitioner relates to the constitutionality of section 9 (b) (10) (d) of said act which purports to confer upon the Industrial Accident Commission jurisdiction to entertain proceedings and to make awards like the proceeding and award involved herein.

Petitioner relies upon the case of Yosemite Lumber Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 774, 204 P. 226, 230, 20 A. L. R. 994, in support of the contention that the Industrial Accident Commission is without authority to entertain this proceeding. In that case this court had under consideration an act of the Legislature of 1919, which purported to provide for the creation of a fund known as the "Industrial Rehabilitation Fund." St. 1919, p. 273. This act provided that, where a valid compensable injury was suffered by an employee leaving no dependents, the employer must pay into said fund the sum of $350. Said statute, like the statute of 1929, provided that the Industrial Accident Commission might institute proceedings before itself for the collection of said sum in the same manner as in any other industrial accident claim. The validity of the act of 1919 was attacked on the ground that the Legislature was without authority to confer upon the Industrial Accident Commission jurisdiction to determine any dispute, except a dispute between an employer and his employees or the dependents of his deceased employees. The court sustained the ground of attack made by the petitioners therein, and in doing so held that the power to determine whether or not the liability imposed by the provisions of said statute existed against an employer was a judicial power; that the sole authority of the Legislature to confer judicial power upon the Industrial Accident Commission was derived from section 21 of article 20 of the Constitution as amended in 1918; that said section of the Constitution gave to the Legislature authority to create a tribunal with judicial power to settle disputes arising between employers and their employees, or the dependents of deceased employees; that the liability imposed by said statute upon the employer was a liability, not to any of his employees or the dependents of any employees, but was a liability to the state, and the dispute, which the proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission was brought to settle, was a dispute between the employer and the state, and the court concluded its opinion on this branch of the case with the following words: "Our conclusion is that section 21 of article 20, as amended in 1918, did not authorize the Legislature to impose a liability on an employer to pay money to the state for the purposes specified in the act of 1919. It follows by necessity that said section gives no authority to the Legislature to confer on the Industrial Accident Commission jurisdiction to determine any dispute that may arise concerning the liability of employers sought to be imposed by said act of 1919."

We can see no escape from the logic of this decision. That case is identical in principle with the proceeding before us. In each case the liability sought to be imposed upon the employer is not one in favor of his employee nor the dependents of any deceased employee. In each case the jurisdiction to determine this liability is attempted to be conferred upon the Industrial Accident Commission. We feel bound by this authority, not only by reason of the rule of stare decisis, but on account of the manifest soundness of the decision.

[1] Respondent further contends, however, that there is a marked difference between the objects and purpose of the statute of 1919 and those of the statute of 1929; that in the 1919 statute the fund therein provided for was to be expended for the purpose of vocational re-education and rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry in this state; that the subsequent injuries fund provided for in the amendment of 1929 is to be used for the purpose of paying special additional compensation to employees sustaining permanent disability by reason of industrial injuries, who at the time of such injuries were already partially permanently injured by reason of injuries previously received. The point made by respondent is that the 1919 legislation sought to impose a liability upon an employer, not for the purpose of compensating employees, but for their re-education and rehabilitation, while the amendment of 1929 creates a liability solely for compensating employees. Respondent concedes that the compensation provided for in the amendment of 1929 is not wholly for the employees of the particular employer upon whom the liability is imposed, and that it may be expended in payment, in part or in whole, as compensation to employees, who are not, and who never had been, in the service of the employer making said payment, but respondent contends that a fair and reasonable construction of section 21 of article 20 of the Constitution permits legislation of this character. In this connection respondent calls to our attention the particular language of the Constitution which is in part as follows: "The Legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation." Had the language of the section of the Constitution stopped with the above quotation therefrom, we would be inclined to agree with the contention of the respondent. But the above-quoted words of the section are immediately followed by the additional words: "And in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any or all persons to compensate any or all of their workmen for injury or disability, and their dependents for death incurred or sustained by said workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party." The above provision of this section of the Constitution, both that quoted and relied upon by the respondent and the latter part thereof which we have quoted, must be read together, as the two parts form but one complete sentence. As so read, we think that the intent of the framers thereof is clear and unambiguous, and that they intended by this amendment of the Constitution to limit the power of the Legislature in enacting a Workmen's Compensation Act to provide for the compensation by the employers of their own employees, and that any legislation which exceeds these limits is beyond the power of the Legislature, and, therefore, void. This same question was considered and passed upon by this court in the case of Yosemite Lumber Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, as will appear from the reading of the following excerpt therefrom:

> "The first grant to the Legislature by the new section is the grant of power 'to create and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation.' This does not authorize the creation of a liability on any person to pay such 'compensation,' or require any person to contribute funds to support the proposed system. It does not purport to touch upon the subject of liabilities.
> "The next phrase of the new section empowers the Legislature 'in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any and all persons to compensate any and all of their workmen for injury or disability and their dependents for death incurred or sustained by the said workmen in the course of their employment.' This does not authorize the creation of a liability on the part of any person to compensate the workmen of other persons, nor the dependents of workmen of other persons. The phrase 'their workmen' necessarily confines the persons to be compensated to workmen who are in the employ of the person who is made liable. This is also shown by the provision that if the workman is killed by an injury in the course of his employment, the compensation is to be made to his 'dependents' thus excluding any idea of liability in such a case to provide for the welfare of workmen in general, or of a particular class of disabled workmen, in no way connected with the employer who is made liable for the particular injury."

[2] Subsection (d), therefore, of section 9 (b) (10) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as amended in 1929, which attempts to confer upon the Industrial Accident Commission the power to entertain this proceeding, is void as beyond the power of the Legislature to enact.

[3] It does not necessarily follow, however, that the whole amendment of the act of 1929 is also unconstitutional. By the express terms of the statute enacting this amendment, it is provided that, if any section, subsection, subdivision, sentence, clause, or phrase of the act be held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of said act. Subsection (10) (d) of said section 9 (b) is not so related to the other portions of said section that its invalidity will in any way affect the other portions of said section. Petitioner concedes that the first sixteen lines of section 9(b) (10) are valid, and they should be sustained by the courts. It contends, however, that all the balance of subdivision (10), and particularly subsection (c) thereof, should be declared unconstitutional by us in this proceeding. In this we cannot agree. Subsection (c) of said subdivision (10) is not before us, and whatever we might say in this proceeding in regard to its validity would be a mere expression of opinion and of no binding effect hereafter. We, therefore, expressly refrain from an expression of opinion as to its constitutionality.

For the reasons hereinbefore expressed, the award of the Industrial Accident Commission against petitioner is annulled.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.

JONES et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

L. A. 10654.

Supreme Court of California.

Dec. 31, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1931.

1. Injunction 🔑85(2).

Where penal statute causes irreparable damage to property rights, injured party may attack constitutionality by action to enjoin enforcement.

2. Injunction 🔑85(2).

If ordinance excluding hospitals for insane from certain areas is unconstitutional as applied to owners of sanitariums within excluded area, they may enjoin enforcement thereof.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑601.

Ordinance prohibiting establishment of sanitariums for insane within certain districts, viewed as part of general zoning plan, held valid.

Zoning ordinances, when reasonable and not arbitrary, constitute justifiable exercise of police power which extends to regulating uses of property not actually amounting to nuisances.

Residential character of restricted districts held sufficient to justify exclusion therefrom of hospitals for insane and feebleminded persons.

6. Municipal corporations ⚷626.

Relative density of population in permissive and restricted districts is not controlling test of validity of zoning plan as regards discriminatory classification.

7. Municipal corporations ⚷626.

Ordinance excluding additional hospitals for insane from residential districts held not based on arbitrary and unreasonable classifications because permitted districts contained densely populated areas and prohibited districts were sparsely populated.

Zoning legislation looks to future as effective means of city planning and is approved by courts.

9. Municipal corporations ⚷63(1).

Appellate court should not be drawn into minute examination of alleged discriminatory operation of zoning ordinances if, broadly considered, reasonable basis of classification exists.

10. Constitutional law ⚷278(1).

Ordinance establishing restricted areas for hospitals for insane does not result in denial of due process.

11. Municipal corporations ⚷601.

In determining constitutionality of zoning ordinance applying to hospitals for insane, finding that sanitariums involved were nuisances was immaterial.

12. Nuisance ⚷23(1), 80.

Individual or city may enjoin acts constituting private or public nuisance as protection against improper conduct of any lawful business.

13. Nuisance ⚷3(8).

Properly conducted sanitarium for insane held not to constitute "nuisance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Nuisance," see Words and Phrases.]

14. Municipal corporations ⚷611.

Private businesses may be wholly prohibited where danger is sufficiently great, and may be excluded from certain districts where maintenance has become public nuisance.

15. Municipal corporations ⚷601.

Zoning regulations may take into consideration factors not bearing on public health, safety, or morals, but coming within term "general welfare," and may deal with uses of property which are not harmful.

16. Municipal corporations ⚷625.

Where retroactive zoning ordinance causes substantial injury and prohibited business is not nuisance, ordinance is to that extent unreasonable exercise of police power.

17. Municipal corporations ⚷601.

Ordinance zoning hospitals for insane within certain districts, though valid as to additional hospitals, was invalid as applied to sanitariums within district annexed to city and excluded from permitted area.

LANGDON, J.

This is an action to enjoin the enforcement of a zoning ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. The said ordinance was enacted independently of the general zoning plan of the city, and its restrictive provisions are directed toward one type of business. It provides that outside of certain designated districts, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation "to erect, establish, operate, maintain or conduct any hospital, asylum, sanitarium, home, retreat or other place for the care or treatment of insane persons, persons of unsound mind, or persons affected by or suffering from mental or nervous diseases." Penalties of fine and imprisonment are specified for its violation.

In March, 1927, the city of Los Angeles annexed the territory known as the Mar Vista District. At that time, there were already in operation in this district four sanitariums for the treatment of nervous diseases: The Casa Del Mar Sanitarium, the Marshall Manor Sanitarium, the St. Erne Sanitarium, and the Wittman Home for Children. These institutions take as patients only persons suffering from the milder forms of mental disorder. No insane persons are admitted. Each institution has been established by a substantial investment in land, buildings, and equipment.

The above-mentioned zoning ordinance, adopted on August 11, 1927, some months after the annexation of the Mar Vista District, excluded that territory from the area in which the establishment and maintenance of such sanitariums was permitted. When the ordinance went into effect, plaintiffs, as the owners of the institutions, sought to enjoin its enforcement. The superior court of Los Angeles county, in each of the actions, denied the relief prayed for, and appeals were then taken. Because their grounds are practically identical, the four appeals were, by stipulation, consolidated, and will be considered together in this opinion.

[1, 2] A preliminary question which may readily be disposed of relates to the availability of the equitable remedy. It is settled that where a penal statute causes irreparable damage to property rights, the injured party may attack its constitutionality by an action to enjoin its enforcement. San Diego Tuberculosis Ass'n v. East San Diego, 186 Cal. 252, 200 P. 393, 17 A. L. R. 513; Abbey Land Co. v. San Mateo County, 167 Cal. 440, 139 P. 1068, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 804. Hence, if the ordinance is unconstitutional in its application to these plaintiffs, they are entitled to the decree which they seek.

[3, 4] Viewing the ordinance as part of a general zoning plan, and disregarding for the moment the question of its applicability to plaintiffs, there can be no doubt of its validity. That zoning ordinances, when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation, constitute a justifiable exercise of police power, is now well established; and it is equally well established that the power extends to the regulation of uses of property which do not actually amount to nuisances. As Mr. Justice Lennon said in Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 487, 234 P. 381, 384, 38 A. L. R. 1479: "* * * The police power as evidenced in zoning ordinances, has a much wider scope than the mere suppression of the offensive uses of property * * * it acts, not only negatively, but constructively and affirmatively, for the promotion of the public welfare." And in Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Company, 272 U. S. 365, 387, 47 S. Ct. 114, 118, 71 L. Ed. 303, 54 A. L. R. 1016, we find a similar statement: "Building zone laws are of modern origin. * * * Regulations, the wisdom, necessity, and validity of which, as applied to existing conditions, are so apparent that they are now uniformly sustained, a century ago, or even half a century ago, probably would have been rejected as arbitrary and oppressive. * * * And in this there is no inconsistency, for, while the meaning of constitutional guaranties never varies, the scope of their application must expand or contract to meet the new and different conditions which are constantly coming within the field of their operation." See, also, Baker, Legal Aspects of Zoning, p. 113; Bettman, Constitutionality of Zoning, 37 Harv. L. Rev. 834, 837.

[5] The evidence shows and the lower court found that the restricted districts were mainly residential in character. This is sufficient to justify the exclusion of businesses such as that carried on by plaintiffs. The decisions uphold the validity of ordinances excluding from residential districts property uses much less incongruous than these, as, for example, flats, stores, and business buildings. See State v. Houghton, 164 Minn. 146, 204 N. W. 569, 54 A. L. R. 1012; Ware v. Wichita, 113 Kan. 153, 214 P. 99; State v. New Orleans, 154 La. 271, 97 So. 440, 33 A. L. R. 260; Spector v. Building Inspector, 250 Mass. 63, 145 N. E. 265.

[6-8] The objection most vigorously urged by plaintiffs is that the ordinance violates the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of the laws in that the classification of permitted and prohibited districts is arbitrary and unreasonable. It is not contended, nor could the contention be made, that the permitted zones are too small or unsuited to plaintiffs' businesses. The permitted districts cover considerably more than one-third of the area of the city and include the downtown business district, as well as various other built-up sections. Hence the instant case does not come within the principles of those decisions which hold an ordinance discriminatory where it makes the permitted area unreasonably small. See In re White, 195 Cal. 516, 234 P. 396. It appears, however, that in the permitted districts are certain densely populated areas, and in the prohibited districts there is some territory which is sparsely populated. This is attacked as discriminatory, chiefly on the authority of In re Throop, 169 Cal. 93, 145 P. 1029; Curtis v. Los Angeles, 172 Cal. 230, 156 P. 462; and In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180. The first of these cases was concerned with the use of a stone crusher, the second with stables, and the third with gas works. They are representative of the older group of decisions dealing with the power of a municipality to prohibit or regulate the conduct of businesses which are in the nature of public nuisances. To test the validity of zoning legislation by the strict language of some of the nuisance cases would be to ignore the change in both legislative and judicial views on this subject, a change which has been remarked upon by a number of authorities. See Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra; Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Company, supra; State v. Houghton, supra. It cannot be seriously contended that relative density of population in the permissive and restricted districts is a controlling test of the validity of a zoning plan, so far as the claim of discriminatory classification is concerned. The object of the present ordinance is to exclude hospitals for the treatment of insanity and nervous diseases from these districts which are devoted to residential purposes, because it is in such districts that they adversely affect the public welfare. This being so, it is immaterial whether the restricted district is densely or sparsely populated, if it is residential. The ordinance is concerned with the nature of the district. A growing residential area is as reasonable an object of protection as one which is fully built up. On the other hand, while the permitted districts include some territory which is densely populated, that territory is not residential in character. It is devoted to business purposes and hence requires none of the special regulation deemed desirable to foster and protect the development of homes and the maintenance of a proper environment for children. Moreover, the argument of plaintiffs, carried to its logical conclusion, would destroy the usefulness of zoning ordinances as an effective means of city planning, for it would require an examination of the regulation solely on the basis of present conditions. But zoning legislation looks to the future. It is a constructive movement in municipal legislation and, as such, it has received the approval of our courts. Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 388.

[9] An appellate court should not permit itself to be drawn into a minute examination of alleged discriminatory operation of such ordinances if, broadly considered, a reasonable basis of classification exists. Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra; Bettman, Constitutionality of Zoning, 37 Harv. L. Rev. 834, 850. Bearing in mind the object of the ordinance and the findings of the court, we are satisfied that no unconstitutional discrimination has been made.

[10] We have thus arrived at this conclusion: The ordinance in question, in so far as it prohibits the establishment of hospitals for the treatment of nervous diseases in certain districts in the city of Los Angeles, and permits their establishment in other specified districts, is valid. The businesses so restricted are proper subjects of such regulation, and hence the ordinance does not result in a denial of due process. The classification of districts is reasonable and not arbitrary, and therefore there is no denial of equal protection of the laws. This much is clear, we feel, with respect to the establishment of new businesses of this character in the prohibited districts. But does the same result necessarily follow with regard to existing businesses in these districts? In other words, does the broad view of the police power which justifies the taking away of the right to engage in such businesses in certain territory, also justify the destruction of existing businesses? We do not think that it does.

We have already emphasized the fact that courts, in their consideration of zoning legislation, have not deemed themselves bound by their prior decisions on the legislative regulation or prohibition of nuisances. They have recognized that the right to use private property may be restricted by an ordinance which follows a reasonable plan, even though the use is neither a nuisance per se, nor a menace to health, safety, or morals in the particular district from which it is excluded. It would seem, therefore, at first glance, that the zoning decisions reach the conclusion that businesses may be prohibited in the sense of being excluded from specified districts, although they do not come within any reasonable view of what constitutes a nuisance. An examination of those decisions, however, reveals the fact that nearly all of them deal with the attempt to establish businesses in the prohibited areas. They decide nothing more than this: The right to engage in a lawful and not dangerous business in a certain area may be taken away in pursuance of a reasonable zoning scheme. They do not decide that an established and not dangerous business, operating in a lawful manner in a certain territory, may be eradicated in pursuance of a reasonable zoning scheme. That problem, which is the important problem of this case, has, so far as we are aware, only been squarely presented to appellate courts in a few instances. The reason for the paucity of decisions is illuminating: Zoning laws have almost invariably been prospective in nature. Indeed, in some states, including Kansas, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois, Massachusetts, Maine, and New Hampshire, the enabling statutes which give the zoning power to municipalities, expressly provide that no retroactive ordinances shall be passed. See Baker, Legal Aspects of Zoning, p. 158, note 220.

As a matter of practice, also, those who have drafted ordinances have usually proceeded with due regard for valuable, vested property interests, and have permitted existing, nonconforming uses to remain. They are very generally agreed that the destruction of an existing nonconforming use would be a dangerous innovation of doubtful constitutionality, and that a retroactive provision might jeopardize the entire ordinance. "Zoning * * * holds that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure and that it is fairer to all concerned to prevent the establishment in residence districts of objectionable business than to drive them out once they were established. * * * Zoning looks to the future, not the past, and it is customary to allow buildings and businesses already in the district to remain, although of a class which cannot be established. If such a business constitutes a nuisance, it can still be removed under the police power, but the zoning acts in themselves do not customarily interfere with existing conditions." Chamberlain and Pierson, Zoning Laws and Ordinances, 10 Am. Bar Assn. J. 185. "Retroactive operation of the provisions of the ordinance is generally avoided. * * *" Bettman, Constitutionality of Zoning, 37 Harv. L. Rev. 834, 853. "Retroactive zoning is not to be recommended. * * *" Young, City Planning and Restrictions on the Use of Property, 9 Minn. L. Rev. 593, 628. "The purpose of zoning, which is said to be the crystallization of present conditions and the constructive control of future development, does not require that existing uses be changed. Hence it has been generally assumed that any attempt to make zoning ordinances retroactive would meet with the opposition of the courts and might result in their declaring the ordinance as a whole unconstitutional." Retroactive Zoning Ordinances, 39 Yale L. J. 735, 737. "Nonconforming uses may be required to be removed, but the majority of the cases seem to indicate that if this procedure is attempted the ordinance will be declared unconstitutional because unreasonable." Byrne, The Constitutionality of a General Zoning Ordinance, 11 Marquette L. Rev. 189, 214. See, also, Baker, supra, p. 145.

These same views have been expressed in a number of decisions. In Pelham View Apartments, Inc., v. Switzer, 130 Misc. Rep. 545, 224 N. Y. S. 56, 58, a building permit had been issued for the erection of an apartment house, and the petitioner had borrowed money, bought property, prepared plans, and begun construction, in reliance upon the permit. Thereafter, a new zoning law was enacted, under which such a permit could not be granted, and an attempt was made to revoke it. The court said: "While it is unfortunate that the erection of this apartment house may be distasteful to people living in the neighborhood, and while perhaps it is unfortunate that their property should be thus affected, yet the protection of such rights must be legally done, and the public officials representing the people cannot legally be permitted to change the zoning law, and cancel a permit previously issued under the original zoning act, where an innocent purchaser of real estate has in good faith acted upon such official action of the city, and has thereby acquired vested rights under his permit. * * * It would be nothing short of confiscation, and a complete disregard of constitutional rights, if a municipality could revoke a building permit issued under the conditions as presented in this case." See, also, People v. Stanton, 125 Misc. Rep. 215, 211 N. Y. S. 438.

In Atkinson v. Piper, 181 Wis. 519, 195 N. W. 544, retroactive legislation of this type was strongly disapproved, and the court construed the particular act as prospective in its operation, although the buildings in question were only in the process of construction. The Wisconsin court made a similar decision in the later case of Rosenberg v. Village of Whitefish Bay, 199 Wis. 214, 225 N. W. 838, where construction was not yet under way, but the owner of the land had incurred expenses in the preparation of plans for the structure.

In holding another statute not to be retroactive, the New Jersey court said in Frank J. Durkin Lumber Co. v. Fitzsimmons (Err. & App.) 147 A. 555, 558: "* * * May a municipality, without making compensation, estop an owner from continuing a use that is in actuality, that was begun and continued lawfully, and that becomes unlawful only because the municipality has so ordained? * * * Recognizing that the granting of a permit and the subsequent beginning of work thereunder do clothe the owner with certain rights against municipal interference, this court very recently, in two instances, refused a municipality the privilege of revoking a permit theretofore given. * * * It seems that a logical application of the same principle is to recognize the right to continue, as against subsequent zoning interference, a use that was actually instituted, that was lawful when instituted, and that has been actively and constantly maintained." (Italics ours.)

In Adams v. Kalamazoo Ice & Fuel Co., 245 Mich. 261, 222 N. W. 86, 87, the court said: "The ordinance excepts from its restrictive provisions, existing nonconforming uses, but even if it did not contain such an exception, we cannot hold its restrictions retroactive, though defendant, anticipating its enactment, purchased the property and placed its small distributing building thereon. Threatened invasion of a residence district by business may be an impelling reason for affording protection by way of a zoning ordinance, but such an ordinance may not operate to remove business found there." (Italics ours.)

In response to the charge that exemption of existing nonconforming uses would be discriminatory, the courts have very generally held the exemption to be valid and necessary. Baker, supra, p. 144. As the court said in City of Aurora v. Burns, 319 Ill. 84, 149 N. E. 784, 788: "The building zone ordinance * * * permits lawful uses of buildings at the time of the passage of the ordinance, although not in conformity with its provisions, to continue thereafter. This exception is made so that the ordinance shall not have a retroactive operation. It would be manifestly unjust to deprive the owner of property of the use to which it was lawfully devoted when the ordinance became effective." In Spector v. Building Inspector, 250 Mass. 63, 145 N. E. 265, 268, the same conclusion is reached: "To exempt buildings already devoted to a use from a prohibition of such use of other buildings or buildings thereafter erected in a specified area is not unequal but lawful." This court has also spoken to the same effect in Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, where it is said on page 512, 234 P. 388, 394: "As to the objection that the ordinance was not retrospective, but permitted the continuance of existing uses, it will suffice to say that for the purpose of zoning it is not necessary that existing uses shall be removed. * * * The ordinance was enacted with the purpose of directing the present and future development of the city and no attempt was made to remold its past development. To have required, preliminarily to an enactment for future development, that all past development, not in harmony therewith, should be removed, might be impractical. That the council did not attempt such a task has no tendency to show discrimination against property to be developed in the future." See, also, A. C. Blumenthal & Co., Inc., v. Cryer, 71 Cal. App. 668, 236 P. 216.

It therefore appears that the instant case involves a situation materially different from that presented in the usual zoning case. The exercise of power in this instance is, on the whole, far more drastic than in those in which a mere right to engage in a particular business is restricted. We are asked to uphold a municipal ordinance which destroys valuable businesses, built up over a period of years. If we do so on the ground that this is a proper exercise of the police power in the enactment of zoning legislation, then it follows that the same thing may be done to apartment houses, flats, or stores. The establishment of many lawful and not dangerous businesses in a city would then become an extremely hazardous undertaking. At any time, in pursuance of a reasonable plan for its future development, the city could prohibit the continuance of the businesses, and make property valueless which was previously constructed and devoted to a useful purpose. It may well be that in the course of years one of the outlying permitted districts in the present scheme will become residential in character, and will, by another ordinance, be placed in the prohibited area. If the plaintiffs, at great expense, reestablish themselves in that district, they might be pursued and again eradicated. All this is to be justified under the police power as a proper taking of private property for public use, without compensation. The approval of such a doctrine would be a blow to rights in private property such as this court has never before witnessed. Only a paramount and compelling public necessity could sanction so extraordinary an interference with useful business.

What is the public necessity here? We have considered the ordinance solely as modern zoning legislation, for such is undoubtedly its character. There is, it is true, testimony in the record to show that the district was in some respects a less agreeable residential section than it would be if the businesses of plaintiffs were removed. Neighbors complained that the presence of the sanitariums depreciated the value of their own property. There is similar testimony as to occasional noises made by unruly patients, and of several patients having escaped; although in this connection the trial court found that "none of the inmates of any of said four sanitariums * * * has ever injured in any manner whatsoever any of the inhabitants of said Mar Vista District or elsewhere, nor has any of said inmates ever attacked or attempted to do bodily injury unto any of said inhabitants."

[11, 12] From the evidence the court found that the conduct and operation of plaintiffs' businesses will tend to and does "impair and endanger the health, safety, morals, convenience, comfort and welfare of the public, and will prevent the said district from obtaining its proper growth and from fully developing into the residential district to which it is devoted." Another finding is that "it is not true that said sanitarium * * * will not create, and is not a nuisance." Assuming that the above statements are intended as a finding that the sanitariums of plaintiffs are nuisances as now conducted, it hardly seems supported by the record. For a discussion of similar evidence, see Jardine v. Pasadena, 199 Cal. 64, 75, 248 P. 225, 48 A. L. R. 509. But even such a finding does not go to the root of the matter, and is, so far as the validity of this ordinance is concerned, wholly immaterial. The individual, or the city, still has the right to enjoin acts which constitute a private or public nuisance and this right is given as a protection against the improper conduct of any lawful business. Jardine v. Pasadena, supra; Adams v. Kalamazoo Ice & Fuel Co., 245 Mich. 261, 222 N. W. 86. This ordinance expressly applies to any hospitals, asylums, and sanitariums for the care or treatment of persons suffering from "mental or nervous diseases." It affects all such places in the same manner, irrespective of whether they are conducted properly or improperly. The question of its constitutional validity must therefore be considered apart from the particular conditions alleged to exist in the establishments maintained by plaintiffs.

[13] As so considered, we are satisfied that it cannot find support in the legislative power to prohibit nuisances. A properly conducted sanitarium for the care and treatment of persons affected with "mental or nervous diseases" cannot, we feel, be held to constitute a nuisance. Mr. Justice Olney said in San Diego Tuberculosis Ass'n v. East San Diego, 186 Cal. 252, 254, 200 P. 393, 394, 17 A. L. R.

[14] We repeat, therefore, that the ordinance involved herein is to be supported upon principles of zoning and not as a prohibition directed against actual nuisances. With this conclusion as a basis, it becomes necessary to determine whether that part of the ordinance which prohibits the further operation or maintenance of plaintiffs' businesses is a reasonable means by which the zoning power may be exercised. And here the distinction between the power to prohibit nuisances and the power to zone is exceedingly important. The power over nuisances is more circumscribed in its objects; but once an undoubted menace to public health, safety, or morals is shown, the method of protection may be drastic. Private businesses may be wholly prohibited, where their danger is sufficiently great; and other businesses, no matter how well established and how great the resulting loss, may be excluded from certain districts where, by reason of the circumstances, their maintenance has become a public nuisance in those districts. In these cases, the public welfare demands even the destruction of existing property interests. Examples of decisions of this type are Ex parte Quong Wo, 161 Cal. 220, 118 P. 714, involving a laundry, and Hadacheck v. Sebastian, 239 U. S. 394, 36 S. Ct. 143, 60 L. Ed. 348, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 927, involving a brick yard. While the latter case is an extreme illustration of the hardship which may result from an exercise of police power, it can be justified on the ground of nuisance regulation. It is not a zoning case at all. See 39 Yale L. J. 735, 738, note 19.

[15] Zoning is not so limited in its purposes. It may take into consideration factors which bear no relation to the public health, safety, or morals, but which come within the meaning of the broader term "general welfare." It deals with many uses of property which are in no way harmful. If its objects are so much broader than those of nuisance regulation, if its invasion of private property interests is more extensive, and if the public necessity to justify its exercise need not be so pressing, then does it not follow that its means of regulation must be more reasonable and less destructive of established interests? Must we say that the property of some of the residents of a district can be taken from them, without compensation, in order to make more attractive and pleasant the lives of other residents? "This background of nuisance law in the development of zoning occasionally leads to erroneous results. Property regulation by means of zoning is not restricted to what is disorderly or offensive * * * in attempting to apply to all types of zoning ordinances the summary methods of prevention and suppression which are employed in the case of nuisances, municipalities obviously fail to take into account the fact that zoning not only includes but also supplements nuisance regulation. A restriction imposed to prohibit an offensive use is not a taking of property for which compensation must be made and in the abatement of nuisances retroactive measures are valid. Granting that a zoning ordinance may operate retroactively where there is clearly an element of nuisance, it does not follow that a similar disposition may be made of every type of non-conforming use dealt with in zoning." 39 Yale L. J. 738. "No one gainsays that a municipal government within its police power has the right to prescribe rules regulating the character of buildings to be erected and the material to be used within certain prescribed boundaries. * * * But such ordinances must * * * relate to the future. Of course, that does not prevent cities from moving to abate nuisances whenever occurring." Brown v. Grant (Tex. Civ. App.) 2 S.W.(2d) 285, 287.

Seemingly in opposition to these widely held views is the conclusion reached by the Supreme Court of Louisiana, with respect to an ordinance of the city of New Orleans which prohibited the establishment or maintenance of any business within a specified district, and provided that all businesses then in operation in the district should be liquidated in one year. In State v. McDonald, 168 La. 172, 121 So. 613, and in State v. Jacoby, 168 La. 752, 123 So. 314, the ordinance was held valid as applied to businesses in operation prior to its passage, which had failed to liquidate within the prescribed period. An examination of the language of the opinions indicates that the court did not consider the general question of the validity of retroactive zoning laws, but was concerned with the particular situation before it, and saw no material injury to the owner of the property. In the first case (State v. McDonald, supra, at page 616 of 121 So.), the court said: "In the instant case there is nothing * * * in the record on which the court would be authorized or justified in declaring the attacked provision of the ordinance harsh, arbitrary, or unreasonable. * * * For all that appears, the business may be a small retail grocery business located in an outlying section far removed from the business center of the city. The defendants have not shown, and the court is unable to conjecture, any substantial reason why such a business could not be liquidated and closed out within a year." In the second case, State v. Jacoby, supra, at page 317 of 123 So., the objection of the owner was disposed of in the same manner: "Defendant's drug store is a small one, and it is obvious that one year affords ample time within which to liquidate the business and close it."

These decisions are, we think, distinguishable from the instant case; but even if they were not distinguishable, we should not be disposed to follow them, for they exhibit, in our opinion, a confusion between the objects of zoning and nuisance regulation. See 39 Yale L. J. 738.

A more drastic decision, perhaps, is Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U. S. 365, 47 S. Ct. 114, 71 L. Ed. 303, 54 A. L. R. 1016, already mentioned in this opinion. There the ordinance created a residential district which included a large tract of land owned by the Ambler Realty Company, which had been held vacant for industrial purposes. The effect of the restrictive provisions of the ordinance was materially to impair the market value of the land. Although the lower federal court was of the opinion that this was an unreasonable interference with private property, the Supreme Court of the United States finally upheld it, three justices dissenting. This is an extreme case, and has been recognized as such by zoning authorities. Thus, Baker says (page 144): "The ordinance involved in this case does not seem to be a reasonable application of the zoning principle, and the result is a distinct surprise." However harsh be the result of this decision, it is nevertheless in no sense decisive of the instant case, for it did not involve a retroactive ordinance. The Supreme Court recognized the difficulty that would be encountered in laying down a test of the validity of a restriction based solely upon the value of the property interest affected, yet in the subsequent case of Nectow v. Cambridge, 277 U. S. 183, 48 S. Ct. 447, 72 L. Ed. 842, it was held that a similar restriction involving a "serious and highly injurious" invasion of property was, under the particular circumstances, unreasonable. No general test can be derived from these or other cases, all of which reiterate the well-worn doctrine that each one must be decided on its particular facts. See Mayor of Wilmington v. Turk, 14 Del. Ch. 392, 129 A. 512. But we think that there is a decided difference between an ordinance which operates to limit the future use of property, no matter how great the impairment of its value, and one which requires the discontinuance of an existing use. In the first situation, we see merely the familiar example of an intangible and speculative future value being reduced as a result of the necessities of city planning; in the second we see the destruction of a going business. This latter action, if sanctioned by law, may have a serious and damaging effect on private enterprise generally, in addition to its manifest injury to the persons whose businesses are prohibited.

We do not mean to hold that those engaged in the zoning of cities must always be faced with the impossibility of eradicating the nonconforming uses. In some jurisdictions this problem has been dealt with by provisions against alteration or enlargement of existing structures, or rebuilding after their destruction. See State v. Hillman, 110 Conn. 92, 147 A. 294; Appeal of Ward, 289 Pa. 458, 137 A. 630; City of Earle v. Shackleford, 177 Ark. 291, 6 S.W.(2d) 294. But ordinarily the added benefit to the majority of the residents of the restricted district should not be received at the expense of others. If the city desires to abolish the nonconforming use, this may be a legitimate object of the police power, but the means of its exercise must not include the destruction of the property interest without compensation. The words of Mr. Justice Holmes in Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U. S. 393, 413, 43 S. Ct. 158, 159, 67 L. Ed. 322, 28 A. L. R. 1321, are very much in point:

> "As applied to this case the statute is admitted to destroy previously existing rights of property and contract. The question is whether the police power can be stretched so far.
> "Government hardly could go on if to some extent values incident to property could not be diminished without paying for every such change in the general law. As long recognized some values are enjoyed under an implied limitation and must yield to the police power. But obviously the implied limitation must have its limits or the contract and due process clauses are gone. One fact for consideration in determining such limits is the extent of the diminution. When it reaches a certain magnitude, in most if not all cases there must be an exercise of eminent domain and compensation to sustain the act. So the question depends upon the particular facts. The greatest weight is given to the judgment of the legislature but it always is open to interested parties to contend that the legislature has gone beyond its constitutional power."

Further on, the learned justice remarks: "The general rule at least is that while property may be regulated to a certain extent, if regulation goes too far it will be recognized as a taking. * * * In general it is not plain that a man's misfortunes or necessities will justify his shifting the damages to his neighbor's shoulders. * * * We are in danger of forgetting that a strong public desire to improve the public condition is not enough to warrant achieving the desire by a shorter cut than the constitutional way of paying for the change."

The principles set forth in the Pennsylvania Coal Company Case were approved in Piper v. Ekern, 180 Wis. 586, 194 N. W. 159, 162, 34 A. L. R. 32, where a statute limiting the height of buildings surrounding the state capitol was held unconstitutional. The court said: "* * * In one sense such a restriction under the police power does not transfer property from the private owner to the public, as is the case where the power of eminent domain is exercised; nevertheless such restriction may be of such a nature as to practically accomplish the same result. * * * It has also been held that any regulation which deprives any person of the profitable use of his property constitutes a taking of property and entitles him under the Constitution to compensation, unless the invasion of rights is so slight as to permit the regulation to be justified under the police power. * * *" See, also, Isenbarth v. Bartnett, 206 App. Div. 546, 201 N. Y. S. 383.

Even where the destruction of private property is warranted by vital public necessity, it is sometimes the legislative practice to compensate the injured owner. Such, for example, was the case with our legislation directed toward the eradication of bovine tuberculosis by the destruction of diseased cattle. See Patrick v. Riley (Cal. Sup.) 287 P. 455.

[16, 17] Our conclusion is that where, as here, a retroactive ordinance causes substantial injury and the prohibited business is not a nuisance, the ordinance is to that extent an unreasonable and unjustifiable exercise of police power. Whether, under our present law, there exists the power to eliminate the nonconforming use by payment of compensation for the loss suffered, is a question not presented by this case, and one which we therefore do not attempt to determine.

It follows that the present ordinance is valid in so far as it prohibits the further establishment of businesses of this type in the restricted districts; and is invalid in its application to these plaintiffs.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

CARPENTER v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

S. F. 14029.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 12, 1931.

1. Attorney and client ⚷36(1).

Power to suspend attorney for nonpayment of membership fees in state bar is in court and not in board of governors (St. 1927, pp. 44, 45, §§ 46, 47).

St. 1927, pp. 44, 45, §§ 46, 47, provides that member of state bar failing to pay fees after written notice of delinquency must be suspended from membership, and that no person shall practice law unless he be an active member of the state bar.

2. Attorney and client ⚷32.

Board of governors of state bar may impose reasonable expenses of enforcing State Bar Act upon members in form of fees or dues (St. 1927, p. 38).

3. Attorney and client ⚷32.

State Bar Act is not subject to criticism as conferring unregulated discretion respecting fees and penalties on executive body (St. 1927, p. 38).

The statute limits membership fees to not exceeding $10, and provides that no penalty can exceed double the amount of the delinquent dues.

In Bank.

Original proceeding by A. H. Carpenter against the State Bar of California to review action of the Board of Governors of the State Bar in suspending applicant from practice of law.

Petitioner suspended.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, in pro per.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

Proceeding to review the action of the board of governors of the state bar.

Petitioner, on December 17, 1927, at the time the State Bar Act went into effect, was a licensed attorney authorized to practice in the courts of this state. He paid his membership dues as prescribed in said act for a time. However, on November 22, 1929, the board of governors increased the annual dues from $5 to $7.50 and at about the same time imposed a penalty for delinquency in this payment of $3.

Petitioner paid neither the dues nor the penalty for the year 1930. The two months' notice prescribed by section 46 of the act was regularly given, and following the expiration of this period, on June 20, 1930, the board of governors took action purporting to suspend petitioner from membership in the state bar.

The section of the State Bar Act (Stats. 1927, pp. 38, 44, 45) involved, so far as here material, is as follows: "Sec. 46. Any member * * * failing to pay any fees * * * and after two months written notice of his delinquency, must be suspended from membership in the state bar. * * *" This section is followed by section 47, which reads: "No person shall practice law in this state subsequent to the first meeting of the state bar unless he shall be an active member thereof as hereinbefore defined."

[1] It is clear, therefore, that the sum total or aggregate effect of these provisions is to suspend the right of petitioner to practice law, which suspension will terminate only upon his compliance with the law. It is to be noted, however, that the act does not in so many words say that the board of governors shall make the order of suspension from membership. It occurs to us that, as this really amounts to suspension from the right to practice law, and further that, inasmuch as an attorney is an officer of the court, it would seem to have been the legislative intent that his suspension should be made by an order of this court, and that the action of the board of governors in the matter should be treated as a finding of fact and recommendation that this court make such order. This, too, is in consonance wiith our holdings in matters of admission and discipline of attorneys. In re Shattuck, 208 Cal. 6, 9–12, 279 P. 998; Brydonjack v. State Bar, 208 Cal. 439, 443, 281 P. 1018, 66 A. L. R. 1507. It also avoids a discussion of the contention that it is in effect the conferring of judicial authority upon a tribunal other than a court. See Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965.

[2] It is true that petitioner disclaims liability and denies the power of the board of governors to fix or collect membership dues or assess penalties, but he offers no argument or authority germane to the subject. The validity of the State Bar Act as a regulatory measure under the police power has been repeatedly upheld by this court. When that fact is conceded, it follows as a matter of course that the reasonable expenses necessary to pay the costs of enforcement of the act, in furtherance of the purposes thereof, may be imposed upon the membership in the form of fees or dues. Shaffer v. Beinhorn, 190 Cal. 569, 213 P. 960; Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 593, 185 P. 855, 9 A. L. R. 418; Goer v. Taylor, 51 N. D. 792, 200 N. W. 898.

[3] The act is not open to the criticism that an unregulated discretion is conferred upon an executive body. The act provides that the membership fee above mentioned may be increased by the board of governors to an amount not to exceed $10. It also provides that no penalty can exceed double the amount of the delinquent dues. Thus it seems that the discretion of the board of governors is strictly controlled by the act, apparently drafted especially to obviate this criticism. Ex parte McManus, 151 Cal. 331, 90 P. 702; Riley v. Chambers, supra; Tarpey v. McClure, 190 Cal. 593, 213 P. 983; Dominguez Land Corp. v. Daugherty, 196 Cal. 468, 238 P. 703.

It appearing from the action of the board of governors of the state bar that a membership fee of $7.50 and a penalty for delinquency of $3 have been regularly imposed upon petitioner, and that two months' notice of such delinquency has been regularly given, and that such delinquency still obtains, and that the effect of such delinquency is to deprive petitioner during the continuance thereof of the right to practice law, it is, therefore, ordered that the petitioner, A. H. Carpenter, be, and he is hereby, suspended from the practice of the law in this state until such time as he may be reinstated upon the payment of said delinquent membership fee and penalty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Grace Gillanders and husband against Manuel da Silva, etc., and others. Judgment for defendant Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited, plaintiffs' motion to set aside such judgment was granted, and judgment was rendered for plaintiffs, and defendant insurance company appeals.

Modified and affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wesley W. Kergan and Alfred B. Weiler, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J.

This is an appeal from an order made after judgment pursuant to section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure and from the judgment which followed that order. The plaintiffs are husband and wife.

The action is one to reform a liability indemnity insurance policy issued by the defendant insurance company and to recover on said policy when so reformed.

On March 11, 1924, and while said policy was in effect, the plaintiff, Grace Gillanders, was struck and injured by an automobile operated as a jitney bus by the defendant da Silva in the city of Oakland. In a prior action said plaintiff recovered a judgment against da Silva in the sum of $5,116.30 and costs. That judgment being unpaid, this action was commenced. The defense of the insurance company was and is that the policy issued by it did not cover the automobile operated by da Silva at the time of the accident.

It appears from the findings of the court that on April 6, 1915, the commissioners of the city of Oakland passed an ordinance providing for the regulation of the business of operating automobiles for hire within the city. This ordinance was amended on January 13, 1916, is commonly called the jitney bus ordinance, and the same was in effect at all times involved in this controversy. Section 3 provides that before operating any automobile for hire in said city the owner or lessee thereof should apply for and obtain annually a license so to do from the city council, and the operator of such automobile should obtain a permit as therein provided; that the applicant for the license should state under oath (a) the route proposed to be followed; (b) the price to be charged; (c) the schedule to be observed; (d) the transfer points; (e) the type of motor vehicle and the name of the manufacturer or the popular name thereof; (f) the horse power, factory number, and state license number; (g) the seating capacity of the motor vehicle; and (h) the name, age, residence, and business address of the applicant. Said section further provides that the license after investigation should be granted unless it should appear (a) that the bond or insurance policy elsewhere required by the ordinance had not been furnished and approved "or the same is insufficient in form or substance to properly safeguard the public interest and safety," and (b) that the applicant has not complied with all of the terms and conditions of the ordinance. Section 8 provides that a license once issued might be transferred to another qualified person upon application to and approval by the chief of police.

Section 18 of the ordinance provides that, in order to insure the safety of the public, it shall be unlawful for any person to operate an automobile for hire or to obtain a license therefor unless he shall obtain and keep on file in the office of the city clerk either (a) a bond, or (b) a policy of insurance in an authorized company insuring the owner or lessee of said automobile against any loss or damage that may result to any person from the operation of the automobile, said policy to be in limits of $5,000 for each person injured, etc. The ordinance contains the usual penal clause.

The findings further show that on March 10, 1924, the defendant da Silva was duly licensed under said ordinance to drive a 1917 Haynes touring automobile for hire, factory No. 26,182; that prior to February 26, 1924, one Guidotti was a duly licensed jitney bus operator having a route on Seventh street in said city and operating a Haynes automobile; that the defendant da Silva applied to the city in writing for permission to acquire the license of Guidotti to operate on Seventh street and that prior to and on March 11, 1924 (the date of the accident), the defendant da Silva was duly licensed to operate the Haynes automobile as a jitney bus on the Guidotti route on Seventh street; that during the months of February and March, 1924, the firm of Spengler & Fraser were insurance brokers in said city, and during that time placed with insurance companies all of the applications of jitney bus drivers on Seventh street; that on March 1, 1924, that firm applied to the defendant insurance company to issue its policy of insurance to da Silva covering the operations of a 1919 Oldsmobile theretofore operated by Guidotti on said route and the policy was issued to da Silva covering said Oldsmobile; that it was not, as alleged by the plaintiff, through the mistake of the scrivener of the defendant insurance company that the policy described the Oldsmobile instead of the Haynes automobile, and it was not until March 24, 1924, that the mistake in the description of the automobile was discovered, at which time the defendant issued its policy correcting the name of the automobile operated by the defendant da Silva; that the defendant insurance company, during the months of February and March, 1924, had agreed to write and did write all of the insurance policies covering jitney buses on the Seventh street route for the purpose of complying with said jitney bus ordinance, and that the original and corrected policies above described and issued by the defendant insurance company were two of the sixteen bus policies written by the defendant insurance company pursuant to said agreement; that Spengler & Fraser in so applying for and the defendant insurance company in issuing said policies did so in order to comply with said jitney bus ordinance, and that Spengler & Fraser were not the agents of the defendant insurance company.

On the foregoing and other findings not material to this discussion, the court concluded that the plaintiffs take nothing, and that the defendant insurance company have judgment for its costs, and judgment was entered accordingly. Thereafter, as authorized by section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiffs moved to vacate and set aside the judgment and to enter a judgment in their favor on the ground that the findings of fact do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment. This motion was granted, and judgment was thereupon entered reforming the insurance policy issued on March 1, 1924, so as to describe the 1917 Haynes automobile in the place and stead of the Oldsmobile, and further adjudging that the plaintiffs recover the sum of $5,000 against the defendant insurance company with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from January 30, 1925 (the date of the entry of the prior judgment in the personal injury action), "said principal and interest amounting to the sum of $6,341, and interest upon said sum of $6,341 from the date hereof" until paid, with costs. The defendant insurance company appealed from the order and from the judgment.

[1] The appeal from the order will first be passed upon. The complaint alleged the issuance by the defendant insurance company to da Silva on March 1, 1924, of a policy covering the operations of a Haynes automobile. This allegation the court found to be untrue and found that said policy of March 1, 1924, was issued to da Silva to cover the operation of an Oldsmobile. The accident occurred on March 11, 1924, while the policy was in effect. It was alleged in the complaint "that through the mistake of the scrivener employed by said insurance company to write said policy, the policy described a 1919 Oldsmobile touring automobile No. 2122, instead of said Haynes automobile." This allegation was found to be untrue, and it is the only finding upon the subject of mistake. We conclude that the findings as they now stand are deficient in some respects and are insufficient to support the judgment entered pursuant to the motion under said section 663, and the order granting said motion should be, and it is hereby, reversed.

The foregoing determination does not necessarily result in a right in the appellant to have a judgment directed in its favor, for we now have to consider the appeal from the judgment. It is alleged in the complaint that da Silva in applying for the policy of March 1, 1924, and the defendant insurance company, in issuing the same, did so in order to comply with the requirements of the jitney bus ordinance of the city of Oakland. This allegation was denied in the answer of the insurance company, but the court found that the allegation was true. The record supports this finding. The evidence in support thereof, so far as the insurance company is concerned, is found in the testimony of the company's division manager who testified that he was approached by Mr. Johnson of Spengler & Fraser, who were acting on behalf of all of the jitney bus operators on Seventh street; that he was requested to write up policies covering jitney bus operations on Seventh street "and we agreed to write the whole line." The insurance company then proceeded to carry out this agreement and in doing so wrote sixteen policies, among them the one to da Silva. In doing so the insurance company must be held to have intended that the policies it should write would be as required by the ordinance of the city enacted in behalf of the patrons of jitney buses and pedestrians on the streets of the city. The public was the real beneficiary of the municipal legislation, and all of those participating in a compliance with the law on behalf of the public were charged with the responsibility of seeing that it was not set at naught because of errors which by the exercise of reasonable diligence would not have occurred.

[2] The record shows that on December 7, 1922, Guidotti applied to the city council for a permit to operate a jitney bus on Seventh street. In this application he specified a Haynes automobile as the type of car he intended to use. The permit was granted. Later on da Silva bought his route and applied to the city council for approval of a transfer of Guidotti's license to himself. On February 13, 1924, da Silva filed his application with the city council requesting a permit to operate a Haynes automobile as a jitney bus on Seventh street. On February 26, 1924, the consent of the city council to the transfer of Guidotti's interest to da Silva was entered in the minutes of the council. On March 1, 1924, the insurance policy in question was issued, stating, among other things, that it was issued "in accordance with the provisions of the jitney bus ordinance * * * of the city of Oakland." It could not have been so issued unless it covered the operations of the Haynes automobile described in the application of da Silva and the orders of the city council made pursuant thereto, which were matters of public record and available to the insurance company in its efforts to cover the jitney buses operating on Seventh street. The allegations of the complaint are broad enough and the proof in support thereof is sufficient upon which to base a finding that it was the intention of both the insurance company and of da Silva to have the policy of March 1, 1924, cover the Haynes automobile, otherwise the entire purpose of the city legislation and of the jitney bus operators, and of the insurance company as well, would have been frustrated to the detriment of the public on whose behalf the entire plan was established. Through a mistake attributable in part to the insurance company and for which it cannot be relieved of responsibility, the jitney bus of da Silva was described as an Oldsmobile, not owned or intended to be operated by him, instead of a Haynes car described in the public proceedings necessary to effectuate the purpose of the ordinance. This mistake was therefore of such a character as to constitute a mutual mistake as is contemplated by section 3399 of the Civil Code. Under the authority granted this court by the Constitution and section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is now found to be a fact that such a mistake occurred, and as a conclusion of law it follows that the policy should be reformed so as to cover the Haynes automobile intended to be covered thereby.

[3] We are not impressed by the argument that the type of the car in this particular instance was a material consideration in the issuance of the policy. This is not a case merely between private parties where a material misrepresentation as to the year of manufacture and the type of car would avoid the policy, such as was the case in Solomon v. Federal Ins. Co., 176 Cal. 133, 167 P. 859. Rather it is a case where the year and type would be of no consequence to those for whose benefit the policy was issued, namely, the public. It would be immaterial, we take it, whether a passenger on the jitney bus or a pedestrian were injured by an Oldsmobile or a Haynes car. The rate of insurance is not shown to be different one from the other, and the insurance company received the premium of $180 on the policy issued. Furthermore, this company issued a policy on the Haynes automobile on March 24, 1924, at the same premium. There is no showing that the company would not have issued the policy if the automobile had been described as intended by all parties.

[4] The insurance company makes the further point that the form of the judgment results in a compounding of interest on the original judgment in favor of the plaintiff. This contention is well taken. The interest on the original judgment was computed at the legal rate from its entry on January 30, 1925, to the date of the judgment in the present action. The sum of the principal and interest was $6,341, and judgment herein was rendered for that sum with interest thereon until payment or satisfaction of the judgment. Obviously this was an allowance of interest on interest for which there appears to be no authority in law in such a case.

With the foregoing additional finding now made by this court the judgment of reformation rendered by the trial court is supported by the findings and the conclusions of law drawn therefrom.

The judgment is modified by striking from the third paragraph thereof the following language: "Said principal and interest amounting to the sum of $6,341, and interest upon said sum of $6,341 from the date hereof."

As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

CARTER et al. v. STEVENS, State Fire Marshal, et al.

LEWIS et al. v. SAME.

L. A. 11958.

Supreme Court of California.

Dec. 31, 1930.

1. Appeal and error 🔑781(1).

Attack on statute amended before decision is moot unless portions of act continued in the amended act remain vulnerable to attack made (St. 1927, p. 1924, as amended by St. 1929, p. 288).

2. Licenses 🔑5.

Regulation of clothes cleaning establishments in use of which volatile and inflammable substances and heat, steam, and hot water are used is within state's police power.

3. Statutes 🔑188.

Words of statute must be given meaning germane to subject-matter and consistent with rational deductions, rather than meaning that would create absurdity.

4. Constitutional law 🔑62.

Statute regarding licensing of clothes cleaning establishments held not to confer unlimited or arbitrary powers on state officials (St. 1927, p. 1926, § 2, subd. f, as amended by St. 1929, pp. 291, 292, § 3).

> St. 1927, p. 1926, § 2, subd. f, as amended by St. 1929, pp. 291, 292, § 3, requires application for license to be made to the department of industrial relations, and provides that the department or its duly authorized representative shall make thorough investigation into fitness of applicant to conduct such establishment, and that if investigation reveals that the establishment or its plans, specifications, or premises, or the character or ability of the applicant to conduct the establishment are not in compliance with law or in any manner jeopardizes the public welfare, or in the opinion of the department or its representatives makes such establishment a menace to the public welfare and safety, the department may deny a permit or license.

It is not to be presumed that department of industrial relations will exceed its authority in making rules under statute regulating clothes cleaning establishments (St. 1927, p. 1928, § 3, as amended by St. 1929, p. 293, § 4).

> St. 1927, p. 1928, § 3, as amended by St. 1929, p. 293, § 4, provides that department of industrial relations shall have power and authority to prescribe rules, regulations, and specifications governing construction, equipment, maintenance, and operation of clothes cleaning establishments deemed necessary to protect life and property against fire menace.

6. Licenses 🔑7(1).

Statute regulating clothes cleaning establishments is not unconstitutional as failing to set up definite standard or test by which delegated power is to be exercised or as conferring arbitrary power or judicial or legislative powers on enforcement agency (St. 1927, p. 1924, as amended by St. 1929, p. 288; Const. art. 3, § 1, and art. 4, § 1).

7. Licenses 🔑22.

Department of industrial relations may not arbitrarily deny license or permit for clothes cleaning establishment, and, if it should, courts may correct the wrong (St. 1929, p. 288).

8. Evidence 🔑83(1).

It is not to be presumed that department of industrial relations will deny license or permit for clothes cleaning establishment without good cause (St. 1929, p. 288).

9. Constitutional law 🔑296(1).
Licenses 🔑7(1).

Statute regulating clothes cleaning establishments does not violate due process clauses of state or federal constitutions (St. 1929, p. 288).

10. Appeal and error 🔑781(1).

Validity of rules promulgated under original act regulating clothes cleaning establishments held rendered moot by amendatory act (St. 1927, p. 1924, as amended by St. 1929, p. 288).

> So much of the substance of the rules adopted under the original act as was deemed necessary to effectuate the object of the act was written into the amended statute, and no attempt was made thereafter to enforce the rules adopted under the original act.

SEAWELL, J.

In 1927 the Legislature adopted an act effective August 2, 1927, entitled "An act to reduce the fire insurance hazards of the business of clothes cleaning establishments, providing for the enforcement thereof by the state fire marshal, providing ways and means for enforcement and providing penalties for violations." Stats. and Amdts. 1927, p. 1924. The insertion of the italicized word insurance was clearly an inadvertence and must be disregarded. The intent of the title is in nowise affected by so doing.

In 1929 the Legislature adopted an act effective August 14, 1929, to amend the title (republishing the same in full) and sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of said 1927 act "and to add two new sections thereto to be known as section 5, relating to hazardous buildings and equipment, and section 6, creating a division of industrial fire safety in the department of industrial relations, and transferring to said division the administration and enforcement of said act." Stats. and Amdts. 1929, p. 288.

On January 13, 1928, Jose D. Carter, proprietor of a cleaning and dyeing plant known as The Poppy, located in the city of Pasadena, and a number of other persons, corporations and firms engaged in the business of operating and conducting dyeing and clothes cleaning, feather cleaning, and fabric cleaning plants located within the city of Los Angeles and other cities within Los Angeles county, united in an action to enjoin Jay W. Stevens, as fire marshal of the state, and his assistants and deputies from enforcing certain rules promulgated by him by virtue of the provisions of said 1927 act, which they threatened to do, against appellants herein, on account of their refusal to comply with the same.

The original act, doubtless, was revised by the Legislature of 1929 with the object in mind of avoiding the objections which were urged against it upon the hearing of the cause in the court below. Certain sections of the original act remain intact, four were amended and two new sections were added.

[1] The complaint herein was filed January 13, 1928, and the decree was entered July 13, 1929, approximately one month prior to the day on which the amended act of 1929 became effective, if valid. This being so, the original act, which is under attack by appellants, has long since become dead and the questions now raised would be moot unless some of the sections of the original act or some portions of them which were continued in the act as amended remain vulnerable to the assault as then and there made. We must consider the objections made by the appellants with reference to the act as it now exists and not as to what it once was.

The trial court upheld the constitutionality of said 1927 act, including that portion which delegated to the state fire marshal authority to determine the conditions upon which persons may engage in the business of conducting and operating clothes cleaning and dyeing establishments. It enjoined the threatened enforcement of the rules promulgated by the state fire marshal against certain of the appellants and interveners, on the ground that as applied to them the requirements of said rules were oppressive and burdensome and entailed unreasonable and unnecessary expense to them. An additional reason assigned for granting the injunction was that the system and apparatus used in said certain plants were reasonably safe from fire hazard. Others were granted injunctive relief on the ground that their plants were constructed and operated in accordance with the ordinances of the cities within which they were located.

Certain proprietors of said dyeing and cleaning establishments, being dissatisfied with anything less than a decree invalidating substantially the entire act, including the portions which are reincorporated in the 1929 act, have appealed from the whole of the judgment.

Said act as it now exists and has existed since August 14, 1929 (St. 1927, p. 1924, § 1, as amended by St. 1929, p. 288, § 2), defines the term "clothes cleaning establishment" as any building, room, etc., in which the business or process of cleaning, dyeing or renovating clothes, wearing apparel, feathers or any fabrics or textiles, or hats is conducted or carried on, and where the process of such cleaning, dyeing or renovating is accomplished by the use of any volatile and inflammable product or substance, and where any liquid volatile and inflammable product or substance in an amount exceeding one gallon in the aggregate of all such volatile and inflammable products is kept or stored, or where any viscous or other compound, powder or solid volatile and inflammable product or substance in the aggregate amount of more than eight pounds is kept or stored. The act then proceeds to define and describe the various processes of cleaning and dyeing and the machinery and appliances used in clothes cleaning establishments. A better understanding of the hazards of the business may be had from a description of the uses and purposes of the "hazardous room." It is defined as a room wherein any volatile or inflammable product is kept or stored; or wherein any volatile or inflammable product is distilled, redistilled, filtered, clarified, etc., or wherein any still, filter, clarifier, extractor, washer, or tumbler is installed; or wherein any dust wheel is installed and the same is used for drying or deodorizing purposes following the operation of cleaning or dyeing; or wherein any clothes, wearing apparel, feathers, hats, fabrics, or textiles are dried or the odor removed therefrom after having been cleaned or dried by a cleaning process as in said act defined. A boiler room is defined as a room wherein is maintained or operated any appliances, machinery, or apparatus for the generation of steam or the heating of water where the American Society of Mechanical Engineers or other standard rating of such appliances or apparatus indicates a capacity thereof in excess of three horse power or more in one unit. Volatile and inflammable products are defined as any liquid, viscous or other compound, powder, or solid product or substance having the capacity to evaporate and during such evaporation generate and emit a gas or vapor propagative of flame or fire, or explosive in nature or explosive incident to evaporation.

The term "approved," where used in said act, means the authoritative sanction of the department of industrial relations prior to employment, installation, or use in or about a "clothes cleaning establishment" or a spotting and sponging establishment.

Section 2 of said act (St. 1927, p. 1926, § 2, as amended by St. 1929, p. 290, § 3) provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, etc., to establish, maintain, and operate a clothes cleaning establishment or to alter or reconstruct an establishment either as to buildings, machinery, or other equipment or apparatus, or to cleanse any clothing, wearing apparel, feathers, hats, fabrics, or textiles by means of a process defined as "cleaning"; or to keep or store therein or upon the premises wherein such cleaning process is operated any volatile and inflammable product as in said act defined, in any structure or in any manner other than approved by the state fire marshal, or without first making application to and obtaining from the state fire marshal of the state a license so to do. Every such permit or license shall contain the name of the person, corporation, copartnership, or association applying therefor and the name of the establishment and shall state the location of the establishment and the proprietors thereof, the maximum amount of volatile and inflammable product that is to be or may be stored in or upon said premises and the exact location of the tanks in which any volatile and inflammable products is to be or may be stored. Every application for a permit or license to establish and operate said establishment or to alter or reconstruct an existing establishment shall be accompanied by four blueprints not exceeding 24x42 inches, on which shall be shown a plot plan made to a scale showing the boundary lines of the property devoted or to be devoted to the establishment; all adjacent streets, alleys, easements; the materials to be used in the construction of all existing and proposed buildings, including that of existing buildings on adjacent property; also the dimensions and the location of rooms, the kind of materials to be used in the construction of the boiler house, hazardous buildings, and such other data as would assist the department of industrial relations in passing upon the application. Section 2, subd. (b) provides that "no change as to location, arrangement, or materials of construction, will be permitted in the execution of a design unless the same have been approved by the department of industrial relations." The permit or license shall be conspicuously posted in the building and shall be accessible to the representatives of the department of industrial relations, or the representatives of any city or county fire department within the state whenever request is made for its inspection. Subdivision (f) of section 2, to which appellants very strenuously object as an unlawful and unlimited delegation of judicial power, provides: "Application for such license shall be made to the department of industrial relations at its office within the State of California, and before the granting of such permit or license the department of industrial relations, or its duly authorized representative, shall make a thorough investigation into the fitness of such applicant to conduct a 'clothes cleaning establishment.' If such investigation reveals that the 'clothes cleaning establishment,' or the plans, specifications, premises, or character or ability of such applicant to conduct a 'clothes cleaning establishment' are not in compliance with the provisions of law or in any manner jeopardizes the public welfare or in any manner in the opinion of the department of industrial relations, or its duly authorized representatives, makes such proposed establishment a menace to the public welfare and safety, the department of industrial relations in its discretion is empowered to deny such applicant a permit or license to establish or maintain a 'clothes cleaning establishment.'"

[2] The Legislature has very properly placed the operation of clothes-cleaning establishments, conducted in the manner described in said act, and in which the use of volatile and inflammable substances and heat, steam, and hot water play the principal part, in the list of "hazardous businesses." That the whole subject-matter comes within the power of police regulation there is not room for a doubt.

[3, 4] In construing statutes it is a cardinal rule that the words of the statute must be given a meaning that is germane to the subject-matter of legislation and consistent with rational deductions, rather than a meaning that would create an absurdity. So, in interpreting the meaning of the words "character or ability" of the applicant to conduct a clothes-cleaning establishment, the nature of the business and the dangers that inhere in it, the care and vigilance to be exercised in properly safeguarding others as well as the temptations which the business may offer to persons who have a tendency to lead a questionable life, are matters to be considered in arriving at the purpose of statutes. We see nothing in the words which are sharply criticized by appellants that confers unlimited or arbitrary powers upon the department of industrial relations or upon the state fire marshal. The statute expressly authorizes that which the law impliedly authorizes, that is to say, if the applicant is found to be lacking in integrity or is recklessly indifferent to the rights and safety of others, or if he is lacking in ability to the degree that it would be dangerous to others for him to conduct a clothes-cleaning establishment, the department of industrial relations may reject his application and deny him a permit or license.

Section 3, as amended (St. 1927, p. 1928, § 3, as amended by St. 1929, p. 293, § 4), which is denounced by appellants as being unconstitutional on a number of grounds, follows:

"The department of industrial relations shall have the power and authority to prescribe rules, regulations and specifications governing construction, equipment, maintenance and operation of 'clothes cleaning establishments' deemed necessary to protect life and property against fire menace; provided, however, that such regulations in no manner restrict the operations of other statutes regulating such establishments; and provided, further, however, that any order of the department of industrial relations revoking the license of any clothes cleaning establishment is subject to a review by the court and can be set aside only upon the grounds that the department of industrial relations has exceeded its powers or has been guilty of fraud in the use of such order. The department of industrial relations is further empowered and directed to abate fire nuisances in any 'clothes cleaning establishment' pending a hearing upon such nuisance.

"In the event that any person, firm, association, copartnership, corporation or organization to whom such license or permit, has been issued to establish, conduct, maintain or operate a 'clothes cleaning establishment' or to store or to keep any volatile and inflammable product therein, shall violate or shall cause or permit to be violated any of the provisions of this act regulating such 'clothes cleaning establishment,' or shall conduct, maintain, or operate, or cause, or permit to be conducted, maintained or operated such 'clothes cleaning establishment' in an unlawful or careless manner dangerous to persons or property, within the discretion of the department of industrial relations or its duly authorized representatives, it shall be the duty of said department of industrial relations, and said department of industrial relations is hereby authorized and directed to revoke the permit or license issued to any such person, firm, association, copartnership, corporation or organization; provided, however, that no such permit or license shall be revoked until after a hearing as hereinafter provided has been had by said department of industrial relations in the mater of revocation of such permit or license. Notice of such hearing shall be given in writing and served upon the holder of such permit. * * *"

The act with considerable particularity prescribes the dimensions, height, and location of a hazardous building and the distance it shall be from the boundary line of the lot upon which it is located and its distance from street lines. The location, construction, equipment, and maintenance of the hazardous building is set out in the statute in detail. It provides, however, that where such buildings were in use on August 2, 1927, the effective day of the first statute on the subject, they shall be made to conform with the requirements of the act so far as it is physically possible. The statute very carefully sets forth in detail the plans and specifications of the plants and so far as the buildings, material, equipment, and machinery is concerned, but little is left to the discretion of the department of industrial relations. Violations of the provisions of the act are punishable as a misdemeanor by fine of not less than $200 or imprisonment not less than thirty days, or by both. It is further provided that if any sentence, clause, or portion of the act should be declared unconstitutional such decision shall not invalidate any remaining portions thereof.

[5] We are not now concerned with the extent of the state fire marshal's power to promulgate said rules by authority of the provisions of the 1927 act, since so much of the substance of said rules as was deemed necessary to effectuate the objects of the act has been written into the amended statute, and it is not claimed that the department of industrial relations, as successor of the state fire marshal, has made new or additional rules or that any attempt has been made by it to enforce the rules made by virtue of a superseded statute. It is not to be presumed that the department of industrial relations will exceed its authority in making such rules as may be necessary to administer its office.

[6] Little need be said in defense of the claim made by appellants that the 1929 act is void as being in violation of article 3, section 1, and article 4, section 1, state Constitution.

Substantially every argument advanced by appellants in support of their contention that the acts fails to set up any definite standard or test by which delegated power is to be exercised by the enforcement agency with which a citizen may comply and demand a license; or that it confers arbitrary power upon said agency and that said act grants to an enforcement agency judicial or legislative powers, is answered by this court in Gaylord v. City of Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348, 349. That decision so pointedly answers the arguments made in the instant case that we feel justified in quoting from it to a considerable extent. There the validity of an ordinance of the city of Pasadena which delegated to the city electrician the power to determine whether electric wiring in buildings within the city was dangerous to life or property was attacked. The ordinance did not provide what conditions he must find existing before he could determine that the said installation was unsafe or dangerous. With substantially the same questions raised in the instant case before him, Mr. Justice Henshaw delivered a very able and comprehensive opinion, much of which may well be republished:

"Even a casual observer of governmental growth and development must have observed the ever-increasing multiplicity and complexity of administrative affairs—national, state, and municipal—and even the occasional reader of the law must have perceived that from necessity, if for no better grounded reason, it has become increasingly imperative that many quasi legislative and quasi judicial functions, which in smaller communities and under more primitive conditions were performed by the legislative or judicial branches of the government, are intrusted to departments, boards, commissions, and agents. No sound objection can longer be successfully advanced to this growing method of transacting public business. These things must be done in this way or they cannot be done at all, and their doing, in a very real sense, makes for the safety of the republic and is thus sanctioned by the highest law. For, as the Supreme Court of the United States declares: 'Indeed, it is not too much to say that a denial to Congress of the right, under the Constitution, to delegate the power to determine some fact or the state of things upon which the enforcement of its enactment depends would be "to stop the wheels of government" and bring about confusion, if not paralysis, in the conduct of the public business.' Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 51 L. Ed. 523, 27 S. Ct. 367.

"Since, as has been said, the city council of Pasadena would have in any proper case the unquestioned right under the exercise of its police powers to compel a householder to make good the electric appliances upon his premises, the present problem narrows itself down to a determination whether or not in the method which they adopted they conferred upon a subordinate officer or agent unreasonable powers, and herein the controlling consideration is not that the power conferred may be unreasonably or oppressively exercised, for every presumption is that it will be honestly and reasonably exercised. 'Laws are not made upon the theory of the total depravity of those who are elected to administer them; and the presumption is that municipal officers will not use these small powers villainously and for purposes of oppression and mischief.' [Citing cases.] Therefore, eliminating the possibility of an unjust and oppressive use of the power against which the courts will interfere (New York v. Van De Carr, 199 U. S. 552, 50 L. Ed. 305, 26 S. Ct. 144; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. Ed. 220, 6 S. Ct. 1064), the question is, Can it be justly said that this delegated power is either in its terms illegally oppressive or in its terms lacks definiteness, thus allowing too great a play to the discretion of the city electrician? That an official charged with such a duty as this may, and indeed must, exercise discretion precisely as he may or must exercise judgment is, of course, true, but this fact in no way militates against the validity of the law, for, as said in the Van De Carr Case, supra, 'the authority sustained is the grant of power to issue or withhold permits in the honest exercise of a reasonable discretion.' A brief review of a few of the many cases will illustrate the nature and extent of powers exercised by inferior tribunals and officers whose grants of power have been upheld. The most familiar to which no citation of authority is necessary are the extraordinary grants of power, without express constitutional authority, by Congress and state Legislatures to interstate commerce and to railroad commissions. While recognizing that the Congress of the United States is the sole lawmaking power for all of its territory, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the creation by Congress of a commission and the vesting in that commission of power to maintain a government in the Philippine Islands and to make necessary laws for that purpose was not an unconstitutional surrender by Congress of its legislative powers or an unconstitutional transference of those powers to an inferior board. [Citation of cases.] A law of the state of Michigan which created a registration board of physicians empowered the board to say what physicians were duly and legally registered, and to forbid the practice of the profession to those not duly registered, was not, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States, an illegal nor unreasonable delegation of power; the court further saying that due process of law is not necessarily judicial process, and that the right of appeal is not essential to due process of law. Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. Ed. 563, 23 S. Ct. 390. An act of Congress investing the Secretary of War and his subordinates with power to determine and declare whether a bridge over navigable waters is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation and to order its alteration or removal is a reasonable delegation of power, since Congress may clothe an executive officer with power to ascertain whether certain specific facts exist, and thereupon to act in a prescribed manner without in so doing granting in an unconstitutional sense legislative or judicial powers to such an officer. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States, 216 U. S. 177, 54 L. Ed. 435, 30 S. Ct. 356. * * * The requirements of the state Legislature that no milk shall be received for sale or delivery to the city of New York without a permit in writing from the board of trade and subject to the conditions of such permit is a reasonable delegation of authority (New York v. Van De Carr, supra); and like delegated powers of censorship in permitting or prohibiting the display of moving picture films are held valid. [Citation of cases.] * * *

"It [the ordinance] does not define what conditions the city electrician must find to exist before he determines that the electrical apparatus is unsafe or dangerous. From the very nature and character of such apparatus it would be impossible for any ordinance so to do without working in many instances the very oppression which its language, necessarily general, is designed to prevent. As we have said, it is presumed that the city electrician will act fairly. It is also presumed that he is competent. An unnecessary liberality is shown in this ordinance in conferring, as it does, a right of appeal to the council, for the ordinance, if good at all, would unquestionably be good without such right of appeal, and the householder, conceiving himself to be injured, would be left to his action in court. This ordinance is peculiarly like the North Carolina statute construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Red 'C' Oil, etc., Co. v. Board of Ag. of N. C., 222 U. S. 380, 56 L. Ed. 240, 32 S. Ct. 152. The statute required only that illuminating oils 'be safe, pure, and afford a satisfactory light,' and gave to the state board of agriculture the power to establish rules and regulations and to determine what oils measured up to standard. The Supreme Court of the United States declared that this was not an illegal grant of legislative or judicial power and the requirements of the statute that illuminating oils should be 'safe, pure and afford a satisfactory light established a "sufficient primary standard."' The matter is concisely and clearly stated in 2 Dillon (Mun. Corp. 5th Ed.) § 598, where, discussing the question, he says: 'The fact that the dispensing power was apparently valid without restraint or qualification has been regarded as arising merely from the difficulty of defining in advance upon what conditions the permit shall be given or the dispensing power exercised.' It is concluded, therefore, that the ordinance here under consideration is not void as unwarrantedly conferring upon the city electrician judicial or legislative powers, nor yet void because its terms are either indefinite, arbitrary, or oppressive. Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 P. 310."

[7, 8] The 1929 act, being the only effective act in existence, provides the means by which a license may be obtained upon application to the department of industrial relations, which must make a thorough investigation of the fitness of the applicant to conduct a clothes cleaning establishment, as defined in the act. If it is found upon such investigation that the applicant is wanting in the respects pointed out in the statute, his application would, no doubt, be denied; if found otherwise, it would be granted. Of course, the department of industrial relations may not arbitrarily deny a license or permit, nor is it to be presumed that it will do so without good cause, and if it should, the courts are open for the correction of the wrong. A license may not be revoked without a hearing upon ample notice.

[9] It does not appear that the due process clauses of either the state or federal constitutions are impinged upon by the provisions of the 1929 act, which is a public safety measure.

[10] As stated in the beginning, the appellants have appealed from the whole of the judgment, a part of which was in their favor and part was adverse to them. Neither the state fire marshal nor the department of industrial relations, which was not made a party, has appealed. The act under which the rules were promulgated has been superseded by an amendment which sufficiently covers the subject matter as to render said rules unnecessary. Those portions of the original act which were carried into the amendment are held to be constitutional. It was the claim of the attorney-general from the beginning that the question of the validity of the rules became moot by the adoption of the act of 1929. That would seem to follow. No attempt seems to have been made to thereafter enforce them. We are of the opinion that a decision in favor of the validity of the parts of the 1927 act which were incorporated in the 1929 act leaves appellants without an issue so far as the question of rules is concerned.

There seems to be no course other than to dismiss the appeal. It is so ordered.

CALIFORNIA CASUALTY INDEMNITY EXCHANGE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

S. F. 13970.

Supreme Court of California.

Dec. 30, 1930.

1. Master and servant 🔑417(7).

On certiorari to review reapportionment of death benefit to employee's mother, fact and extent of dependency are deemed conclusively established by findings on original award.

2. Master and servant 🔑386(1).

Death benefit to employee's mother must be computed on rate of contribution at time of injury (St. 1917, p. 844, § 14(b).

3. Master and servant 🔑393.

On death of dependent beneficiary of deceased employee, there being surviving dependent, death benefit not yet payable is subject to reassignment within commission's discretion (St. 1917, p. 844, § 14(e).

4. Master and servant 🔑347.

Permitting commission, upon death of dependent beneficiary of deceased employee, to reassign unpaid benefit, held within legislative power (St. 1917, p. 844, § 14(e).

5. Master and servant 🔑393.

Employer cannot complain of reassignment of death benefit by commission so long as a dependent survives, absent abuse of discretion (St. 1917, p. 844, § 14(e).

6. Master and servant 🔑393.

Reassignment, on death of deceased employee's wife, of unpaid portion of wife's benefit to employee's mother, who already received benefit based on partial dependency, held not abuse of discretion (St. 1917, p. 844, § 14(e).

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Violet G. Billings, widow, and Emma Jennings, mother of Leroy Billings, deceased, employee, opposed by the California Casualty Indemnity Exchange, insurer. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, after the death of the widow, granting the mother's petition for reapportionment and ordering the unpaid portion of death benefit to wife paid to mother, insurer brings writ of review.

Award affirmed.

SHENK, J.

Petition to review and annul a death benefit award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The petitioner is the insurance carrier of the employer of the deceased employee.

On December 17, 1928, Leroy Billings, an employee of the Union Ice Company, sustained injuries in an industrial accident at San Diego as a result of which he died on the same day. His surviving wife, Violet G. Billings, and his surviving mother, Emma Jennings, as dependents, filed with the commission an application for an adjustment of their claims for death benefits. The commission found the wife wholly dependent, and the mother partially dependent by reason of an annual contribution by the deceased toward the mother's support in the sum of $200. The commission thereafter awarded to the wife the sum of $4,400, and to the mother the sum of $600, all payable in weekly installments. Thereafter, and on October 6, 1929, the wife died, whereupon, on November 2, 1929, the mother petitioned the commission for a reapportionment of the death benefit and for an order for the payment to her of the unpaid portion of the death benefit previously awarded to the wife. After hearing, the commission granted the petition, made a reapportionment, and ordered that said unpaid portion of the death benefit to the wife be paid to the mother. The original award was not questioned, and the only point now presented relates to the power of the commission to make the subsequent order of reapportionment and award.

[1, 2] For the purpose of this determination, the fact and the extent of dependency must be taken as conclusively established by the findings on the original award. For the purpose of that award the fact and extent of dependency must be ascertained as of the date of the injury under section 14(b) of the act (St. 1917, p. 844) and "this necessarily means that the death benefit must be computed on the rate of contribution at that time." Spreckels v. Industrial Acc. Com., 186 Cal. 256, 258, 199 P. 8, 9. The question is then narrowed to this: Was the power of the commission as to the distribution of the death benefits among dependents exhausted by the original award?

Section 9 of the act (St. 1917, p. 836), subsection 3(c) (1) (St. 1929, p. 420, § 1), provides: "In case the deceased employee leaves a person or persons wholly dependent upon him for support, such dependents shall be allowed the * * * death benefit equal to three times his average annual earnings," with a maximum of $5,000. This maximum was awarded in this proceeding and was apportioned $4,400 to the wife and $600 to the mother with an additional award in the sum of $150 for burial expenses as authorized by the act.

Section 9 of the act, subsection 3(c) (2), provides: "In case the deceased employee leaves no person wholly dependent upon him for support, but one or more persons partially dependent therefor, the said dependents shall be allowed * * * a death benefit which shall amount to three times the annual amount devoted by the deceased to the support of the person or persons so partially dependent." Under the foregoing provision, the undisputed evidence was that the annual amount devoted by the deceased to the surviving mother was $200, and the commission awarded to her three times that amount or $600, as specified by the statute.

Section 14(d) (1) of the act provides: "If there is one or more persons wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee, such person or persons shall receive the entire death benefit, and any person or persons partially dependent shall receive no part thereof." Notwithstanding this provision, the commission awarded to the mother the sum of $600. No question was raised by the insurance carrier as to the power of the commission to make the award to the mother, probably, we assume, because the total did not exceed the maximum. The award to the mother was paid in full.

[3-6] At the time of the death of the wife, the death benefit awarded to her had been paid down to $3,963.85, which latter sum was reapportioned to the mother. The commission seeks to justify this reassignment by virtue of section 14(e) of the act, which reads: "The commission may, anything in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding, set apart or reassign the death benefit to any one or more of the dependents in accordance with their respective needs and as may be just and equitable, and may order payment to a dependent subsequent in right, or not otherwise entitled, upon good cause being shown therefor. Such death benefit shall be paid to such one or more of the dependents of the deceased * * * as may be determined by the commission. * * * In the event of the death of a dependent beneficiary of any deceased employee, if there be no surviving dependent, the death of such dependent shall terminate the death benefit. * * *"

If it were not for the provisions of the foregoing section 14(e), the position of the petitioner would unquestionably be well taken. In the absence of that section it might well be argued that the statute had definitely and finally fixed the death benefit award to a partial dependent and that the reassignment of the death benefit theretofore awarded to a total dependent, since deceased, to a surviving partial dependent, would be tantamount to an award to one not entitled under the statute. But the provisions of section 14(e) are very broad. In effect, they provide that notwithstanding any other provision of the act, but within the maximum liability of the employer as provided by the statute and in the amount found by the commission to be due to dependents, the commission may reapportion and reassign the death benefit to such dependents "in accordance with their respective needs and as may be just and equitable," and may order payment to a dependent "not otherwise entitled, upon good cause being shown therefor." No point is made by the petitioner that the dependency of the mother did not and would not continue for a period far beyond the time when the original award to her was exhausted. The contrary satisfactorily appeared from the evidence at the hearing on the petition for reapportionment. So far as the employer was concerned, its liability to dependents was fixed at a definite amount by the commission within the statutory maximum. This amount became a fund for the benefit of the dependents of the deceased, to be administered according to their needs, and within the wise discretion of the commission. Under said section 14(e) the death of a dependent terminates the death benefit only "if there be no surviving dependent." When, as here, there is a surviving dependent, the death benefit not yet payable is subject to reassignment under that section within the proper discretion of the commission.

We discover no valid objection to section 14(e) of the act under the broad grant of powers to the legislature in dealing with this particular subject. So long as dependents of the deceased employee survive it would seem that the employer is in no position to complain provided the discretion of the commission under the statute be not abused. We find no such abuse in this case.

The award is affirmed.

GARDNER v. SMITH et al.

S. F. 13392.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 10, 1931.

1. Partnership 🔑331.

In action for partnership dissolution and accounting, court's method, in determining profits during early part of year, of taking average based on whole year's profits, held not error, in view of seasonal nature of business.

Such method of calculating profits, made during first four months of year, in absence of satisfactory evidence as to what those profits or losses actually were, was fair and practical, where business, being manufacture and sale of farming and canning equipment, was seasonal and showed loss during early period and profits during late period when machines were delivered.

2. Partnership 🔑333.

In action for partnership dissolution and accounting, allowance for one partner's capital investment, consisting of machinery and premises, was properly refused, where he received substantial rental.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by George D. Gardner against J. S. Smith and another. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson and Donald B. Richardson, both of San Jose, for appellants.

William F. James, of San Jose, and Lincoln V. Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Plaintiff brought this action for the dissolution of a partnership alleged to exist between plaintiff and defendants, and for an accounting. On conflicting evidence, the trial court found in favor of the existence of the partnership, ordered it dissolved, and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $5,131.54.

On this appeal defendants concede that they are bound by the finding of the trial court in reference to the existence of the partnership, and also concede that the following facts were satisfactorily established by the evidence: That the partnership consisted of respondent and appellants, the latter being father and son; that all three should share equally in the profits and losses; that the partnership commenced on February 1, 1926, and continued until May 1, 1927; that the nature of the business was the manufacture and sale of farming and canning equipment; that appellant J. S. Smith was to furnish the plant and equipment; that there was charged therefor the sum of $400 a month as rental; that appellant C. O. Smith was to and did handle the sales and office end of the business; that respondent was to and did act as engineer and general supervisor of the shop; that appellant J. S. Smith handled all the finances of the business.

It is also accepted as an established fact that from February 1, 1926, to December 31, 1926, the partnership made a net profit over all expenses, including rental and depreciation, of $24,136.70. For this eleven-month period the share of each partner in the profits was $8,045.50, respondent receiving, however, only $2,936.10, leaving a balance owing him for 1926 of $5,109.40. From this should be deducted the sum of $75 paid by appellants to respondent for a purpose which the trial court determined made it properly deductible from respondent's share of the profits. This leaves a net of $5,034.40 owing to respondent for 1926.

[1] Some time in April, 1927, appellant J. S. Smith, who signed all checks for the partnership, refused to issue any further sums to respondent, and, as a result, respondent left the partnership on May 1, 1927. On this appeal the only controversy worthy of note is as to whether the trial court correctly computed the profits and losses of the partnership for the first four months of 1927. During these four months respondent admittedly drew $780. It is admitted that for the entire year of 1927 the business made a net profit of $7,900. The appellants introduced an audit which purported to show that for the first four months of 1927 the business suffered a $7,200 loss. The trial court was not satisfied with this audit, for reasons that will later appear, and, upon proof that the business was a seasonal one, and that the first months of the year were months in which money was spent, and the last months were periods in which the work of the earlier months was realized upon, used the following scheme in an attempt to determine equitably the share of profits due respondent for the four-month period involved: In order to determine the average monthly income for 1927, the trial court divided the net profit of that year by 12. Four times this result obviously gives the average profit for four months. Since there were three partners, if this result be divided by three, the total will be the profit due each partner for the first four months of 1927. From this must be deducted the $780 received by respondent, and, if the result be added to the profits still due respondent for 1926, the total will be the sum for which the trial court gave judgment.

The appellants contend that the trial court was in error in thus averaging the monthly profits for 1927 based on the entire year's profits, and contend the audit introduced into evidence by them conclusively shows a loss for this period. The audit in question, mentioned supra, purported to cover the entire period of the partnership; that is, from February 1, 1926, to May 1, 1927. This audit did indicate that during the first four months of 1927 the partnership did lose over $7,200. It is appellants' contention that the entire $7,900 profit of 1927 is attributable to the last eight months of the year. If the audit correctly pictured the financial status of the business, there would be some merit in the appellants' contentions, but the evidence conclusively shows that the audit does not do so. The audit was not made until almost a year and a half after the end of the period it purported to cover. The accountant making the same testified that no inventory was taken as of May 1, 1927, and that the inventory of December 31, 1926, was taken as the basis for the audit. The audit shows that during this four-month period over $10,000 was spent for labor and materials invested in finished and unfinished machines. These expenditures obviously increased the physical assets of the firm to an appreciable extent; yet, inasmuch as the inventory taken was that of December 31, 1926, nowhere in the audit would the result of these expenditures be reflected. Moreover, the evidence showed, as stated supra, that the business was a seasonal one. Early in the year contracts were secured and machines manufactured for delivery later in the year. Appellant C. O. Smith testified that the first months of the year were months of paying out, so that in the most prosperous year the first months would show a loss. According to this same witness, there was no way to determine the profits or losses for any period in the year until "the income portion (of the year) had been balanced against the outgoing portion." He also testified that in his opinion the method of ascertaining the average monthly profit for 1927 used by the trial court was fair and practical.

Under such circumstances, we cannot say that the trial court was in error in averaging the monthly profits for 1927, in the absence of satisfactory evidence as to what those profits or losses actually were. Inasmuch as no physical inventory was taken in May of 1927, and taking into consideration the seasonal nature of the business, we are of the opinion that the method used by the trial court was fair and practical, and reached a result, which, for all practical purposes, gave respondent a fair share of the profits to which he was entitled. It would be obviously unfair to respondent to say that, although he worked for four months in building machines, because he left before they were sold, he cannot share in the profit. To state the proposition is to refute it.

[2] Appellant J. S. Smith complains that the court in its accounting made no allowance for his capital investment. This contention is without merit. It is admitted that this appellant received a substantial rent for the premises and machinery used by the partnership during the entire period of the existence of the partnership. There is no evidence that this appellant furnished the partnership with any of his private capital. Obviously, under such circumstances, no such allowance should be made.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Suit by O. F. Smith and others against Millie C. Lewis and another. From an adverse judgment, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Superseding opinion 287 P. 470.

Milton S. Hamilton, of Oakland (Mark Averill, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellants.

Donahue, Hynes & Hamlin, of Oakland, for respondents.

SHENK, J.

This is an action to set aside a judgment and to permanently enjoin the enforcement thereof.

In July, 1925, Millie C. Lewis, defendant herein, commenced an action as a minority stockholder of the Borch Radio Corporation and on behalf of said corporation against O. F. Smith, F. O. Howe, E. L. Kirk, George E. Sheldon, and Max Lowenthal to compel said defendants as directors of said corporation to pay to the corporation the sum of $9,500 alleged to have been the value of certain property and assets wrongfully withdrawn from said corporation and delivered to another stockholder contrary to the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. Said corporation was alleged to be a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California and was made a party defendant in said action under an allegation that it was controlled by the defendant directors, and it would be futile for the plaintiff therein to make a demand on said corporation to commence said or any action against said defendants, and therefore the plaintiff initiated said action on behalf of said corporation. The defendants therein named, except the defendants Lowenthal and the corporation, answered to the merits but did not allege in their answer, nor otherwise contend or show in said action, that said corporation at the time of the commencement of said action was under the disability of suspension of its powers by reason of the failure to pay its corporation license tax for the year 1923 as required by the Corporation License Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 422), as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 371). Upon the trial of that action oral and documentary evidence was introduced. The court found the facts and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Millie C. Lewis, and against the answering defendants and ordered, adjudged and decreed that the Borch Radio Corporation have judgment against said defendants for the sum of $9,500, interest and costs. This judgment became final in January, 1927.

On March 25, 1927, the plaintiffs herein, defendants in the former action, commenced the present action against Millie C. Lewis and the sheriff of Alameda county to set aside the judgment in the former action, to quash the execution issued thereunder, and to enjoin the enforcement thereof, on the ground that said judgment was void for the reason that at the time the former action was commenced the Borch Radio Corporation was under suspension of its corporate rights, privileges, and powers for failure to pay its license tax for the year 1923, and that notwithstanding such suspension said Millie C. Lewis, as agent for and on behalf of said corporation, commenced said action and prosecuted the same to judgment.

Upon the filing of the complaint in the present action the plaintiffs applied to the court for a temporary injunction. An order was issued requiring the defendants herein to show cause on a day certain why the temporary injunction should not issue as prayed. As a return to the order to show cause the defendants filed a general and special demurrer to the complaint and in a separate document, signed only by the attorney for the defendants, charged also that the complaint in the present action did not state facts sufficient to authorize the issuance of an injunction and presented as a part of the return the answer of the plaintiffs to the complaint and the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the former action. The temporary injunction was issued and the cause came on for trial. It was thereafter stipulated in open court that the plaintiffs' right to a permanent injunction might be submitted on the demurrer to the complaint and on the application for a temporary injunction and the return thereto and that the court might enter judgment after argument thereon. Thereafter the court overruled the demurrer and found that "all of the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint are true," concluded that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief prayed for, and rendered its judgment of injunction accordingly. This appeal is from that judgment. The record is presented on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

The judgment roll is in the usual form. To the complaint are attached a copy of the complaint and the judgment in the former action. The special demurrer charges uncertainty, in that it does not appear on the face of the complaint whether the plaintiffs herein pleaded as a defense in the former action the fact that the Borch Radio Corporation was under suspension of its powers when the former action was commenced or what, if any, defense was pleaded in the former action.

The bill of exceptions sets forth merely a copy of the order to show cause and the return thereto and recites the stipulation above referred to. The only specifications of error are the following: (1) The evidence is insufficient to support the findings that all of the allegations of the complaint are true; and (2) the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief prayed for in the complaint. The foregoing state of the record is set forth in detail in order to show the limitations thus placed by the appellant upon our inquiry on this appeal.

[1-4] As to the first specification of error there is no fact or other showing in the record to rebut the truthfulness of the allegations of fact in the complaint. In fact, the demurrer upon which the cause was in part submitted on the merits admitted the truth of those facts and the demurrer was properly overruled. Assuming that the attack therein made on the former judgment was collateral, such a judgment may be collaterally impeached by a showing that, by reason of the license statute, the corporation had no legal right to commence the action. Livermore v. Ratti, 150 Cal. 458, 89 P. 327; Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89 P. 335; 15 Cal. Jur., p. 89. And a stockholder suing on behalf of the corporation, as in this case, has no greater right or standing as plaintiff than the corporation would have had if the corporation itself had been plaintiff. The stockholder stands in the shoes of the corporation. He is the mere nominal plaintiff and the corporation is the real party in interest, and if the corporation is not in position to attack the transaction, the stockholder may not. Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 P. 272; 6 Cal. Jur. p. 865, and cases cited.

[5-7] The second specification of error, viz., that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief prayed for in the complaint, might readily be dismissed as an insufficient specification of error, first, because the record contains no finding of that purport or effect, and, secondly, if such a finding were made it would be misplaced and constitute a conclusion of law. However, assuming this specification to be sufficient to raise the point the defendants assume thereunder to argue a question of estoppel against the plaintiffs by reason of their failure to allege in their answer, or otherwise disclose in the former action, that the corporation was under the disability of the statute at the time said action was commenced. Estoppel was not an issue presented to the court in the present action as disclosed by documents incorporated in the record, and the argument on the demurrer and the order to show cause is not included therein. The defendants argue with great earnestness that the plaintiffs are guilty of fraud in permitting the payment of the license tax to become delinquent and in not alleging the disability of the corporation in their answer in the former action. Fraud is never presumed. When it constitutes an element of defense it must be pleaded. 12 Cal. Jur. p. 800, and the cases cited. Certainly the issue of fraud was not presented in the demurrer to the complaint and the return to the order to show cause did not otherwise charge it. The trial court was therefore without power to find it as a fact. If the defendants relied upon it they should have filed an answer presenting the issue, which was not done. If that had been done, there may have been a defense to the charge. On the record now presented fraud may not therefore be inferred, and inasmuch as the defendants did not tender the issue of fraud or estoppel to the trial court, there was nothing before that court upon which to base a finding on that subject and the defendants are in no position on this appeal to urge the point.

[8] The defendants further contend that said license tax law, which has since been repealed (Stats. 1927, p. 396), was unconstitutional. This court, in Perkins Mfg. Co. v. Jordan, 200 Cal. 667, 254 P. 551, held the act unconstitutional as applied to foreign corporations, and it is argued that the decision in that case is applicable in principle to the imposition of license taxes upon domestic corporations; and that although the provisions of the act relating to license tax on domestic and foreign corporations were severable, the elimination from the act of the requirement of payment on the part of foreign corporations rendered that part of the act applicable to domestic corporations obnoxious to section 15 of article 12 of the state Constitution, which provides that no foreign corporation shall be allowed to transact business within this state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations under the laws of this state. In the Perkins Mfg. Co. Case this court felt impelled, in view of recent pronouncements by the Supreme Court of the United States, to hold that the provisions of the license tax relating to foreign corporations were invalid as constituting a burden on interstate commerce, and as a tax on property beyond the state's jurisdiction, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment. But it would be going too far to hold that the state of California is powerless to require the payment of a revenue license tax by a domestic corporation merely because it is powerless to enforce a like measure on property beyond its jurisdiction. We are satisfied that the situation thus presented is not one contemplated by the section of our state Constitution invoked by the defendants.

Reduced to its lowest terms, this controversy is one wherein a judgment is sought to be set aside on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to enter the same. While it may be said that the judgment on its face did not disclose that the corporation was without power to sue or to have suit brought on its behalf, nevertheless jurisdiction thus appearing was only apparent (Bennett v. Wilson, 133 Cal. 379, 65 P. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207), and it may always be shown even collaterally that a corporation had no legal existence when the action was commenced (Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra). The same rule would be applicable where the corporation had, as here under the statute, no power to sue.

[9] It is argued in the briefs of defendants' counsel that even if the disability of the corporation existed at the time the former action was commenced, such disability was removed by restoration to capacity before the issuance of the execution on the judgment and therefore the injunction should not have been granted. There are two answers to this argument: First, there is nothing in the record upon which to base it; and, secondly, if a revival later occurred, such revival would not have the effect of validating the acts attempted during the period of suspension. Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 393, 205 P. 446.

Other points discussed in the briefs do not merit specific mention.

The judgment is affirmed.

CURTIS, J. (dissenting).

I am unable to agree with the views expressed in the majority opinion. The judgment in the original action was recovered in a suit instituted by a stockholder against the directors of said corporation for the illegal and unlawful payment of certain assets of the corporation contrary to the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. Said action was, therefore, not instituted nor maintained by the corporation but by a stockholder thereof. It is true that the general rule is that stockholders in suit of this nature, brought under section 309 of the Civil Code, can maintain only such actions as the corporation could have maintained and prosecuted. This was so held in the case of Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 P. 272, 275, cited in the majority opinion and other cases relied upon in the text of 6 California Jurisprudence, 865, also cited. But these cases discussed and they involved merely the nature and character of the liability which the stockholders therein were seeking to enforce, and they do not in any way involve a case like the one now before us in which the nature and character of the action is such that the corporation could in the first instance have instituted the action but thereafter, by reason of its failure to pay its license tax, it was disabled from bringing such or any action whatever. This is made clear from the following language in the opinion of Turner v. Markham, supra:

> "At the threshold of this inquiry, however, it is proper to pause to point out what is the exact nature of the action before us. In its essence it is an action brought by the corporation itself to recover redress for some legal wrong which the corporation itself has suffered. To prevent a failure of justice, as where the governing board of directors or trustees of the corporation refuses to prosecute such an action, the law permits a stockholder to begin and maintain it on behalf of the corporation. But the fact that a stockholder is the nominal plaintiff in such an action, whether he prosecutes it as an individual stockholder or as a representative of a class of disaffected stockholders, does not in any manner or to the slightest extent enlarge the rights and remedies of the action. The action must still be founded upon some wrong which the corporation, as a corporation, has suffered, and for which, if itself were plaintiff, it could secure legal or equitable redress. Therefore, if the evidence shall establish that the corporation itself has suffered no wrong, cognizable either at law or in equity, it will matter not how just and how grievous may be the complaint of the individual stockholder, nor how complete may be the proof of his personal loss, damage, or injury. In this action on behalf of the corporation no recovery can be had, and the stockholder will be compelled to proceed by his individual action to obtain a personal recovery."

Nothing is said in the opinion in that case, nor in any of the other cases cited in California Jurisprudence, supra, nor in any case to which our attention has been called, which would justify the holding of the majority opinion that when the facts show that the corporation has sustained a loss under such circumstances that a cause of action to recover such loss is given to the corporation and to stockholders, and the corporation thereafter suffers a disability which would prevent it from recovering for said loss, that said disability to prosecute said action also attaches to the stockholders, and they are thereby prevented from recovering said loss.

The act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 371) requiring domestic corporations to pay an annual license tax, and upon their failure to do so as required therein, providing that the corporation rights, privileges and powers of such corporation shall be suspended and incapable of being exercised for any purpose, except as therein provided, does not purport to suspend or in any manner to deal with the rights of stockholders to act or to institute proper actions for the protection of the property of the corporation. To extend the provisions of this act to stockholders of a corporation whose directors have unlawfully and illegally disposed of corporate property is not warranted by the provisions of said act nor by any rule of statutory construction. On the other hand, such rules of statutory construction hold directly to the contrary. The statute of 1917 above mentioned provides for a forfeiture and is penal in its application. It should, therefore, receive a strict construction and be held to be applicable only to include such subjects as are directly covered thereby.

A somewhat analogous situation was before the court when it was called upon to construe section 2468 of the Civil Code. This section when first enacted provided that no fictitious copartnership failing to comply with its provisions requiring the publication and filing of a certificate stating the name in full of the persons forming said copartnership, shall maintain any action upon or on account of any contract or transaction had in such fictitious name. The inhibition contained in said section did not apply at that time to assignees of such fictitious copartnership and it was held that an action could be maintained by such assignee. Cheney v. Newberry & Co., 67 Cal. 126, 7 P. 445; Wing Ho v. Baldwin, 70 Cal. 194, 11 P. 565; and Quan Wye v. Chin Lin Hee, 123 Cal. 185, 55 P. 783. In the Wing Ho Case the court said: "As the language of the statute [section 2468 of the Civil Code] does not include the latter [the assignees], we do not think it should, by construction, be extended to them." So with the statute of 1917. It does not purport to include stockholders, and to extend it to them would be against settled and approved rules of statutory construction.

GILMORE v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION et al.

L. A. 10360.

Supreme Court of California.
Dec. 29, 1930.

1. Street railroads ⟹98(6).

Respecting contributory negligence of pedestrian, struck by street car while crossing street, test is whether reasonably prudent man would accept hazard proved.

2. Appeal and error ⟹1005(1).

Weighing of probabilities and conflicting inferences is ordinarily for trial court and jury.

3. Street railroads ⟹117(21).

On conflicting evidence, contributory negligence of pedestrian, killed by street car while crossing street held for jury.

4. Trial ⟹251(8).

Instructions defining last clear chance doctrine were properly refused; such doctrine not being in issue.

5. Appeal and error ⟹1033(5).

Instruction impliedly requiring more than ordinary care of pedestrian, if crossing between intersections, held not prejudicial, being favorable to defendant street railway.

> Instruction in question stated that, if pedestrian were crossing at intersection, rules of ordinary care applicable to street intersections would govern, and any instruction on special care required of one crossing between intersections should be disregarded. But instructions elsewhere correctly declared pedestrian was required to exercise care and caution that reasonably prudent and careful man in same or similar circumstances would exercise, whether crossing in middle of block or at intersection.

6. Street railroads 🔑118(11).

Instruction pedestrian had right to expect street car would be operated at customary speed, and give usual warnings, held proper against contention customary speed was not proved and pedestrian saw car.

> Evidence showed, notwithstanding defendant company's contention, that street car was being operated at its usual speed, which was from 12 to 15 miles an hour at time of accident. Court also instructed jury that, if pedestrian actually saw car approaching, it was immaterial whether bell was rung.

7. Death 🔑72, 86(2).

For death of husband struck by street car, damages was wife's pecuniary loss by deprivation of right of support, irrespective of financial independence; evidence thereof being inadmissible.

> It was contended that court erred in giving instruction that wife was entitled to support of her husband, regardless of her own financial circumstances.

8. Death 🔑31(5).

Though executor is authorized to sue on behalf of heirs in death action, his default does not prejudice any rights of heirs not served (Code Civ. Proc. § 377).

> This follows because, although executor is authorized to sue, he is not compelled to do so, and the independent right of action for death is in no wise dependent upon whether he does or does not exercise the power given.

9. Action 🔑38(1).

Cause of action for death is joint, single, and indivisible.

10. Death 🔑57.

In death action by widow alone, naming other heirs as defendants, such heirs were in reality plaintiffs, and complaint tendered issue involved on behalf of plaintiff and defendant heirs.

> The complaint averred heirship of both plaintiff and the three daughters of decedent named as defendants, and widow as plaintiff sued upon the whole of the cause of action given by statute for death, praying for judgment on the whole cause of action and for partition or distribution of the lump sum which may be awarded.

11. Judgment 🔑690.

Death action by widow naming other heirs as defendants and praying judgment on whole cause of action foreclosed all heirs from further recovery.

12. Death 🔑79, 81, 88.

In death action, loss of comfort, protection, and society is proper element of injury and not compensable by nominal damages.

13. Death 🔑104(6).

In death action by widow, joining decedent's children as defendants, instructions respecting measure of damages carrying rights of widow and children together but in disjunctive where necessary held not error.

> The daughters were named as defendants in the action, but so far as is shown were not served with process. The instruction stated that verdict, if for plaintiff, should be for sum fairly and fully compensating her and each of decedent's daughters for pecuniary loss, if any, sustained by death of decedent, and stated that jury might consider loss of support, if any, which decedent gave each or any of them, and also loss of society, comfort, and care, if any, which plaintiff or any of daughters sustained, considering not only support, comfort, and care which they would have been legally entitled to receive, but also that which they could reasonably except to receive from deceased had he lived.

14. Appeal and error 🔑932(1).

Where pecuniary loss or loss of support was not shown as to certain heirs in death action, it is presumed that no award was made in that behalf.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by Catherine Gilmore against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation and others.

Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 290 P. 22.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Norman S. Sterry, and Philip C. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newlin & Ashburn and W. C. Mathes, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

After a careful reconsideration of this case, we reassert the conclusion heretofore announced in the opinion by Mr. Justice Shenk, and the major portion of said opinion is hereby adopted as a portion of this opinion as follows, to wit:

"This appeal is from a judgment on a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $7,500 in an action for damages on account of the death of Charles T. Gilmore, the husband of the plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant railway company, the appellant herein.

"The deceased met his death when a street car operated by the railway company struck him at a point near the intersection of Western avenue and Council street in the city of Los Angeles. It is conceded that the evidence on the issue of the defendant's negligence is conflicting. Contributory negligence was charged against the deceased, which, it is claimed, constituted negligence as matter of law.

[1-3] "Council street runs into Western avenue (a north and south street) from the west. The plaintiff and her husband had their home on Western avenue, and, if Council street extended easterly from Western avenue, it would pass through a portion of their home place. On the evening of February 12, 1924, the plaintiff and her husband left their home together, intending to go to the Wilshire Theatre. They proceeded down their driveway to a point near the easterly curb line of Western avenue and opposite Council street. Automobiles were parked along the curb on either side of their driveway. They paused at this point to permit three or four automobiles running northerly to pass. The deceased saw a car of the defendant company approaching Council street from the north on the westerly track. Council street was a regular stop for the defendant company's cars. The two then started to cross Western avenue. The plaintiff stopped, but deceased proceeded ahead of her across Western avenue. The deceased apparently walked rapidly to escape a north-bound automobile. As he reached the westerly rail of the south-bound track, he was hit by the right front corner of the appellant's car, was thrown to the street, and expired a few moments thereafter. The appellant's car did not stop at Council street, but increased its speed across the intersection and stopped about 200 feet from where the deceased was hit. The foregoing was established by the testimony of the plaintiff. Other evidence tended to prove that the deceased was south of the south line of Council street proceeding easterly when he was struck, but this evidence raised a conflict for the jury to weigh and determine. It is true that the deceased assumed a degree of risk in crossing the street ahead of the street car, but he had a right to do so. The test is whether a reasonably prudent man would accept the hazard under the particular facts and circumstances in evidence. Ross v. Railways Co., 47 Cal. App. 753, 191 P. 703. The weighing of the probabilities and of the conflicting inferences is ordinarily for the trial court and jury, and not for the reviewing court. Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 95, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027. From the record in this case it cannot be said that an honest difference of opinion between men of average intelligence might not exist. 'The burden of proving contributory negligence was on the defendants. "It is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown."' Phillips v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 80 Cal. App. 641, 645, 252 P. 628, 629, and cases cited.

[5] "Next, the appellant complains of an instruction wherein the court stated to the jury that, if it should find that Mr. Gilmore was crossing at the intersection, the rules of ordinary care applicable to street intersections would govern his conduct and any instruction given with reference to any special degree of care required of one crossing a public street between intersections must be disregarded, provided the jury find that Mr. Gilmore was crossing at said intersection. The appellant contends, in view of the conflict in the evidence as to whether Mr. Gilmore crossed directly at the intersection or south of it, that the instruction is prejudicially erroneous and misleading, in that it told the jury, so it is claimed, that a less degree of care was required of a pedestrian at street intersections than when crossing between intersections; the law being that ordinary care under the circumstances is the measure at all times. But, inasmuch as the instruction standing alone seemingly charged the jury that more than the required degree of ordinary care should be exercised between intersections, we fail to see how the instruction was anything but favorable to the appellant. The instructions elsewhere directed the jury emphatically and correctly that the decedent was required 'during the entire crossing of the street to exercise the care and caution that a reasonably prudent and careful man in the same or similar circumstances would exercise * * * regardless of whether he was crossing in the middle of the block or at the regular crossing place for pedestrians at the intersection of Council street. * * *'

[6] "The appellant next contends that an instruction which stated that a pedestrian had a right to expect that persons operating street cars and other vehicles would so operate them at the customary speed and give the usual warnings and signals is prejudicially erroneous, when, as it is claimed, there was no evidence of the customary speed of cars at that intersection, and when there was evidence that the decedent knew of the approach of the car, in which event the omission of a signal would not constitute negligence. There is, however, the testimony of the appellant's witnesses that the street car was being operated at its usual rate of speed, and that its speed at the time was 12 to 15 miles an hour. In addition, the court instructed the jury at the request of the appellant that, if it believed that the decedent actually saw and knew of the approach of the car, then whether the bell was rung or was not rung was immaterial. The error in the instruction complained of is not disclosed.

[8-10] A spirited and able discussion is indulged by counsel of certain instructions concerning the measure of damages applicable to the case. The question raised is easily grasped from the following portion of one of the instructions: "If your verdict is for the plaintiff it must be for such a sum as will fairly and fully compensate her and each of decedent's daughters for the pecuniary loss, if any, which you may find each of them to have sustained by the death of the said Charles T. Gilmore. In determining that amount you may consider not only the loss of the support, if any, which he gave to each or any of them, but also the loss of society, comfort and care, if any, which the plaintiff or any of said daughters have sustained by reason of his death, and you may consider not only the loss of the support, comfort and care which the plaintiff or any of said daughters would have been legally entitled to receive from said Charles T. Gilmore had he lived, but also the support, comfort and care which you may find them, or any of them, could reasonably expect to receive from the deceased had he lived. * * *"

Appellant insists that in view of the issue framed by the pleadings, prejudicial error has resulted from these instructions, which authorized the jury to give, if so advised, substantial damages to the nonparticipating heirs at law of the decedent. In this connection, we pause to note that the widow alone is the designated plaintiff. The other heirs at law are three daughters, one of whom is a nonresident of the state. These heirs were named as defendants in the action, but so far as is known were not served with process. The executor of the estate of decedent was so served and later defaulted. Although authorized by section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure to sue on behalf of the heirs of decedent in a case like the present one, we know of no authority for the contention that by his default any rights of the heirs not served are prejudiced. This follows because although he is authorized to sue, he is not compelled to do so and the independent right of action given by the statute is in no wise dependent upon whether he does or does not exercise the power given him. Ruiz v. Santa Barbara G., etc., Co., 164 Cal. 188, 128 P. 330.

We thus have before us a complaint which avers the heirship of both plaintiff and the three daughters of decedent. We find also that the widow as plaintiff sues upon the whole of the cause of action given by the code section. It is also true that she prays for judgment upon the whole cause of action and supplements this with a prayer for a partition or distribution of the lump sum which may be awarded therein. No objection was or is made that a defect in parties existed because of failure to serve process on the alleged nonconsenting heirs.

The anomaly in the situation arises because in the complaint it is alleged that the daughters of decedent suffered no pecuniary injury by reason of his death. This, it is strongly urged, put the daughters out of the case and so reduced and confined the issue to the loss suffered by the plaintiff alone, and that in view of such fact, the instructions as given necessarily encouraged the jury to go far afield and give substantial damages outside the issue thus tendered by the pleadings. As authority for this contention, appellant rests heavily upon the case of Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 182 Cal. 781, 190 P. 161. But this argument overlooks the fact that, as above noted, the complaint does not purport to restrain or limit the cause of action given by the statute but on the contrary purports to sue to collect the whole of the same. It has been many times held in this state that the cause of action is a joint one, a single one and an indivisible one. Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, 294, 92 P. 733; Estate of Riccomi, 185 Cal. 458, 197 P. 97, 14 A. L. R. 509; Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co., 198 Cal. 290, 299, 244 P. 1077.

The allegation of the complaint that no injury has resulted to the nonparticipating heirs by reason of the death of their father, tendered, as to defendant, no issue so long as it is understood that plaintiff is suing upon the one cause of action as a whole. This allegation concerns the defendant only as to the amount of the recovery. The complaint discloses the existence of other heirs and prays that their rights be adjudicated. Had these heirs appeared in this action they could not have altered the issue founded upon the alleged negligence of the defendant. In the trial here being reviewed there was no place for litigation between the heirs themselves as to the strength of their relative claims and the amount that might be awarded each of them. Such a contest would follow the granting of a lump sum award. Again, if these heirs had appeared they could have gone no further than either to join with the plaintiff in the cause of action or to disclaim any benefit under the same. The true fact is that the complaint in reality tendered the issue involved not only on behalf of plaintiff but on behalf of defendant heirs as well. The heirs named as defendants, in other words, are in reality plaintiffs in the case. Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730; 20 Cal. Juris. § 14, p. 499.

[11, 12] With this situation before us, it is readily seen that the question is narrowed down to whether or not the insertion of the allegation of no damages above referred to, misled the defendant to its prejudice. It should first be noted that by this action all of the heirs of decedent are foreclosed from further recovery. Salmon v. Rathjens, supra; Rabe v. Western Union, supra. By reason of this fact, defendant is protected against a claim by these nonparticipating heirs.

Again, a reference to the answer shows that the existence of the heirs, here made defendants, was admitted and upon information and belief it was asserted that the heirs named were not the sole heirs. In the answer also may be found allegations upon information and belief that the reason these nonconsenting heirs did not join with the plaintiff was that they realized no actionable negligence could be shown against the appellant. Again, on the trial it was shown that these parties were children of the decedent and while it was shown that decedent did not contribute to their support, there was no showing that the cordial and affectionate relationship usually existing between parent and child did not exist as to them. Loss of comfort, protection, and society is a proper element of injury and is by no means to be classed as compensable by merely nominal damages. Thus it is plain that defendant was not misled or injured by said allegation.

[13, 14] The instructions complained of carried the rights of the widow and children along together but in the disjunctive where necessary for the individual consideration of their claims, and we can see no error in giving them in that form. If pecuniary loss or loss of support was not shown as to certain of the heirs, it is to be presumed that no award was made in that behalf. The instructions in mentioning the various heirs, carried their rights together, as above stated, and the words, "if any," were frequently inserted, thus showing that the court placed before the jury only such matters as the evidence warranted and kept the jury within the proper limits.

In the Massachusetts Bonding Company Case, supra, the complaint tendered and the answer accepted as the sole issue a part only of the statutory cause of action. In other words, by tacit consent of the parties, the cause of action was split and limited alone to the damages suffered by the widow, the defendant accepting such restriction of the issue with knowledge of the existence of other heirs. In view of this fact, it was in that case beyond the realm of the cause to instruct the jury that substantial damages could be given to the nonparticipating heirs. But, as above noted, in the complaint before us, the pleader tendered the whole issue under the code, including the rights not only of plaintiff but of all the other heirs as well, and this situation distinguishes the case above discussed and makes appropriate the instructions which were here given.

[15] Finally, appellant claims the damages were excessive. Even in view of the decedent's age, which was seventy-nine in the month of December preceding the accident, we cannot say that the record discloses that the verdict was provoked by or was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury. The oral testimony and the photographs in evidence, taken shortly before his death, show that the decedent was an extraordinarily rugged and healthy man for his age and that he had the appearance of a man much younger in years.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRAHAM v. COHEN et al.

Civ. 6283.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 16, 1931.

1. Evidence 🔑474(19).

Owner is entitled to testify as to worth of article, whether he is generally familiar with such value or not.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1).

Finding of value based on owner's evidence thereof may not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Trover and conversion 🔑40(6).

In action to recover value of stolen diamonds purchased by defendants, owner's testimony as to value of diamonds held not to authorize verdict for owner in excess of $750.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Mamie K. Graham against L. B. Cohen and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Modified and affirmed.

Harry C. Levey and A. G. Alm, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George H. Moore and Gerald O'C. Egan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem.

This is an action brought to recover the value of five diamonds stolen from the plaintiff and later purchased by the defendants, who in turn disposed of the same.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the sum of $900. The only point involved on this appeal is the contention of the defendants that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the lower court's finding as to the value of said diamonds.

The plaintiff testified that three of the diamonds were worth "approximately around $250 each." With respect to the other two diamonds her testimony was as follows:

"Q. And the two diamonds in the ring which was set with the two diamonds and the ruby, what were they worth each? A. The two diamonds each?

"Q. Yes? A. Well I couldn't say what they were worth each. I should judge the entire ring including the ruby was worth $250.00."

No other evidence was offered touching the question of the value of the jewelry.

[1, 2] There is no doubt under the authorities that the owner of an article, whether he is generally familiar with such value or not, is entitled to testify as to its worth, and that a finding of value based upon such evidence may not be disturbed on appeal. Hood v. Bekins, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 150, 152, 172 P. 594, citing cases, and Wigmore on Evidence, § 716.

Accordingly, we hold that the evidence was sufficient to justify a finding that three of the diamonds were worth $750.

[3] With respect to the remaining two diamonds, while the plaintiff stated that the ring containing these stones together with a ruby was worth $250, it is impossible to determine from such testimony how much of this amount represented the value of the diamonds as distinguished from the value of the ruby and the setting. Hence it is ordered that the amount of the judgment be reduced from $900 to $750, with costs as stated in the judgment. As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the Application of George H. JOHNSTON, Clifford Dowding, and Frank Pimental for Writ of Probable Cause.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 15, 1931.

Application for stay of execution of judgment pending appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Alameda County, Fred V. Wood, Judge, of conviction of robbery and burglary of the first degree. Denied.

James Wesolo, of Oakland, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

Application for stay of execution of judgment.

Petitioners were tried and found guilty of robbery and burglary of the first degree. A writ of probable cause was prayed for and denied by the trial court. From an examination of the record we are of the opinion that there is no reason why a stay of execution should be granted.

The petition is denied.

STOUT v. FARWELL.

Civ. 5724.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 6, 1931.

1. Appeal and error 🔑807.

Under statute authorizing relief from judgment taken through mistake or excusable neglect, possible right to move that dismissed appeal be restored to calendar must be asserted within six months (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

2. Appeal and error 🔑807.

When appellate court erroneously determines it lacks jurisdiction, and order dismissing appeal becomes final, decision is law of case.

3. Appeal and error 🔑807.

Where order dismissing appeal for lack of jurisdiction became final, court could not thereafter cancel order and determine appeal on merits, notwithstanding Supreme Court thereafter held similar order erroneous.

4. Courts 🔑207(4).

Writ of mandate may lie from Supreme Court to Court of Appeal.

Action by James B. Stout against Lyman Farwell. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed, and the appeal was dismissed (285 P. 336), and rehearing denied (286 P. 471). On motion to cancel the order of dismissal and restore the cause to the calendar.

Motion denied.

D. A. Knapp, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Victor R. Hansen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

By decision filed February 6, 1930 (285 P. 336, rehearing denied 286 P. 471), the appeal in this case was dismissed, on the authority of another decision of same date in Berg v. Traeger, 285 P. 332. The ground of decision was that this court did not have jurisdiction of the appeal.

In Berg v. Traeger a hearing before the Supreme Court was granted, and that court sustained the right of appeal, and decided that case on the merits of the appeal.

In this case of Stout v. Farwell there was no application for a hearing in the Supreme Court. The judgment of this court became final, and in due course, on April 7, 1930, the remittitur was sent down to the superior court.

Thereafter, on October 3, 1930, appellant filed his notice of motion for an order canceling, as void, the order of dismissal, and that the records of the action be returned to this court, and that the cause be restored to the calendar of this court for determination on the merits.

[1] In accordance with said notice, the motion was presented to the court on the 27th day of October, 1930. As this was more than six months after the time of the order of dismissal, any possible right of appellant under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure may not successfully be asserted. Wheelock v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 601, 227 P. 931. We are thus brought to the only question in the case. That question may be stated thus: When an appellate court erroneously dismisses an appeal, and such dismissal has been ordered upon the sole ground that the court is without jurisdiction of the appeal, is the order void upon its face, and may the court thereafter and at any time, however remote, determine such appeal upon the merits, notwithstanding that the order of dismissal was made, as stated?

[2] We think that when a court of appeal, or the Supreme Court, in an appeal pending before it, judicially determines (however erroneously), that the court is without jurisdiction, and thereupon dismisses the appeal, and such order becomes final by lapse of time, the decision so made becomes the law of the case. In this case if, within the time allowed by law, appellant had applied to the Supreme Court for a hearing, and that court had denied the petition, its decision so made would have been the law of the case; and this result would not be disregarded merely because at a later date and in another action the Supreme Court decided that, under conditions precisely like those upon which this court acted in this case, the court had jurisdiction of the appeal.

[3] If the foregoing conclusion be accepted, as relating to a case in which a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court, the same conclusion should apply where, as in the case at bar, the decision of this court was allowed to become final, to the point where the remittitur was sent down, without any application made for a hearing in the Supreme Court.

[4] It further appears, by suggestion made on the argument of the motion, that appellant made application to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to require this court to assume jurisdiction of the appeal in this case, which application was denied. Counsel stated that the refusal was on the ground that a writ of mandate will not lie to a District Court of Appeal. But in this we think that counsel is mistaken; for in at least one instance the Supreme Court issued a writ of prohibition to this court. People v. District Court of Appeal, 193 Cal. 19, 222 P. 353. If prohibition, then why not mandate, in a proper case?

The motion is denied.

John Kalpakoff was convicted of first degree robbery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

R. E. Parsons, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J.

Appellant and two others were tried together and convicted of the crime of robbery of the first degree, committed as follows: On the 28th day of December, 1929, in the nighttime, the defendants, in a drug store of one G. H. Brown, forcibly took from the possession of Brown the sum of $79. It was shown that appellant at the time of the commission of the crime was armed with a deadly weapon, a 32-caliber revolver.

The "reasons for reversal" as listed at the beginning of the brief are as follows: That the court erred in admitting gun, Exhibit 1; that the court erred in sustaining objection of district attorney to a question propounded to the witness Paul Kalpakoff, brother of appellant; that the decision is contrary to the law and the evidence; that the court erred in overruling an objection of appellant to a question propounded to the witness Lockhard; that the court erred in denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

[1] A trial by jury having been duly waived, the case was tried before the court without a jury. The witness Brown testified that at the time of the robbery he saw a gun in the hand of appellant. A 32-caliber gun was exhibited to the witness, and he identified it as a gun which he saw in the hands of Stupin, one of the other defendants, and this gun was offered and admitted in evidence without objection. The witness identified this gun as being of the approximate size and as having upon it certain rust spots which were like rust spots he had noticed upon the gun in Stupin's hands. This 32-caliber gun was not the one which the witness saw in the hands of Kalpakoff at the time of the robbery, but it was later found in the automobile of appellant at the time appellant was arrested; and three 32-caliber cartridges were, at the same time of arrest, found in the pocketbook of appellant. The court committed no error in admitting in evidence the said gun, Exhibit 1.

er and two other persons called upon Brown at his drug store, this question was asked: "Now will you tell the court, please, what conversation was then had?" The objection made was that the question called for hearsay evidence. It is now claimed that the court erred in sustaining this objection, and that the question was asked for the purpose of impeaching the witness Brown in relation to testimony given by him. It appears in the record that, on cross-examination of Brown, that witness denied that, on the occasion of the visit to his store of Paul Kalpakoff and his mother and said two other persons, he had stated that appellant was not one of the men in his store at the time of the robbery. Appellant's present contention is that the question asked of Paul Kalpakoff, objection to which was sustained by the court, was a proper question for impeachment of Brown's testimony. The question as propounded asked for the conversation in general, in which conversation at least five persons were present; and the answer presumably would have included statements made by persons other than Brown. As the time when the question was asked and the objection and ruling were made, counsel for appellant did not attempt to reframe his question, and did not suggest to the court that he had any purpose of impeachment in asking the question. The court did not err in sustaining the objection.

[3] There is no merit in the contention that the decision of the court was contrary to the law or the evidence. The facts of the robbery are established without dispute, except that appellant claims that the evidence does not sufficiently identify him as being one of the robbers. The testimony of Brown alone is abundantly sufficient to identify appellant. It is true that Brown admitted that on one occasion, when appellant was brought to him by officers, he was uncertain on the subject. "I wasn't sure of myself when Kalpakoff came down in the machine and I wouldn't commit myself." Nevertheless, at the trial he did fully and positively identify appellant, and separately described the different acts of the three men by whom the robbery was committed, and the appellant and his part therein.

[4] During the examination of the people's witness Lockhard, a police officer, it was shown by the witness that he arrested the defendants on December 31, 1929 (three days after the robbery) and at the time they were riding in a Ford roadster and the appellant was driving the car. At this point the record is as follows:

"Q. Did you make an examination of the car after you arrested the defendants? A. I did.

"Q. What did you find in the car?"

At this point Mr. Bird, attorney for the defendant Stupin, objected that he would first like to ascertain whether or not it was a fact that the witness after arresting the defendants left the car unattended for an hour or an hour and a half. Mr. Laudry, attorney for appellant, said: "I interpose the objection I think it should be asked what he found in the car if the arrest had to do with the particular charge." And also he objected that the matter was too remote in point of time, there being a three-day interval between the time of the robbery and the time of arrest.

"The Court: I am assuming from the fact Mr. Crail (deputy district attorney) took up the question he anticipated the evidence would be the gun was found in the car, perhaps the evidence will disclose it was this Exhibit 1 which was found.

"Mr. Laudry: I think that is the fact.

"The Court: If that is correct, in view of the testimony previously given, I don't think it makes any difference when it was found as far as length of time is concerned.

"Mr. Laudry: Of course, the gun in the evidence previously given has not been clearly identified other than a rusted gun.

"Mr. Crail: Will you stipulate People's Exhibit 1 was found in the car? Are you gentlemen willing to stipulate to that?

"Mr. Laudry: Oh, I think the officer better testify.

"Q. By Mr. Crail: What, if anything, did you find in the car, Officer? A. I found this revolver in the car.

"Q. Referring now to People's Exhibit 1? A. Yes, sir."

Then followed testimony showing that, besides this gun found in the car, there were three 32-caliber cartridges found in the pocketbook of appellant.

On the foregoing record we are of the opinion that the court did not commit any error in overruling the objection to the question asking the officer what he found in the car.

[5] The final point presented by appellant is that the court erred in denying his motion for a new trial. The argument is that appellant was entitled to a new trial by reason of the facts presented by him in affidavits concerning newly discovered evidence of witnesses in further support of the alibi which he had attempted to prove by numerous witnesses during the trial. The court found that the proposed evidence was merely cumulative, and that the proposed additional witnesses could with reasonable diligence have been discovered prior to the trial and produced at the trial. In this ruling there was no abuse of discretion and no error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MARKS, J.

Appellant was accused of the crime of murder by an information filed by the district attorney of Riverside county. The jury found him guilty of manslaughter, and after the pronouncement of judgment he prosecuted this appeal.

Appellant relies upon four grounds for a reversal of the judgment as follows: That the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce a purported confession of the defendant, no corpus delicti having been proven; that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce into evidence parts of a broken bottle; and that a remark by the court, made during the trial, was prejudicial to defendant.

The evidence in this case discloses that the deceased, Bartola Ramirez, an old man of the age of about 80 years, lived with Margarita Perla in the city of Corono. On the evening of August 23, 1930, appellant, Bonifacio Reyes, and several others were engaged in a drinking bout at the home of deceased. They left early in the evening. Between 3:30 and 4 o'clock a. m., August 24th, deceased and Margarita Perla were awakened by persons knocking on the rear door of the house and on the windows. Deceased told those creating the disturbance to go away, but it was continued, and an effort was made to open the rear door. Deceased then arose from his bed, armed himself with a knife, and went out of the rear door of the house, saying he would chase the disturbers away. Shortly after he left the house, Margarita Perla heard sounds which resembled the breaking of a bottle and of glass falling to the ground. Deceased re-entered the house and had a deep wound upon his head. Margarita Perla went to the rear door and saw appellant, Bonifacio Reyes, and others running away. Later she saw pieces of broken glass upon the ground and a broken bottle near the door. Deceased was taken to the county hospital of Riverside county on August 28, 1930, and died on August 30, 1930. One of the attending physicians testified that in his opinion deceased "died from cerebral concussion with compression due to a—following a blow on the top of the head."

Appellant was taken into custody on August 30, 1930, and in the presence of several witnesses stated that he had had a fight with Bartola Ramirez and had hit him over the head with a beer bottle.

[1, 2] We believe that the statement of the facts in this case effectively disposes of the first two assignments of error, namely, that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, and that the court erred in permitting the people to introduce the extrajudicial statements of appellant that he had engaged in a fight with the deceased and had struck him over the head with a beer bottle. The evidence shows that the deceased came to his death through an unlawful act of some one other than himself. This sufficiently established the corpus delicti to permit the introduction of the admissions of appellant. People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426. The evidence is sufficient to support the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court.

[3, 4] Appellant further complains because the court permitted the people to introduce in evidence pieces of the bottle which were picked up near the rear door of the residence of deceased. The witness, Margarita Perla, identified these pieces of glass as the same ones that she saw on the ground near the rear door of deceased's house shortly after he was injured. This sufficiently identified the glass to permit it to be introduced in evidence. The weight and value to be given to this evidence was to be determined by the jury and not by this court.

[5] For the first time appellant now complains of a remark made by the trial court in the presence and hearing of the jury, and maintains that it was prejudicial error. This contention was not made during the trial, nor was the remark assigned as error in the court below. The remark complained of was a question asked by the trial court of a witness whether a certain happening occurred during or after the fight. Appellant maintains that the court assumed in this question that there had been a fight. In cases of this kind a party relying upon alleged misconduct should promptly call it to the attention of the trial court and assign it as error. As appellant failed to do this, he should not be heard to complain of this purported error here. People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256; People v. Weeks (Cal. App.) 286 P. 514.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DRIGGS.

Cr. 1142.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 7, 1931.

1. Criminal law 🔑1134(6).

Where court granted new trial for insufficiency of evidence, court's statements regarding other matters could not be considered on appeal.

This was true, since, when the cause is brought to the appellate court, argument as to what the trial court may have thought as given utterance by the words used before final action is taken cannot be considered, unless directly in mind with subsequent orders made, and hence that trial court was of the opinion that new trial should be granted because prosecution proceeded, with consent of defendant, without presence of twelve jurors after one became too ill to act, did not present question for appellate court.

2. Criminal law 🔑1156(2).

Court's discretion in granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence is conclusive on appellate court, unless abused.

3. Criminal law 🔑935(1).

Under evidence, granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence to support verdict of guilty of assault with deadly weapon held not abuse of discretion.

The evidence disclosed that the defendant, as a railroad police officer, fired revolver over heads of persons to cause them to desist from stealing ride on train, and that bullet struck and injured an unobserved man 1,200 feet from defendant.

4. Negligence 🔑144.

To constitute "criminal negligence," there must enter into act some measure of wantonness or flagrant or reckless disregard of safety of others, or willful indifference (Pen. Code, § 20).

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

F. P. Driggs was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty of assault with a deadly weapon. From an order granting new trial, the People appeal.

Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

The defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, in an information filed by the district attorney of the county of Butte. Upon the trial, a verdict of guilty of assault with a deadly weapon was returned by the jury. The defendant thereupon moved for a new trial, which was granted. From the order granting a new trial, the people prosecute this appeal.

The argument of counsel directs our attention, first, to the fact that, while twelve jurors were sworn to try this cause, one of the jurors became too ill to act, and the attorneys, together with the defendant, consented that the trial might proceed with the presence of only eleven jurors, and that the verdict rendered by such a jury is regular and valid.

[1] The contention on the part of the people is advanced that, by the recent amendment to section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution, whereby it is provided that a defendant in a felony case may waive trial by jury, the right and authority is necessarily included to waive trial by a jury of twelve persons. In support of this contention is the case of Patton et al. v. United States, 281 U. S. 276, 50 S. Ct. 253, 74 L. Ed. 854, decided April 14, 1930, where, in a very exhaustive opinion, all the cases from the different states having to do with the question of the waiver of trial by jury, and of the waiver by the defendant to be tried by a less number than twelve, are carefully collected and considered, and the conclusion reached that, as the constitutional provisions with respect to the right of trial by jury are not a part of the frame of government, but only a guarantee to the accused of the right of such trial, it is a right which a defendant may waive either in whole or in part. But, however interesting this question may be, it is not an important factor in this case. The fact that the judge of the trial court gave this question considerable attention, and apparently was of the opinion that a new trial should be granted by reason of the fact that the trial was allowed to proceed without the presence of twelve jurors, it is what the court did, and not what the judge of the court stated during the course of the trial, that determines the course of our inquiry upon this appeal, as there is a vital distinction between what the judge of a trial court may say and what the trial court actually does. In other words, it is the legitimate privilege of a trial court, at the conclusion of an argument upon motion for new trial, to state his views concerning the case, and then, upon fuller and maturer deliberation, come to the conclusion that a different order should be made, and then to enter the same. When the cause is brought to an appellate court, argument as to what the trial court may have thought, as given utterance by the words used before final action is taken, cannot be considered, unless directly in line with the subsequent orders made. Thus, if an order is made granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, if the opinion of the trial court points out wherein the evidence is insufficient, it is an aid to the appellate court in determining whether or not the discretion of the trial court has or has not been abused. But, if the opinion contains expressions foreign to the order actually entered, the order entered only is controlling here.

By the clerk's transcript of this cause we find that, after the motion for new trial had been definitely submitted, the following order was entered (omitting title of court and cause):

"This case came on for hearing on motion for new trial, before Hon. H. D. Gregory, Judge; Present: Court Reporter McCallum; Assistant District Attorney Rothe, for The People, and George F. Jones, for the defendant. The defendant is present in court with his counsel. Arguments on motion for new trial are resumed by Assistant District Attorney Rothe, followed by Attorney Jones, for the defendant. The court now reviews the points brought out in counsel's arguments, and finds that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict. The court orders that a new trial be granted. Assistant District Attorney Rothe now makes a motion to appeal from the judgment of the court. The court now sets Monday, September 29, 1930, as the date of the new trial. The defendant to go on a new bail bond.

"Attest: A true copy.

"C. F. Belding, Clerk.

"By Beora Snow, Deputy Clerk."

[2, 3] For the purposes of deciding this case, only one question is left for us to consider, and that is, in making the order set forth, did the trial court abuse its discretion? This court, in People v. Petros, 25 Cal. App. 236, 143 P. 246, 247, used the following language which is pertinent here: "The rule is thoroughly settled that: 'The granting or denying a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, rests so fully in the discretion of the trial court that its action is conclusive upon this court, unless it appears that there has been an abuse of such discretion' "—citing Domico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 413, 35 P. 1024; Warner v. Thomas, etc., Works, 105 Cal. 411, 38 P. 960, 964; Eidinger v. Sigwart, 13 Cal. App. 667, 110 P. 521, and cases there cited. "Indeed, it has repeatedly been said in the cases that the action of a trial court in granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, 'is so far a matter within its discretion that, if there is any appreciable conflict in the evidence it is not open to review' "—citing a number of cases. See, also, the long list of cases appended to a note to section 1181 of the Penal Code, Kerr's Cyc. Codes of California. The cases there cited are too numerous to be set forth herein. See, also, People v. Ray, 91 Cal. App. 781, 267 P. 593, and cases there cited.

The facts as disclosed by the record are to the effect that the defendant was a railroad police officer in the service of the Western Pacific Railroad Company; that it was his duty to guard trains, and especially freight trains, against all persons attempting to steal rides thereon. In this capacity the defendant was one of the police officers guarding a freight train as it was pulling out of the yards in the city of Oroville; that at the time in question he was riding on top of one of the freight cars, constituting a portion of the train; that he noticed a number of men on the right of way belonging to the railroad company, who started forward as if to board the train, and, in order to warn them and cause them to desist from such act, he drew a revolver and fired over their heads; by some mischance the bullet from the revolver so fired by the defendant, in its course, struck a man by the name of Lake, who was some 1,200 feet away from the defendant, and unobserved and unnoticed by him; the bullet, striking Lake, caused serious, as well as what appears to be permanent, injuries. The whole trial revolved around the question as to whether the shooting of Lake by the defendant was purely accidental, and whether the defendant, by his conduct in shooting over the heads of the few men who were about to board the train, was guilty of criminal negligence in not observing that there were other persons within the possible range of the shot fired by him. The distance of Lake from the defendant would very readily lead to the conclusion that the striking of Lake by the bullet was purely accidental, but the question still remains as to the character of the defendant in firing the shot, which was a question of fact for the jury.

An examination of the testimony shows that two conclusions might readily be reached: One, that there was criminal negligence; the other, that there was no criminal negligence, and that the result of the shooting was purely accidental, and, however civilly liable the defendant might be, there was no criminal responsibility. It is also apparent from a reading of the record that the jury might very readily be influenced by the seriousness of the wound inflicted upon Lake, and brought in a verdict of assault with a deadly weapon, based, in part, upon such considerations.

[4] This short summary of the case shows that this court has no alternative but to affirm the order granting a new trial. As the cause must go back for another hearing, it is incumbent for us to call attention to at least one other point urged by the respondent relative to one of the instructions given to the jury. The record shows that the trial court gave to the jury as one of its instructions section 20 of the Penal Code, reading as follows: "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence." And then, as a definition of "criminal negligence," the following: "The words 'neglect,' 'negligence,' 'negligent,' and 'negligently' import a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission, as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns." Section 7. Though found in the Penal Code, this definition of "negligence" is only of an act which fixes civil liability; it is the definition of the kind of act which fixes responsibility upon, for instance, drivers of automobiles, where no criminal element whatever is involved. In order to constitute criminal negligence, there must enter into the act some measure of wantonness or flagrant or reckless disregard of the safety of others, or willful indifference. If no one of these elements enter into the act, the person charged cannot be held guilty of criminal negligence.

When the court attempted to instruct the jury on the subject of negligence, the instruction should have been so framed as to advise the jury as to the kind of negligence characterized as "criminal" by section 20 of the Penal Code. As to the use of the term "criminal negligence," and the meaning thereof, as found in different statutes, we may refer to the long list of cases found in volume 2, page 1750, of Words and Phrases, First Series, and volume 1, Second series, page 1153, of Words and Phrases.

As other alleged errors assigned by respondent may not characterize a subsequent trial, we do not deem it necessary to further extend this opinion.

The order of the trial court is affirmed.

In re ALEXANDER'S ESTATE.

ALEXANDER v. KINSEY.

Civ. 4265.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 5, 1931.

1. Wills 🔑53(6).

Extreme age, together with mental and physical weakness, may be considered in determining testator's testamentary capacity.

2. Wills 🔑55(1).

Evidence supported findings to effect testator lacked testamentary capacity to execute will.

The evidence disclosed that testator at time of executing will disinheriting relatives was 97 years of age; that he incorrectly signed his name to will. There was no evidence that he understood and appreciated nature, value, or location of his property, or that he knew names or places of residence of his brothers and sisters in Europe on whom he sought to bestow legacies. There was also evidence of uniform course of eccentric and peculiar acts, incoherent language, and peculiar conduct.

3. Evidence 🔑474(4).

Opinions of nonexpert witnesses who are intimate acquaintances are competent regarding sanity of testator, when accompanied with pertinent facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10).

4. Appeal and error 🔑971(2).

Trial court's determination of whether witness testifying regarding testator's sanity is intimate acquaintance of testator will not be disturbed on appeal, except for abuse of discretion.

5. Wills 🔑53(2).

Evidence of testator's mental status, together with appearance, conduct, acts, habits, and conversation, before and after execution of will, are admissible, where indicating mental condition when executing will.

6. Wills 53(1).

When testator's sanity is under investigation, broad scope of examination should be allowed.

7. Evidence 🔑474(4).

One whose acquaintance with testator of year and half extended back to within month or two of time of making will could testify regarding testator's sanity.

8. Evidence 🔑474(4).

One living next door to testator more than year could testify regarding testator's sanity.

9. Evidence 🔑474(4).

One who did not see testator for 2 years before execution of will, but who lived near him prior thereto and saw him frequently after making of will, could testify regarding sanity.

10. Evidence 🔑474(4).

One who moved into house owned by testator several months after making of will and saw him almost every day for over a year could testify regarding testator's sanity.

11. Wills 🔑54(1).

On issue of testator's mental condition will contestant could refute charges of cruelty contained in testator's complaint for divorce filed after making of will disinheriting wife.

12. Wills 🔑54(1).

In will contest, complaint for divorce charging cruelty, filed less than year after making of will, held admissible to show state of testator's mind.

13. Wills 🔑54(1).

Either oral or written declarations of testator reasonably tending to prove mental status at time of making will are competent evidence for that purpose.

14. Trial 🔑296(2).

Instruction on lack of testamentary capacity, held not misleading, in view of other instructions.

The instruction stated that, if jury found testator was of unsound mind upon subject affecting nature and extent of property, or as to consequences of bequeathing his property to a nonrelative, they must then assume he lacked testamentary capacity entitling him to make valid will, even though he might be of sound mind upon other subjects.

15. Wills 🔑50.

If testator did not know nature or extent of property or effect of disinheriting wife, then will was invalid, even if testator were otherwise rational.

16. Wills 🔑330(2).

Instruction that will, which is product of insane delusions regarding testator's wife, is invalid, held warranted by evidence.

The evidence disclosed that testator made many unfounded charges of cruelty and oppression against his wife in divorce complaint and otherwise, and that he feared she would poison him.

17. Wills 🔑53(2).

Testator's unsoundness of mind when executing will may be established by evidence of unsound mind existing either before or after execution of will.

18. Evidence 🔑67(2).

Proof of unsound mind emanating from permanent and progressive mental disease such as senile dementia will be presumed to continue, absent evidence to contrary.

19. Wills 🔑330(1).

Instruction, if jury found testator was in such condition either "physically" or mentally that he did not know effect of instrument, will was void, held not misleading.

The instruction should not have misled jury, because they were clearly instructed that only issue for them to consider was that of mental soundness of testator, and that it was soundness or unsoundness of mind and not any particular state of bodily health that must control jury's judgment.

20. Trial ⚷235(2).

Instruction that inferences naturally drawn from facts which are actually established by proof are entitled to be considered as part of evidence held proper (Code Civ. Proc. § 1958).

21. Wills ⚷53(9).

When soundness of testator's mind is issue in will contest, unreasonableness of provisions of will may be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Application by N. C. Kinsey for the probate of the will of Barney Alexander, also called B. Alexander, deceased, contested by Pauline Alexander. From an adverse judgment, proponent appeals.

Affirmed.

A. Q. Lomba, of Oakland, and E. L. Webber, of Napa, for appellant.

Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, Thomas C. Anglim, of Napa, and Philip Selig, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying the petition to probate a will on the ground of lack of testamentary capacity.

Barney Alexander died February 25, 1929, in Napa county, aged 99 years. He left surviving him a widow 60 years of age and several unnamed heirs who reside in Europe. He was possessed of an estate of small value, consisting entirely of community property. At the time of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, he was without means. She then owned a few hundred dollars. They acquired a small mercantile business which prospered solely through her economy and personal management. In the course of their 30 years of married life they thus accumulated a few thousand dollars. The spouses lived in comparative harmony except for the period of a few months in 1928, during which time they were separated by domestic trouble. At this time Barney Alexander commenced a suit for divorce against his wife on the ground of cruelty. They were soon reconciled, and the action was dismissed. They afterwards lived together until the occasion of his death. Several witnesses testified Mrs. Alexander always treated her husband with kindness and consideration. There were no children as issue of the marriage.

July 22, 1927, Barney Alexander executed a will, by the terms of which he gave the bulk of his estate to the proponent, N. C. Kinsey, of Oakland, who was a mere acquaintance designated as "a friend." The testator and his chief legatee were not intimate friends. For a brief period, some 14 years prior to his death, the testator was employed by the proponent to repair garments sold by him in a secondhand business. No other relationship existed between them. They never visited at the homes of each other. The only other bequests provided for in the will were a gift of $1 to his wife, and the sum of $100 to each of "my relatives who may survive me, namely brothers and sisters now in Europe." Mr. Kinsey was appointed executor and was authorized to serve as such without bonds.

The will was filed for probate. The widow contested it on the grounds of lack of due execution, undue influence, and unsound mind. The cause was tried with a jury. At the close of the evidence, on motion of the proponent, the issue of undue influence and lack of due execution were withdrawn from the jury. A verdict was rendered finding the testator to be of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the will. A judgment was accordingly entered refusing to admit the will to probate. From this judgment the proponent has appealed.

A reversal of the judgment is sought on the grounds that (1) the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and judgment to the effect that the testator was of unsound mind, (2) the court erred in admitting opinion testimony respecting the sanity of the testator by those who were not shown to be intimate acquaintances, and (3) the court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury.

The findings and judgment are abundantly supported by the record. It is quite evident the deceased lacked testamentary capacity. He was 97 years of age when he executed the will. He incorrectly signed his name to the will as "B. Axander." There is no evidence that he understood and appreciated the nature, value, or location of his property or that he even knew the names or places of residence of his brothers and sisters in Europe upon whom he sought to bestow legacies. The evidence with respect to his knowledge of the provisions of his will is very unsatisfactory. The attorney who drew the will and the attesting witnesses testify merely that he answered the inquiries regarding the instrument and his desire to have it signed by the witnesses with his assent, implied from his use of the single word "yes." The will was not read in the presence of the witnesses. The testator made no affirmative statement in regard to the will or its execution from which we may ascertain his mental capacity or determine whether he knew the nature of his act or appreciated the manner of disposing of his property. The provisions of the will were unnatural. He practically disinherited his wife and relatives and gave the bulk of his property to a mere acquaintance to whom he was under no obligation, and who, in reply to an alleged statement of the testator that "I will never forget you—what you did for me," said, "I don't know what I did for you." The testator was extremely old, illiterate, enfeebled, and eccentric. He went about bareheaded, disheveled, and filthy, with his shoes unlaced and his trousers unbuttoned. One occasion he was seen walking down the street in this condition carrying a chamber in either hand. In warm weather he sometimes wore several coats at the same time, or an overcoat. He chased his neighbors' poultry. He dug out their shrubbery and transplanted the bushes in his own yard. He broke the pickets from their fences and gates. He recklessly started grass fires in dangerous proximity to buildings. When reproved for such conduct he cunningly claimed he thought it was his own property, mumbled and muttered in a maudlin fashion, or laughed in a defiant and imbecilic way. He was frequently unintelligible in his conversation and impossible to understand. He picked up and smoked cigars stubs taken from the gutter. He gathered and ate refuse from garbage cans. He collected and carried home in sacks entrails from poultry for the purpose of trying out the fat with which to cook his food. He stormed about the store with a stick, threatening the customers and sometimes throwing the merchandise into the street. He refused to eat food prepared or cooked by any one but himself, claiming that he feared his wife and others would poison him. A dozen witnesses testified to facts and circumstances which strongly indicate he was afflicted with senile dementia, and that he lacked testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of his will.

[1, 2] It is true that neither old age nor physical and mental weakness will necessarily invalidate a will. Extreme age, however, together with mental and physical weakness, are circumstances which should be considered together with all other facts surrounding the execution of a will to determine whether the testator possessed testamentary capacity. 1 Alexander on Wills, 481, § 355; 28 R. C. L. 94, § 44. Extreme age of the testator, the unnatural terms of the will, the incorrect spelling of his name, the disinheriting of his wife, the failure to indicate the nature, value, or location of his property, his failure to name or give the places of residence of any of his brothers or sisters, a uniform course of eccentric and peculiar acts, incoherent language, and peculiar conduct furnish ample evidence to support the findings and judgment in this case to the effect that the testator was of unsound mind and lacked testamentary capacity to execute a valid will.

In the course of the trial several witnesses, after relating circumstances similar to some of the foregoing facts upon which they based their opinions, were permitted, over the objections of the proponent, to assert that they considered the testator irrational. It is contended this constituted error for the reasons that the witnesses were not qualified to testify as intimate acquaintances pursuant to section 1870, subdivision 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the facts upon which their opinions are founded were too remote.

[3] These assignments of error are without merit. The opinions of nonexpert witnesses, regarding the sanity of a testator, who may be classified as intimate acquaintances, are competent when accompanied with pertinent facts or circumstances which are related by the witnesses. Sec. 1870, subd. 10, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Baker, 176 Cal. 430, 439, 168 P. 881; 26 Cal. Jur. 747, § 89; 40 Cyc. 1038; 1 Alexander on Wills, 519, § 385; Page on Wills, 464, § 390.

[4] The question as to whether the facts create a relationship between the witness and the testator which would be considered an intimate acquaintance is largely within the discretion of the trial court. The solution of this problem will not be disturbed on appeal except for an abuse of discretion. Estate of McKenna, 143 Cal. 580, 584, 77 P. 461; In re Wax, 106 Cal. 343, 351, 39 P. 624; Page on Wills, 464, § 390.

[5, 6] The proof of the sanity of the testator and of the facts upon which his state of mind depends are not necessarily confined to the exact time of the execution of the will. Evidence of the testator's mental status, together with his appearance, conduct, acts, habits, and conversation, both before and after the execution of the will, are admissible so long as they have a reasonable tendency to indicate his mental condition at the time of the execution of the will. Estate of Baker, 176 Cal. 430, 438, 168 P. 881; 1 Alexander on Wills, 487, § 358; 26 Cal. Jur. 747, § 89. In the text of California Jurisprudence last cited it is said: "An opinion as to the decedent's condition at a time antedating execution is not to be excluded on the ground of remoteness." When the sanity of a testator is under investigation, a broad scope of examination should be allowed, for the reason that the evidence of mental derangement is frequently subtle and exceedingly difficult to prove. This is particularly true when the characteristics of the malady indicate a permanent and progressing mental disease. This is the nature of senile dementia. The weight and sufficiency of such evidence is left entirely with the jury.

[7-10] In the present case the four witnesses whose opinions as to the testator's sanity are assigned as error were sufficiently qualified as intimate acquaintances, and the facts which they related were not too remote to entitle them to be admitted in evidence. Mr. Hudson testified that he knew the testator and his wife at Calistoga "a year and a half"; that he "lived neighbors to them," and that he saw them "practically every day." The will was made in July, 1927. The testator died in February, 1929, just a year and seven months after the execution of his will. The acquaintance of this witness Hudson therefore extended back to within a month or two of the time of the making of the will.

Mrs. Taylor lived next door to the Alexanders in Calistoga. She testified: "I have known them since he moved to Calistoga a year ago in the spring." She says she saw him "every two or three days," during that period.

Sarah Brawner was an attendant for five years at the Napa State Hospital. She testified that she was acquainted with the Alexanders "from 1919 * * * until October before he passed away." For a year and a half prior to July, 1925, she lived within a block of them, and claims that she saw him "practically every day" during that period of time. It is true that for nearly 2 years immediately before the execution of the will, she did not see him. After the making of the will, she saw him frequently to the time of his death.

Emma Pauer moved into one of the houses owned by the Alexanders at Oakland. This was in November, 1927, three or four months after the execution of the will. She testified: "I lived there over a year. * * * I used to see him * * * almost every day."

In holding that these witnesses were qualified to testify as intimate acquaintances regarding the sanity of the testator, and that their evidence was not too remote, the court did not abuse its discretion.

[11-13] It was not error to permit the contestant to refute the charges of cruelty contained in his complaint for divorce which was filed in August, 1928. The complaint was received in evidence by stipulation. It contained many declarations of harsh and cruel treatment on the part of the contestant. The pleading was verified by Mr. Alexander. It was filed less than a year after the execution of the will. Unfounded declarations of cruelty made by a testator about the time of the execution of his will may tend to prove his mental condition. Among the symptoms which indicate a deranged mind are the presence of delusions of oppression and persecution on the part of friends and relatives. The complaint, with its declarations of cruelty, was admissible to show the state of mind of the testator. As proof of the fallacy of these charges, it was also proper to permit the contestant to refute them seriatim. Either oral or written declarations of a testator, which may reasonably tend to prove his mental status at the time of the execution of his will, are competent evidence for that purpose. Estate of Thomas, 155 Cal. 488, 494, 101 P. 798; Estate of Snowball, 157 Cal. 301, 308, 107 P. 598; 28 R. C. L. 92, § 42.

[14-15] The appellant assigns, as error, the giving of half a dozen instructions involving the issue regarding the sanity of the testator. While we are unable to approve the language of some of these challenged instructions, we are of the opinion that they are not prejudicial, since the jury was elsewhere fully and fairly charged regarding the same elements contained therein.

The first of these instructions, in effect, informed the jury that, if they found that Barney Alexander was of unsound mind upon the subject affecting the nature and extent of his property, or as to the consequences of disinheriting his wife and bequeathing his property to a nonrelative, they must then assume he lacked testamentary capacity entitling him to make a valid will, even though he might be of sound mind upon other subjects. It is contended this instruction is "confusing," for the reason that it specifies only two elements affecting the sanity of the testator. The language of this instruction is not as clear as it might have been. In this connection the jury was further instructed that every presumption is in favor of the validity of the will; that the testator is presumed to be of sound mind; that the burden is on the contestant to show that the testator was of unsound mind at the very time of the execution of the will; that the law solemnly assures every one the absolute right to dispose of his property by will; that this is a valuable incident to the ownership of property, and that a person of sound mind has a perfect right to make an unjust, unreasonable, or even a cruel will; that neither the extreme age of the testator nor the fact that he cut off his wife with a bequest of only $1 would alone invalidate the will; that one must possess testamentary capacity and be of sound mind in order to make a valid will; that the possession of testamentary capacity means the maker of a will must comprehend the nature and purpose of the act in which he is about to engage; that he must appreciate the character and extent of the property he proposes to devise; that he must be able to name and identify the individuals and understand the relationship which he bears to those who would naturally become the objects of his bounty.

In view of the numerous clear instructions which were given to the jury with relation to the issue of insanity, we are convinced the jury were not misled or confused by the challenged instructions. It may reasonably be construed to mean that, if the jury found the testator to be of unsound mind to the extent that he did not know the nature or extent of his property, or that he was of unsound mind to the extent that he did not comprehend the effect of disinheriting his wife by giving the bulk of his property to a stranger who would not naturally be entitled to his bounty, then the will would be invalid, even if the testator were sound and rational with respect to other transactions. This is a correct statement of the law.

[16] Evidently the appellant does not place great reliance upon his second challenged instruction. It is not quoted in his brief nor criticized beyond saying: "This instruction is confusing and * * * is too broad in its application to the facts in this case." It is inartistically drawn, but instructs the jury in effect that: "If you believe * * * Barney Alexander was laboring under an insane delusion affecting his wife," his will executed as a result of such false belief would be invalid. This instruction should be construed with relation to the one immediately preceding it, which reads in part: "It is essential that the testator understand fully the nature of the act (of making his will) and its effect, and be able to comprehend and appreciate the claims (upon his bounty) which he should regard. * * * No insane delusion shall influence his will in disposing of his property." These instructions may reasonably be construed to mean that a will which is the product of insane delusions regarding the wife of the testator who would naturally be entitled to his bounty would therefore be invalid. This instruction is warranted on the theory that the record contains evidence that Mr. Alexander made many unfounded charges of cruelty and oppression against his wife in the divorce complaint and otherwise, and for the reason that he feared she would poison him.

[17, 18] The third instruction which is challenged merely informs the jury that it is unnecessary to prove by direct evidence that the testator was of unsound mind at the very time of the execution of the will, provided that fact is established by evidence, of unsound mind existing either before or after the actual execution of the will from which it may be reasonably inferred he was incompetent when he executed the instrument. This is a reasonable construction of the charge. It correctly states the law. It would be unreasonable to require proof of incompetency at the exact time of the execution of a will. Such proof might be impossible to secure. If this were required, and an escaped inmate of an insane asylum were to draw his own holographic will with no one else about, it would be impossible to prove its invalidity. The proof of an unsound mind emanating from a permanent and progressive mental disease such as senile dementia will be presumed to continue in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Proof of the existence of such permanent mental disorder shortly before or after the execution of a will may warrant the inference that the disease existed at the very time of making the will, and that the instrument is therefore invalid.

[19] The fourth instruction advises the jury that, if they find "Barney Alexander was in such condition either physically or mentally that he did not know, realize or understand the purport, meaning, significance or effect of said instrument," the will would then become void. The word "physically," as it appears in the instruction, seems meaningless, and therefore harmless. Physical weakness contributes to mental weakness. The contestant evidently intended to say that, if the testator was ignorant of the nature, meaning, or effect of his will, it would be void, regardless of whether that lack of understanding came from insanity or mental debility resulting from deterioration caused by age and physical infirmity. This instruction should not have misled the jury, for they were clearly instructed that the only issue for them to consider was that of the mental soundness of the testator. The court charged the jury: "You are instructed that it is soundness or unsoundness of mind and not any particular state of bodily health that must control your judgment." We are of the opinion this instruction was therefore not misleading or prejudicial.

[20] The next instruction merely declares the self-evident rule that inferences naturally drawn from facts which are actually established by proof are entitled to be considered as a part of the evidence. Section 1958, Code Civ. Proc. This may not be controverted.

[21] Finally the jury were instructed, in effect, that, if they found the provisions of the will to be unnatural in the disposition of the property, that fact might be considered in determining whether it was the product of an unsound mind.

This instruction is criticized by the appellant in the following language: "This court has * * * held that a person may make an unnatural and cruel will. * * * This instruction is (therefore) erroneous. * * *" It is true that a testator who possesses a sound mind may legally make a cruel or unjust will. The appellant overlooks the fact that the sole issue in this case is the testator's sanity. The rule is firmly established that, when the soundness of the testator's mind is an issue in the contest of a will, the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the provisions of the will may be considered with all the other facts and circumstances of the case in determining the question of testamentary capacity. Markell C. Baer, Port Atty., City of Oakland, amicus curiæ.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, city of Oakland, entered after an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint.

The plaintiff sought to recover for personal injuries and property damage alleged to have been caused by a motortruck owned and operated by defendant, city of Oakland. Paragraph IV of the complaint contains an allegation that the collision was caused by a dangerous and defective mechanical condition of said motortruck, to wit, a broken spring, which rendered the truck unmanageable; together with allegations of knowledge for a long time and neglect to remedy such condition within a reasonable time. These allegations are conceded by respondent to be sufficient to bring the case within section 2 of Statutes of 1923, p. 675, if an automobile is within the class of property covered by that section. But it is contended by respondent that under the rule of statutory construction, ejusdem generis, that statute refers only to real property, and cannot include the case of an automobile operated on the public streets.

The section in question reads: "Counties, municipalities and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property in all cases where the governing or managing board of such county, municipality, school district, or other board, officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition of any such street, highway, building, grounds, works or property and failed or neglected, for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice * * * to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition."

[1-4] It is respondent's contention that the general word "property," following as it does the words "public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works," must take its color from them, and can only apply to other classes of real property not therein specifically enumerated under the doctrine of ejusdem generis.

"The doctrine of 'ejusdem generis' simply means that where general and specific words relating to the same things are associated together they take color from each other, and the general words are restricted to a sense analogous to that of the less general." 23 Cal. Jur. p. 755. But "the doctrine of ejusdem generis is but a rule of construction to aid in ascertaining the meaning of the legislature, and may be used to carry out but not to defeat the legislative intent." 23 Cal. Jur. p. 756; Matter of La Societe Francaise, 123 Cal. 525, 56 P. 458, 787.

In this case the section above quoted contains within itself a strong indication that the word "property" was not intended to have a restricted meaning. We have intentionally italicized the word "property" in the places in which it occurs in section 2, Statutes of 1923, p. 675. In the first instance its meaning is not restricted. It imposes a liability "for injuries to persons and property." Clearly the liability is for injuries to property of any character, real or personal. Separated from the first place of its occurrence by only fifteen words it is used again. In its second use we are asked to hold that it has an entirely different and more limited meaning. To do so would require some stronger reason than a rule of construction which is merely an aid in ascertaining the legislative intent. It seems unlikely that the legislature would have used the same word in such close juxtaposition with such widely different meanings. "It is a well-established rule of construction that when a word or phrase has been given a particular scope or meaning in one part or portion of a law it shall be given the same scope and meaning in other parts or portions of the law and particularly of the same section thereof." Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Woodhams, 29 Cal. App. 359, 360, 156 P. 62, 64. We are satisfied that the word "property" in this section is broad enough to cover the case of a motor truck in a dangerous or defective condition. Cf. Huff v. Compton City Grammar School District, 92 Cal. App. 44, 267 P. 918; Dawson v. Tulare Union High School, 98 Cal. App. 138, 276 P. 424.

Paragraph V of the complaint reads: "That at all times herein mentioned the City of Oakland, a municipal corporation, was and now is the owner of, maintained and operated a certain municipal air port located within the corporate limits of said city, and in the maintenance of said air port said corporation was accustomed to, and did make a charge for those who used or accepted accommodations therein; that at the time the injury in question was sustained, said defendant, Lawrin Garrett (the driver of the truck) was engaged in the improving, maintaining, building and constructing of the said municipal air port."

[5] By these allegations appellant seeks to hold the city of Oakland under the common-law liability imposed upon a municipal corporation when it is acting in a proprietary, as distinguished from a governmental, capacity. The general distinction between the two functions of a city is thus stated in Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 487, 488, 163 P. 670, 674, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106:

"Under the theory of the common law, that the municipality is protected from liability only while exercising the delegated functions of sovereignty, the governmental powers of a city are those pertaining to the making and enforcing of police regulations, to prevent crime, to preserve the public health, to prevent fires, the caring for the poor, and the education of the young. And in the performance of these functions all buildings and instrumentalities connected therewith come under the application of the principle. City of Kokomo v. Loy [185 Ind. 18] 112 N. E. 994.

"But it is of course true that modern cities and towns enter upon many forms of activity, operate utilities for the benefit of the inhabitants, and provide many means for the easing or improving of the condition of the people that were never dreamed of at common law. Nevertheless the uniform holding as to all such activities on principles manifestly just to the people themselves is that no matter how beneficial they may be in a general sense to the inhabitants of the municipality, unless they are governmental in their essence, the municipality's conduct in managing them is controlled by the same rules of liability that apply to an individual. Thus, while schoolhouses, city halls, jails, fire houses, are with much uniformity held to be instrumentalities for governmental purposes, no such rule applies to other buildings constructed by a municipality, though for the benefit, convenience, or advantage of its people. * * *

"The cases so holding with reference to municipal water plants and their structures, and gas plants and their structures, are so numerous as not even to call for specific citation. The same rule is universally applied to market houses built by the municipality and maintained for the convenience of the people."

We have no hesitancy in deciding that in the conduct of an airport the municipality is acting in a proprietary capacity. An airport falls naturally into the same classification as such public utilities as electric light, gas, water, and transportation systems, which are universally classed as proprietary. Its nearest analogy is perhaps found in docks and wharves. "An airport with its beacons, landing fields, runways, and hangars is analogous to a harbor with its lights, wharves and docks; the one is the landing place and haven of ships that navigate the water, the other of those that navigate the air." Dysart v. St. Louis, 321 Mo. 514, 11 S.W.(2d) 1045, 1049, 62 A. L. R. 762.

"When a municipal corporation maintains a public wharf, and charges toll or wharfage to the owners of vessels making use of the wharf, it is liable to the same extent as an individual wharf-owner." 19 R. C. L. p. 1134; 43 C. J. p. 1175.

We are satisfied that the allegations of paragraph V above quoted are sufficient, if proved, to establish that in operating the airport the city of Oakland acted in a proprietary capacity. This conclusion is in accord with the only case on the precise question which has been called to our attention. City of Mobile v. Lartigue, 23 Ala. App. 479, 127 So. 257.

[6, 7] Finally respondent insists that its demurrer was properly sustained because there are two causes of action in the complaint which are not separately stated, i. e., a cause of action based on the statute of 1923, and a cause of action for the common-law liability. In support of this claim respondent cites four cases: Matz v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (C. C.) 88 F. 770; McHugh v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 85, 88 S. W. 853; Scott v. Robards, 67 Mo. 289; and Creen v. Mich. C. R. Co., 168 Mich. 104, 133 N. W. 956, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 98. Of these cases the first two state a rule of pleading for the state of Missouri which has since been expressly overruled (White v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 202 Mo. 539, 101 S. W. 14, 20, 21; Clark v. St. Joseph T. R. Co., 242 Mo. 570, 148 S. W. 472, 478); the expression on the subject in the Creen Case was mere dictum since the complaint there passed upon was in two counts, and was held good on that ground; and the Scott Case is not in point and does not deal with the pleading of statutory and common law negligence. In drawing his complaint the pleader has followed the requirement of Code of Civil Procedure, section 426, subdivision 2, and set out "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language." The accident was single, and the recovery sought is single. If the facts may entitle plaintiff to recover on two theories that does not render his pleading duplicitous. Mills v. Barney, 22 Cal. 240. It has been too often held to be open to doubt that in this jurisdiction common-law and statutory negligence need not be pleaded in separate counts. Opitz v. Schenck, 178 Cal. 636, 174 P. 40; Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 187 P. 23; Scharpf v. Union Oil Co., 19 Cal. App. 100, 124 P. 864.

Judgment reversed, with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

YOUNG v. STATE ATHLETIC COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 7568.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 6, 1931.

Theaters and shows ⚷3.

Athletic commission did not abuse discretion in denying license to conduct wrestling contests, where applicant's contract for lease was of doubtful validity and was cancelable upon 30-day notice (St. 1925, p. xc § 3).

Applicant did not present to commission any evidence that person with whom he contracted for lease had authority to contract for lessor, and the contract relied on contained reservation of right upon 30-day written notice to cancel contract. State Athletic Act § 3 (St. 1925, p. xc), gives commission discretion to issue licenses to conduct wrestling contests to any organization holding lease for term of at least one year of premises in which contests are proposed to be held.

Elmer J. Walther, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Dep. Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J.

Section 3 of the State Athletic Act (St. 1925, pp. lxxxix, xc), includes the provision that the commission created by such act be given "discretion" to issue licenses to conduct wrestling contests "to any club, corporation, organization or association which holds a lease of a term of at least one year of the premises" in which such contests are proposed to be held. Other rules governing the issuance of a license for the exhibition of athletic contests are either directly provided for by the statute, or, under the powers granted to the commission, are prescribed by such commission.

Acting under assumed compliance with the provisions of the statute, as well as with such regulations as theretofore had been adopted by the commission, the appellant in this proceeding presented his application to said commission for a license by which he would be given the privilege of conducting wrestling bouts at the "Shrine Auditorium" in the city of Los Angeles. The application was denied. Thereupon, through the medium of a writ of mandate issued by the superior court, he sought to compel the commission to issue to him such license. On return of the alternative writ and on hearing of the order to show cause therein, by order of the trial court, the writ was discharged; and the petitioner has appealed to this court from such order or judgment.

Although much argument is presented by respective counsel with reference to the question of the right of the commission to act "arbitrarily" in making its order by which the application of appellant for a license was denied, it is conceded that, under the provisions of the statute, the commission was authorized to act within its "discretion" in the premises. Accordingly, if by considering the terms of the application itself, or by considering any other fact relevant to a determination by the commission as to whether the license should be issued to the applicant, it appear either that the applicant failed to comply with the statutory requirements, or that a discretion free from abuse thereof was or may have been exercised by the commission in reaching its conclusion, it is clear that its action in the premises cannot be reviewed or controlled either by the lower court, or in effect by this tribunal.

To the end that a sufficient reason may be discovered for the order by the commission by which the application for a license was denied, it becomes pertinent to examine such application and a portion of the statute which relates to the issuance of such license. Reverting to the provisions of section 3 of the act to which attention hereinbefore has been directed, it will be noted that, leading to the issuance of a license, one of the requirements is that the applicant "holds a lease of a term of at least one year of the premises" in which the proposed contests are to be held.

The petition for a writ of mandate included the allegation that, with his application to the commission for the license in question, there was filed by the applicant "a contract by and between Al Malaikah Auditorium Company and petitioner, for the rent of the Shrine Civic Auditorium in the city of Los Angeles, * * * for the purpose of conducting wrestling bouts, * * * a true and correct copy of which is attached hereto," etc.

An examination of the copy of the so-called "contract" discloses what purports to be a letter written on the letterhead of the "Shrine Civil Auditorium," addressed to appellant herein, signed "Geo. J. Ramsey, Secretary-Treasurer," and "accepted" by appellant. On the face of the letterhead appears the name of the president and the names of the directors—supposedly of the Al Malaikah Auditorium Company. In part, the instrument is to the effect that "this letter may be used as a contract wherein the Al Malaikah Auditorium Company hereby agrees to rent to you for a period of one year from date the Shrine Civic Auditorium. * * *" But by the closing paragraph of the letter, "Al Malaikah Auditorium Company reserves the right, upon a thirty-day written notice, to cancel this contract."

Aside from any question which properly might have been interposed by the commission relative to the authority of "Geo. J. Ramsey, Secretary-Treasurer," to enter into a binding contract or lease on behalf of the Al Malaikah Auditorium Company, it will be noted that the so-called "contract" was not and does not purport to have been signed by Al Malaikah Auditorium Company; and that said "contract," although in apparent compliance with the statutory requirement of a tenancy by the applicant for a period of "at least one year," in fact was cancelable by "Geo. J. Ramsey, Secretary-Treasurer," or possibly by his supposed principal, Al Malaikah Auditorium Company, "upon a thirty-day written notice." But also of some importance was the failure on the part of the applicant for the license to produce a lease of the premises in which he proposed to conduct wrestling bouts. Although the letter or "contract" was "accepted" by the proposed lessee, it was capable of the construction that as between the interested parties a lease would or might be entered into at a future date on the terms specified in the so-called "contract." At any rate, in form the "contract" was not a lease. If it created an enforceable right to a lease, it was cancelable "upon a thirty-day written notice" by "Geo. J. Ramsey, Secretary-Treasurer," or possibly by the Al Malaikah Auditorium Company. But, assuming the actual authority in Geo. J. Ramsey to enter into a "contract" or lease such as is and was required by the terms of the statute, the record herein fails to disclose that the applicant presented to the commission any tangible evidence of the existence of such authority.

Without reference to other apparent defects either in the application, or in the "contract," but considering such aforementioned conditions only, of which it is not altogether improbable that the commission took notice, the justification as a matter of law of the rejection by the commission of the application for a license becomes apparent. Viewed from the standpoint either that the application failed to comply with statutory requirements, or that the attempted compliance was so questionable that, if the other several defects appearing therein were waived by the commission, the granting of a license in such circumstances might prove an embarrassing precedent—on the one hand, in the faithful performance of its duties, the commission was compelled to deny the application; and, on the other hand, in the exercise of that "discretion" vested in it by the terms of the statute, the commission was authorized to take the action on the application to which appellant herein takes exception.

Each of the several applications by appellant for leave to produce additional evidence relative to the extension of the "contract" here involved is denied. The appeal from each of the several orders specified by appellant in his notice of appeal is dismissed; and the judgment rendered by the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Kane and another against George A. Eastman and others to recover the balance of the purchase price of the leasehold of an apartment house. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Superseding opinion in 288 P. 819.

W. W. Kaye and Samuel Horowitz, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William A. Barnhill and Lewinson & Barnhill, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Eastman.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought to recover from defendants George A. Eastman and Mildred C. Eastman, his wife, the sum of $10,850, the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the leasehold of an apartment house in Los Angeles called the "Marlborough Apartments," and of the furniture therein. The plaintiffs also sought to recover the same amount from defendant Goldberg on the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage on certain furniture in an apartment house called the "Pickwick Apartments," executed by Goldberg to defendant George A. Eastman, and by him assigned to plaintiff Charles H. Kane.

The court found for defendants Eastman and against defendant Goldberg, and from the judgment entered thereon plaintiffs have appealed.

The facts of the transaction are as follows: On October 1, 1923, plaintiff Charles H. Kane entered into an agreement with defendants Eastman whereby he agreed to sell, and they agreed to buy, the leasehold and furniture of the Marlborough apartment house for the sum of $45,000. The purchasers agreed to pay $13,750 in cash; to indorse to plaintiff Kane a promissory note for $17,500 executed by defendant Goldberg on October 1, 1923, to George A. Eastman, which note was secured by a chattel mortgage on the furniture of the Pickwick apartment house, and to discharge certain obligations of plaintiff Kane amounting to $13,750. The cash payment was made, the obligations were discharged, and the Goldberg note and mortgage were transferred to Kane. No part of this note, which was payable in installments, was paid by the Eastmans, but on May 20, 1925, Goldberg, who was then in default thereunder to the extent of $4,350, had reduced the principal to $10,850. On that date Goldberg was indebted in the same amount, and was also in default to the same extent, on another promissory note executed by him to George A. Eastman and assigned to Mildred C. Eastman, which instrument was also secured by the same chattel mortgage upon the furniture of the Pickwick apartment house. On the date last mentioned the parties entered into a new agreement whereby Goldberg executed two promissory notes, each for $10,850, one payable to plaintiff, the other to Mildred C. Eastman, and secured both by the execution of a new chattel mortgage to the payees. Goldberg paid nothing on either of the new notes and became in default on both; and it further appears that between the time of filing the action and the trial the furniture in the Pickwick Apartments covered by the chattel mortgage was seized under a prior mortgage by the lessor of the apartment house.

Defendants Eastman alleged that the note executed by Goldberg to George A. Eastman and transferred to Kane was accepted by the latter in payment and satisfaction of the purchase price of the leasehold and furniture to the extent of $17,500; but the trial court found that it was accepted with the understanding that it should have that effect only to the extent that payments were made thereon. The court found, however, that the note of May 20, 1925, executed by Goldberg to Kane, was accepted with the intention of extinguishing all obligations under the note first mentioned, and to substitute new parties and a new obligation in lieu thereof, and that by reason thereof defendants Eastman were released from all obligation and liability under the first note and under the contract of purchase.

It is admitted that the note of May 20, 1925, was never presented or demand made for its payment, and that no notice of its dishonor was given to defendants Eastman or either of them. The complaint alleged that George A. Eastman "both before and after default in payment and dishonor of said promissory note * * * waived the presentment for payment of said note to defendant Gabriel Goldberg; said George A. Eastman also waived notice of such dishonor by Gabriel Goldberg of said promissory note"; but the court found that there was no waiver as alleged.

Plaintiffs claim that the two findings last mentioned are unsupported. According to the testimony, when Goldberg became in default under the original notes, it was the opinion of all the parties that the installments which he was obligated to make thereunder were larger than the business justified. Accordingly for Goldberg's benefit, and with the view that new notes in smaller installments would probably be promptly met, and also be more readily marketable, it was agreed that Goldberg should execute such notes to plaintiff and Mrs. Eastman for the unpaid amounts of the notes held by them, payable, however, in smaller installments, and secure the same by a new mortgage upon the same property. Following this agreement the note of May 20, 1925, was executed, and the original note executed by Goldberg was surrendered to him by Kane.

As stated, the court found that the original note was not received by Kane as payment upon the contract; and, with the exception of the fact that this note was surrendered, the record discloses no evidence of any agreement that the original obligations of the defendants were to be extinguished by the second note. Defendants call attention to certain testimony by the agent who acted for the parties in the original transaction in 1923. This witness testified that it was then understood that the original note should be received as payment; but the court found to the contrary, and none of the testimony tends to show any such understanding with respect to the note executed in 1925.

[1-3] It is well settled in this state that, in the absence of an express agreement, a new note of either the debtor or a third person does not extinguish the original indebtedness. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317; Welch v. Allington, 23 Cal. 322; Brown v. Olmsted, 50 Cal. 162; Steinhart v. National Bank, etc., 94 Cal. 362, 29 P. 717, 28 Am. St. Rep. 132; Savings & Loan Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 380, 44 P. 727; Jenne v. Burger, 120 Cal. 444, 52 P. 706; Savings Bank of San Diego County v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 54 P. 273; Bonestell v. Bowie, 128 Cal. 511, 61 P. 78; Merchant's etc., Bank v. Bentel, 166 Cal. 473, 137 P. 25.

Nor is the fact that the original note was surrendered sufficient alone to establish such an agreement (Welch v. Allington, supra; Steinhart v. National Bank, etc., supra; Bonestell v. Bowie, supra); and, in view of the evidence and the above authorities, this finding is unsupported.

The finding that there was no waiver of presentment or notice of dishonor appears to be sufficiently supported; but, in view of other undisputed facts, it lacks materiality in the present case. Mrs. Eastman was not a payee of the note transferred to plaintiff Kane by her husband. The complaint alleged, however, that both indorsed the same, and the court so found. But, notwithstanding this finding, the parties admit that there was no indorsement of any kind by Mrs. Eastman, and that nothing was indorsed thereon except the following:

"Date 11—19—23.

"For value received $\genfrac{}{}{0pt}{}{\text{We}}{\text{I}}$ hereby transfer, assign and set over unto Charles H. Kane all $\genfrac{}{}{0pt}{}{\text{my}}{\text{our}}$ right, title, interest in and to the within contract.
note.

"George A. Eastman."

[4-6] Nor was this an unqualified indorsement. Section 3119 of the Civil Code provides that a qualified indorsement may be made by adding to the indorser's signature the words "without recourse" or any words of similar import; and while the authorities are conflicting (8 Cor. Jur. Bills and Notes, § 551, p. 371), it has been held in this and other jurisdictions that an assignment of "all the right, title and interest" of the payee indorsed upon the instrument is equivalent to an indorsement without recourse, and constitutes him a mere assignor of title who will not be liable as an indorser upon the maker's default. Hammond Lumber Co. v. Kearsley, 36 Cal. App. 431, 172 P. 404; Spencer v. Halpern, 62 Ark. 595, 37 S.W. 711, 36 L. R. A. 120; Ellsworth v. Varney, 83 Ill. App. 94; Evans v. Freeman, 142 N. C. 61, 54 S. E. 847; Marion Nat. Bank v. Harden, 83 W. Va. 119, 97 S. E. 600, 6 A. L. R. 240; 3 R. C. L. Bills and Notes, § 371, p. 1155. An indorser is discharged from his obligation by failure to present a note or give notice of its dishonor, unless presentment or notice is excused or waived (Civ. Code, § 3170; 3 R. C. L. Bills and Notes, § 396, p. 1178); and it has been held in some jurisdictions that such failure is prima facie a bar to a suit on the indebtedness for which the note was given as collateral security (Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377, 22 So. 431, 62 Am. St. Rep. 105; Coleman v. Lewis, 183 Mass. 485, 67 N. E. 603, 68 L. R. A. 482, 97 Am. St. Rep. 450), and in others that it is an absolute discharge (Jennison v. Parker, 7 Mich. 355; State Bank v. Parkhurst, 155 Ill. App. 101; Rumsey v. Laidley, 34 W. Va. 721, 12 S. E. 866, 26 Am. St. Rep. 935).

[7-9] But an assignor, not being an indorser within the meaning of the above section (Hammond Lumber Co. v. Kearsley, supra), is not entitled to notice of dishonor, and he can only escape liability for the original debt by showing that the failure to present for payment or give notice of nonpayment, or a lack of diligence in collecting the assigned note, has occasioned him damage (8 Cor. Jur. Bills and Notes, § 899, p. 641; Hutz v. Karthause, Fed. Cas. No. 6, 963, 4 Wash. C. C. 1; Hunter v. Moul, 98 Pa. 13, 42 Am. Rep. 610; Brown v. Craig, 2 N. C. 378; First Nat. Bank of Wellsburg v. Kimberlands, 16 W. Va. 555; 5 Cor. Jur. Assignments, § 168, p. 976). Defendants contend, however, that the finding that the note of October 1, 1923, transferred by Eastman to Kane, was not accepted by the latter as payment, is also unsupported, and suggest that a contrary finding should be made by this court pursuant to the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is well settled that parties who have not appealed cannot attack the findings; the only objections thereto which can be received being those urged by appellant. Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 P. 876; Trevaskis v. Peard, 111 Cal. 599, 44 P. 246; Garibaldi v. Grillo, 17 Cal. App. 540, 120 P. 425.

[10] There being no allegation or proof that the failure to present the second note for payment, or that the lack of notice of nonpayment, caused damage to defendants Eastman or either of them, and the finding that they were discharged by agreement from liability for the original debt being unsupported, there are no findings which sustain the judgment in their favor, and to this extent the same must be reversed. The appeal, however, was from the whole judgment, but no ground appears for reversal of that portion thereof entered against defendant Goldberg, and this portion must be affirmed.

Accordingly, that portion of the judgment in favor of defendants George A. Eastman and Mildred C. Eastman is reversed, and that portion thereof entered against defendant Gabriel Goldberg is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract. Defendant answered setting up fraud in the execution of the contract and filed a cross-complaint seeking $2,500 paid to plaintiff upon the execution of the contract. The cause was tried before a jury which returned a verdict against plaintiff on his complaint and awarded defendant $2,500 on his cross-complaint. Plaintiff appeals on a bill of exceptions.

The contract, which was in writing, undertook to appoint the defendant the sole and exclusive distributor in San Francisco of all merchandise manufactured by plaintiff. It called upon the defendant to "purchase from the party of the first part (plaintiff) merchandise in the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars to be delivered to party of the second part when ordered by said party of the second part." The contract was executed May 18, 1926, at which time defendant paid plaintiff $2,500, agreeing to pay the balance of the $5,000 on November 1, 1926.

As an inducement to the execution of the contract, plaintiff promised defendant that he would come to San Francisco and help him learn the business and would advise him as to the merchandise he should purchase and keep on hand. He also told defendant that he manufactured all the merchandise handled by him, that he sold to jobbers exclusively, and that defendant could undersell to the trade because all goods would be billed to him at 33⅓ per cent. off the price to jobbers. Numerous other promises and representations were made by the plaintiff both before and after the execution of the contract. Proof of these was made in support of the special defense of fraud and also as an excuse for defendant's refusal to be bound by the contract.

On the issue of fraud it is not necessary to detail the evidence. It is sufficient to say that upon each and every charge of false representation defendant's proof was clear and overwhelming, and that in many instances there was no denial. Upon the undisputed evidence the transactions of the plaintiff were so reprehensible that the jury could not have returned any other verdict.

[1] The contract was void for uncertainty, because it could not have been ascertained therefrom what merchandise the respondent agreed to purchase or what price he undertook to pay. In this respect the case is in line with Jules Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., 16 Cal. App. 666, 117 P. 936. The rule applicable to the case at hand is found on page 669 of 16 Cal. App., 117 P. 936, 937: "It is elementary in law that a contract of sale must be certain as to the thing sold, and designate the price to be paid for it (Civ. Code, § 1727); and it is well settled that if an executory contract of sale is uncertain and incapable of being made certain in the essential particular of the price to be paid for the thing sold, neither of the parties can be held to its terms, nor recover damages for its breach."

To escape the rule the appellant argues that the contract was partially executed through respondent's payment of a part of the purchase price, and that, for that reason, the contract became valid and binding. The answer is found in the Levy Case where, in considering a similar contract, the court said (page 670 of 16 Cal. App., 117 P. 936, 937): "Where, however, the price of the commodity called for, but not delivered, is to be subsequently ascertained and fixed by the valuation of others, or by the agreement of the parties, the contract of sale is incomplete and nonenforceable until the price is so fixed or agreed upon"—citing numerous cases. Thus the contract was incomplete and unenforceable until the prices of the goods were agreed upon, and this could not be done until some effort had been made to select them and invoices had been exchanged. This point had never been reached in the relations of the parties, and, though some shipments had been made prior to the time when the appellant claimed a breach by respondent, a large part of those shipments were made after this action was commenced—and in both cases no invoices had been delivered and no agreement as to quantity, quality, or price had been made.

[2] Criticism is made of the ruling of the trial court refusing the admission in evidence of certain invoices. The order was made after it had become evident that the proposed evidence was fraudulent, and that the invoices had been prepared for the purpose of creating evidence favorable to the appellant, but that they had not been delivered to or exhibited to the respondent. The purpose of the offer was to show that the merchandise had been selected and approved by the respondent, and that the contract had thus become partially executed. But, as these invoices had been prepared after the suit was commenced and had not been exhibited to the respondent, there was no error in refusing their admission as evidence.

[3] It is argued that there is a conflict in the instructions in that the trial court advised the jury that the contract sued on was void and unenforceable, and then, upon request of the appellant, gave instructions covering the measure of damages which appellant might recover for its breach. It is evident that the instructions that the contract was void and unenforceable were correct for the reasons heretofore given. The appellant was not entitled to the instructions he requested covering the issue of damages for breach of this contract. Hence, if there was a conflict between these two lines of instructions, it was at appellant's invitation and no possible prejudice resulted to him because of it.

[4, 5] Criticism is made of the instruction relating to respondent's right to recover on his cross-complaint for the money advanced to the appellant under the contract. The point is that this instruction did not include the element that the false promises were the inducements upon which respondent relied in the execution of the agreement. The instruction complained of is incomplete and is open to some of the criticisms directed against it, but we cannot see that appellant has suffered any prejudice because of it. The cross-complaint was in the ordinary form of the common count for money had and received. In support of the cross-complaint respondent sought to prove that the contract was void, and that its execution had been procured under false representations. He successfully proved both, and the trial court might have instructed the jury that, the contract being void, the respondent was entitled to recover what he had paid under it. Whyte v. Rosencrantz, 123 Cal. 634, 641, 56 P. 436, 69 Am. St. Rep. 90; Blank v. Rodgers, 82 Cal. App. 35, 45, 255 P. 235.

The record is clear that the $2,500 was not paid for goods sold or delivered under the contract, but was an advance payment for goods to be sold and selected under the contract. The contract being void and the consideration for the $2,500 having wholly failed, respondent was entitled to reimbursement on his cross-complaint for money had and received. Whyte v. Rosencrantz, 123 Cal. 638, 56 P. 436, 69 Am. St. Rep. 90; Winkler v. Jerrue, 20 Cal. App. 555, 560, 129 P. 804. The issues were squarely before the court and jury. The evidence was clear, and, upon these issues, was not controverted. The only correct verdict which could have been returned upon the issues and the evidence was the verdict which the jury returned. Briefly, the situation is this—the jury rendered a proper and just verdict after instructions which were more favorable to appellant than he was entitled to have; this verdict was in accordance with the law and the evidence, but the trial court failed to instruct the jury as fully upon the law of the case as the respondent was entitled to have had it instructed. It is possible that the jury knew the law and did not need the instructions, but, in any event, we cannot perceive how appellant suffered prejudice, and certainly there was no miscarriage of justice.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. VAN BARON.

Cr. 34.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 7, 1931.

1. Criminal law 🔑1032(1).

Objection to trial court's granting request to amend information could not be raised for first time on appeal (Pen. Code, § 1008).

> Appellant made no objection to trial court's granting under Pen. Code, § 1008, the district attorney's request to amend the information, and made no request for a continuance after the amendment was made, but proceeded with the trial without objection or protest.

2. Forgery 🔑12(½).

Where evidence sustained conclusion that defendant passed forged check with intention of defrauding, that check was not indorsed by payee held immaterial.

3. Forgery 🔑34(2).

In prosecution for forgery, variance between allegation that check was dated May 16, 1930, and proof that check bore date of May 17, 1930, held immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James A. Allen, Judge.

George Van Baron was convicted of forgery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Marks & Klenke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

MARKS, J.

Appellant was charged by an information filed by the district attorney of Orange county with uttering, publishing, and passing a forged check. He entered pleas of not guilty, and not guilty by reason of insanity. The jury found him sane, and guilty, and he prosecuted this appeal. He raises no question on the correctness of the proceedings on his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.

The information charged the uttering, publishing, and passing of a forged check in words and figures as follows:

"Santa Ana Iron Works 924 S. First Street "Voucher Check No. 661 Santa Ana, Calif., "May 16th 1930 Pay to the order of Carl Swartz—$36.00—Thirty-six and 00 cts—Dollars Santa Ana Iron Works L. A. Turner 90—190 The Commercial National Bank of Santa Ana."

The information as originally filed did not contain the portion which we have italicized. Before the jury was impaneled the court permitted the district attorney to amend it by the interlineation of the italicized words and figures. The check introduced in evidence was dated May 17, 1930, instead of May 16, 1930, as alleged in the information. It did not bear the indorsement of Carl Swartz, the payee. Appellant has a long list of assignments of error, but they are all based on the amendment of the information, the lack of the indorsement of the check, and the variance in dates. For this reason it will not be necessary to consider all of the assignments of error separately.

It appears from the evidence that on May 17, 1930, appellant visited the store of the Stevens-Van Englen Company at Anaheim, Cal. He was waited upon by H. T. Outland, the store manager, and purchased a hat and tie of the value of $2.44, tendering the check in payment. It was accepted and he departed with the merchandise and $33.56 in money which he had received as change. The check did not bear the genuine signature of either L. A. Turner or the Santa Ana Iron Works, both being forged. He was arrested within thirty minutes with a confederate who was also operating in the city of Anaheim. Appellant had passed other similar checks in Orange county. After his arrest he stated to several officers that he purchased the spurious checks in Los Angeles for ten dollars each from a well-dressed stranger whom he met on the street and whom he could not otherwise identify.

Section 1008 of the Penal Code provides, in part, as follows: "An indictment or information may be amended by the district attorney without leave of court, at any time before the defendant pleads. The court may order its amendment for any defect or insufficiency, at any stage of the proceedings; and the trial shall continue as if it had been originally filed as amended, unless the substantial rights of the defendant would be prejudiced thereby, in which event a reasonable continuance, not longer than the ends of justice require, may be granted."

[1] Appellant made no objection to the trial court's granting the district attorney's request to amend the information. He made no request for a continuance after the amendment was made, but proceeded with the trial without objection or protest. He should not be allowed to complain of this procedure for the first time here.

The cases of People v. Clawson, 82 Cal. App. 422, 255 P. 552, 553, and People v. Winthrop, 88 Cal. App. 591, 264 P. 263, effectually dispose of this contention of appellant. In the Clawson Case the court said: "Section 1008 of the Penal Code permits an amendment to be made to an information after the defendant has pleaded 'in the discretion of the court where it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant.' This section is in accord with section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution and with the rule of the later decisions that mere technical errors in either pleading or procedure, which do not in any way affect the substantial rights of the parties, are not to be employed to defeat justice, and it would seem to be the clear purpose of the section to permit an amendment of this character to conform to the proof, when that can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. Here the appellant has not suggested how, under any possible conception of the record, he was in any way prejudiced by the amendment."

[2] There is no merit in the contention that the forged check did not bear the endorsement of Carl Swartz, the payee. In this connection it should be remembered that appellant was charged with and convicted of the crime of uttering a forged instrument and not of forging it or of an endorsement upon it. There can be no question that the check bore the forged signature of the maker. There is sufficient evidence to sustain the conclusion that appellant knew that the check was forged and passed it with the intention of defrauding the Stevens-Van Englen Company. He actually passed the forged check and received its face value in merchandise and money. The cases of People v. Sanders, 82 Cal. App. 778, 256 P. 251, and People v. Ryan, 74 Cal. App. 125, 239 P. 419, are authority for holding that it was not necessary to either allege or prove the endorsement of the check by the payee named therein.

[3] The last point made by appellant is that there was a fatal variance between the allegations of the information and the proof in that the check was alleged to have been dated May 16, 1930, while the one introduced in evidence bore the date May 17, 1930. The mistake in the information was undoubtedly a clerical error. We think that the variance was immaterial, as but one check was passed upon the Stevens-Van Englen Company and the one introduced in evidence was thoroughly identified as the check passed. In the case of People v. Freeman, 29 Cal. App. 543, 156 P. 994, 995, the information charged the passing of a check dated "3—2—1915." The evidence showed the check dated "3—12—1915." The court held the variance immaterial and said: "As we view the evidence, there could have been no question but that the check offered in evidence was the one by the use of which the crime charged was perpetrated; and we have no doubt at all but that the appellant would not be embarrassed in making proof under a possible subsequent charge made affecting the same check that he had theretofore been convicted of the crime, and hence had been once in jeopardy. It follows, then, that the variance was immaterial."

The evidence clearly establishes the guilt of appellant and there is no error in the record prejudicial to his substantial rights. After the pronouncement of judgment appellant made motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, both of which were denied. As the grounds relied upon by him in making these motions were based upon the three questions we have considered, no purpose could be served by further considering them.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

MALONE et al. v. CLEMOW et al.
HUTCHESON et al. v. SAME.
HERMANCE v. SAME.

Civ. 7496.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 6, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Automobiles 🔑181(1).

"Gross negligence" necessary to render owner or operator of automobile liable for injuries to or death of guest is want of slight diligence (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580, renders owner or operator of automobile or person responsible for such operation not liable for injuries to or death of guest, unless injury or death proximately results from intoxication, willful misconduct, or gross negligence of owner, driver, or person responsible for operation, and further provides that in such cases the burden should be on plaintiff to establish that such intoxication, willful misconduct, or gross negligence was the proximate cause of death or injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Gross Negligence," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Automobiles 🔑181(1).

"Gross negligence" and "willful misconduct" necessary to render owner or operator of automobile liable for injuries to or death of guest are clearly distinguishable (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Willful Misconduct," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Automobiles 🔑181(1).

Willfulness or wantonness are not necessary elements of "gross negligence" necessary to render owner or operator of automobile liable for injuries to or death of guest (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

4. Negligence 🔑136(14).

Generally, degree of care required under given circumstances is question of fact and not of law.

5. Negligence 🔑136(8).

Degree of care required under given circumstances is nevertheless question of fact, though evidence is not conflicting if different conclusions can be rationally drawn therefrom.

6. Negligence 🔑136(8).

Question of negligence is one of fact, if conceded facts are such that reasonable minds might differ on question.

7. Automobiles 🔑245(50).

Driver's gross negligence as proximate cause of injuries to guests resulting in death of one when automobile collided with rear of truck held, under evidence, for court sitting without jury (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

8. Automobiles 🔑224(5).

Guest riding in automobile having no right to exercise any control over driver held not required to warn driver of presence of parked truck.

9. Automobiles 🔑245(87).

Fact that guests in automobile were asleep at time of collision with truck held not to constitute contributory negligence as matter of law.

Guests were under no obligation to supervise operation of automobile or keep lookout for impending danger. Evidence showed that driver was experienced and that guests had no reason to complain of her driving. Though collision occurred late at night, driver testified that at time of accident she was not tired, but was in fact refreshed by cold air.

10. Negligence 🔑108(1), 112.

General allegation of negligence is sufficient in action for personal injuries whether ordinary or gross negligence is relied on.

11. Negligence 🔑108(1).

Negligence may be pleaded in general terms.

12. Negligence 🔑111(1).

Complaint, in action for personal injuries resulting from negligence, is sufficient if alleging specific acts constituting negligence complained of.

13. Automobiles 🔑238(7).

Amended complaints in actions by guests for personal injuries sustained in automobile collision resulting in death of one held to sufficiently state cause of action based on gross negligence (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

Amended complaints specified particular acts of negligence relied on, and charged that such particular acts were done in a "grossly negligent manner."

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Separate actions by Charles Malone and others, by Ruby Hutcheson and another, and by Juanita Hermance against Florence Clemow and husband, consolidated and tried together. From a judgment for plaintiffs in each case, defendants appeal.

Judgments affirmed.

Dunn, White & Aiken and Hamilton Wright, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Kilpatrick & Goodman, of Oakland, for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem.

The three above-entitled actions were consolidated and tried together before the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs in each case. The appeal is from these three judgments. All the proceedings are included in one record.

Florence Clemow and Floyd Clemow are husband and wife, and are the defendants in all the cases. The plaintiffs in the first case are the father, and the brothers and sisters, of the defendant Florence Clemow. These plaintiffs (in the first case) sue for damages for the death of Cora Malone, the wife of one of the plaintiffs, and the mother of the other plaintiffs, and also the mother of the defendant Florence Clemow. In the second action, the plaintiff Ruby Hutcheson is a sister of the defendant Florence Clemow, and the other plaintiff, Leo Hutcheson, is the husband of Ruby Hutcheson. In the third and last action, the plaintiff Juanita Hermance is also a sister of the defendant Florence Clemow.

On the morning of August 16, 1929, the defendant Florence Clemow, together with her two sisters, Ruby Hutcheson and Juanita Hermance, and her mother, Cora Malone, and three small children, left the town of Burbank, in Los Angeles county, in an automobile for Berkeley, Cal. The defendant Florence Clemow drove the entire distance, and at about midnight of the same day the accident or collision, out of which these actions grew, occurred on East Fourteenth street, near Jones avenue, in East Oakland, Cal. The car driven by Mrs. Clemow collided with the rear end of a truck, and as a result of this collision Cora Malone received injuries from which she died, and the plaintiffs Ruby Hutcheson and Juanita Hermance were both seriously injured.

It is admitted in the pleadings that Mrs. Malone, Mrs. Hutcheson, and Mrs. Hermance were, at the time of the accident, guests of Mrs. Clemow, the defendant, and riding with her in her automobile.

These actions are therefore based upon section 141¾ of the California Vehicle Act, which became effective two days before the accident in question occurred (Stats. 1929, p. 1580). It reads in part as follows: "Any person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle, moving upon any of the public highways of the State of California, and while so riding as such guest receives or sustains an injury, shall have no right of recovery against the owner or driver or person responsible for the operation of such vehicle. In the event that such person while so riding as such guest is killed, or dies as a result of injury sustained while so riding as such guest, then neither the estate nor the legal representatives or heirs of such guest shall have any right of recovery against the driver or owner of said vehicle by reason of the death of the said guest. * * * Nothing in this section contained shall be construed as relieving the owner or driver or person responsible for the operation of a vehicle from liability for injury to or death of such guest proximately resulting from the intoxication, wilful misconduct, or gross negligence of such owner, driver or person responsible for the operation of such vehicle; provided, that in any action for death or for injury or damage to person or property by or on behalf of a guest or the estate, heirs or legal representatives of such guest, the burden shall be upon plaintiff to establish that such intoxication, wilful misconduct or gross negligence was the proximate cause of such death or injury or damage. For the purpose of this section the term 'guest' is hereby defined as being a person who accepts a ride in any vehicle without giving compensation therefor."

Appellants first contend that "The finding that the defendant Florence Clemow failed to exercise slight or any care in the operation of said automobile at the time of said collision, and that said collision was proximately caused by the gross negligence of the said Florence Clemow, are without any support in the evidence."

[1] Gross negligence has been defined to be "the want of slight diligence." Redington v. Pacific Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 107 Cal. 317, 40 P. 432, 434, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132; Walther v. Southern Pacific Co., 159 Cal. 775, 116 P. 51, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 49; Krause v. Rarity et al. (Cal. Sup.) 293 P. 62, 66; Coit v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 130 Cal. 657, 63 P. 83, 53 L. R. A. 678, 80 Am. St. Rep. 153; Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal. App. 416, 185 P. 510, 512; 19 Cal. Jur. 554.

In the recent case of Krause v. Rarity, supra, the Supreme Court, in considering the meaning of the phrase "gross negligence" as used in section 141¾ of the California Vehicle Act, said: "In many jurisdictions the division of negligence into degrees is not countenanced (20 R. C. L. 21); the concept being that such phrases as 'gross negligence' and 'slight negligence' are misnomers. In this state the degrees of negligence have been frequently recognized. The term 'gross negligence' has been defined as 'the want of slight diligence,' as 'an entire failure to exercise care, or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there was an indifference to the things and welfare of others,' and as 'that want of care which would raise a presumption of the conscious indifference to consequences.'"

[2] We should not confuse "gross negligence" with "willful misconduct," because there is a clear distinction between the two terms.

In Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., supra, the court said: "'Willful misconduct' means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. * * * The mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not, alone, willful misconduct. * * * To constitute 'willful misconduct' there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury." See, also, Tognazzini v. Freeman, 18 Cal. App. 468, 123 P. 540; Eylenfeldt v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 28 Cal. App. 56, 151 P. 293; Figlietti v. Frick, 203 Cal. 246, 263 P. 534.

[3] Appellants argue that some act of willfulness or wantonness must be shown to constitute gross negligence; or, in other words, that either willfulness or wantonness is a necessary element of gross negligence. It is clear from the foregoing authorities that this is not correct, for, whenever the element of knowledge and willfulness enters into the act, it ceases to be negligence, and becomes at least, "willful misconduct," and this is true no matter what degree of negligence is being considered.

Undoubtedly, respondents in these cases made out at least a prima facie case of gross negligence against the appellant Florence Clemow. The evidence shows without conflict that Florence Clemow, the driver, could have seen said tail-light on the truck upon which it was placed at least two hundred feet to the rear thereof; there was no obstruction to prevent her seeing the truck; the night was clear; the street was artificially lighted; the body of the truck was visible to persons driving up the street; the street was straight for some distance to the rear of the truck; her course was not interfered with by any other obstacle or traffic; on the left rear end of the parked truck was a red lighted tail-light, visible for a distance of at least two hundred feet along the course of travel of appellant's automobile, and that the right front fender, or front part of her automobile, struck the left rear corner of said truck. Mrs. Clemow drove the automobile from Burbank, in Southern California, to Oakland, in one day, and was driving along East Fourteenth street in Oakland, and had been traveling for several blocks at a speed of from thirty to thirty-five miles per hour. No explanation was offered why she did not see the parked truck and its tail-light within about twelve feet distance therefrom.

[4-6] Generally speaking, the degree of care required under any given circumstances is a question of fact for the court or jury, and not a question of law. This is true even where there is no conflict in the evidence if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn therefrom. If the conceded facts are such that reasonable minds might differ upon the question as to whether or not one was negligent, the question is one of fact for the jury, or the court sitting without a jury. These rules are so well established as to render citation of authority unnecessary.

[7] It would appear from the foregoing facts that there was an utter absence of reasonable or slight care on the part of the defendant Florence Clemow; or, in other words, if she had exercised even slight care or diligence, she would have seen said truck and tail-light within time to have prevented the collision. At any rate, it was a question of fact for the court to determine whether such negligence, under all the facts and circumstances, was gross, ordinary, or slight, and also whether or not such negligence was the proximate cause of the collision and the resulting injuries complained of. The trial court having determined it to be gross negligence, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the collision, we are powerless to interfere with its conclusions.

Quoting further from the case of Krause v. Rarity, supra, the court said: "Where liability attaches only for gross negligence, it is for the jury, under proper instructions by the court, to pass upon the question whether such negligence exists"—citing Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582, 63 P. 915; 19 Cal. Jur. 728.

[8] Appellant Florence Clemow also contends that, as a matter of law, her guests were guilty of contributory negligence. This contention is based upon the fact that Mrs. Hutcheson and Mrs. Hermance testified that they were asleep at the time of the collision. We find no merit in this contention. There is no evidence that Mrs. Malone, who was killed, or either of the other injured parties, exercised, or had the right to exercise, any control over the driver, Mrs. Clemow, and they were under no legal obligation to warn the driver of the presence of the parked truck on the side of the street. Krause v. Rarity et al., supra; Marchetti v. S. P. Co., 204 Cal. 679, 269 P. 529; Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 171 P. 1059; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319;

Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385; Shields v. King, 207 Cal. 275, 277 P. 1043.

[9] The fact that one or more of the guests was asleep at the time of the collision does not constitute negligence as a matter of law, for, as we have already seen, there was no obligation on the part of the guests to exercise an oversight as to the way in which the automobile was to be operated, or keep a lookout for impending danger. Furthermore, the evidence shows that Mrs. Clemow was an experienced driver, and the guests had no reason to complain of her driving. Mrs. Clemow testified herself that at the time of the accident she was not tired, but was in fact refreshed by the cold air of the bay.

In McDermott v. Sibert, 218 Ala. 670, 119 So. 681, the court used the following language which is particularly appropriate in the cases at bar, "When a guest is asleep it is entirely a question for the jury to determine whether or not he could have done anything if awake; or whether it considered him contributorily negligent in the same regard as if he were not asleep."

[10] Appellants further contend that none of the three amended complaints states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for gross negligence. This contention is also without merit.

"Degrees of negligence are matters of proof, and not of averment; and a general allegation of negligence, want of care and skill, etc., is sufficient in an action for injuries caused by such negligence, whether the defendant is liable for ordinary or gross negligence." Sutherland's Code Pleading and Practice, § 4166, p. 2486. See, also, 3 Cal. Jur. pp. 835 and 955.

[11, 12] The rule is also well settled that negligence may be pleaded in general terms, and also that a complaint is sufficient if it alleges the specific acts which constitute the negligence complained of. Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 229 P. 30; Mathes v. Aggeler & Musser Seed Co., 179 Cal. 697, 178 P. 713; 19 Cal. Jur. 674.

[13] In the cases at bar, the amended complaints have specified the particular acts of negligence relied upon, and have charged that these particular acts were done in a grossly negligent manner, which is sufficient under the above-stated rules.

We are of the opinion that each of the amended complaints stated a cause of action, and that the demurrers were properly overruled. Furthermore, appellants answered and went to trial upon the issues thus formed, and there is nothing to indicate that they were misled, in any way as to the issues they were to meet, and, in fact, did meet as best they could, and the cases appear to have been fairly tried upon the merits. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 P. 936; Irrgang v. Ott, 9 Cal. App. 440, 99 P. 528.

The other contentions made by appellants are without merit, and require no special discussion.

We think the judgment in each of the three cases should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Dolfin.

H. B. Cornell, of Los Angeles, for respondent De Garmo.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

[1] An action was commenced in the municipal court by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants a real estate commission. Judgment went for the defendants, whereupon the plaintiffs appealed to the Superior Court. There the judgment was reversed as to the defendant Dolfin, and she has appealed to this court from that part of the judgment, and has also appealed from an order of the Superior Court denying a motion to dismiss the appeal to that court from the municipal court. No brief has been filed on behalf of this appellant, and, of course, the appeal should be dismissed. However, the Superior Court affirmed the judgment as to the defendant De Garmo, and the plaintiffs have appealed from that part of the judgment.

[2] The facts pertinent to the present inquiry are as follows: On December 2, 1925, the defendant Jessie Dolfin gave to the appellants an exclusive agency to sell a parcel of real estate; the agreement containing a provision that it should continue until canceled by a written notice of twenty days. On March 1, 1926, she notified appellants in writing that the agency would terminate on March 21. On March 18, 1926, she entered into an escrow through which a deal was consummated by which the property was sold to Frank H. Cole. The sale was made by an agent named Pair, who had been employed for that purpose by De Garmo, the latter of whom was the actual owner of the property; Dolfin holding the record title thereto as his agent. Plaintiffs did not know of De Garmo's interest in the property, and De Garmo did not know of the contract between the plaintiffs and Dolfin, nor was there any testimony that Dolfin was in any way authorized to contract for its sale or to sell the property. Perhaps it is necessary to add that the deed to Pair was executed by the defendant Jessie Dolfin.

It is the contention of the plaintiffs-appellants that the respondent De Garmo is liable as the undisclosed principal; and that he is estopped to claim the protection of the statute of frauds. They rely, in particular, upon the case of Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 783, 106 P. 88, 92, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154, and assert that it establishes a principle applicable to their situation. We cannot agree, however, that it is helpful to them. In that case the plaintiff relied upon the doctrine of estoppel for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of establishing the agent's authority. The court said: "If Oelrichs had no authority to bind his wife and her sister by a 10-year contract, they could not be estopped by his declaration that they would give Seymour such contract, unless they took some action with notice of the fact that this declaration had been made. Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 P. 53. Without going into a recital of the evidence offered for the purpose of connecting these appellants with the transaction, we may say that there is nothing to show that either of them had knowledge, when Seymour commenced his service, that his employment was other than from month to month. Each of them, when informed of his claim that he had been employed under a contract for 10 years, promptly repudiated the alleged contract. If it could be said that the evidence justifies an inference that Oelrichs had authority to bind one or both of the appellants by some sort of contract, it does not, in the absence of proof of written authority (Civ. Code, § 2309), justify the inference that he had authority to bind them by a contract required to be in writing. Even though they had knowledge that he had made a contract of employment with Seymour on their behalf, their duty to inquire into the terms of such contract did not impute to them notice that he had exceeded his authority and undertaken to bind them by an agreement required to be in writing." Observing that in the instant case there was no testimony that Dolfin was authorized to enter into a contract of agency, and that the proof establishes that the respondent De Garmo had no knowledge of the contract sued upon, it immediately becomes apparent that the claim of estoppel lacks its essential foundation.

Appeal of Dolfin from judgment of reversal dismissed; judgment of affirmance in favor of De Garmo affirmed.

In the matter of the estate of J. H. Smith, deceased. Application by Catherine A. McKenna for a writ of prohibition to restrain the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and Hon. Charles S. Crail, a Judge thereof, from proceeding with the contest of a will after probate, instituted by J. Truitt Bustamente and another.

Peremptory writ issued.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Everett Brown, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

H. L. Pratt, of Los Angeles (Woodruff, Musick & Hartke, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

ARCHIBALD, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner is applying for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of Los Angeles county and the honorable Charles S. Crail, a judge thereof, from proceeding with the contest of a will after probate.

The testator died in Los Angeles county August 9, 1924, leaving real and personal property therein and also a will dated July 26, 1924, in which J. Truitt (now J. Truitt Bustamente) and Annie Dupea were named as legatees, which will was admitted to probate November 30, 1925. This will was unsuccessfully contested by the four adult children of decedent, who appealed from the order admitting the document to probate; the appeal being dismissed January 7, 1929. October 26, 1928, petitioner here, Catherine McKenna, filed a petition in said estate for the probate of an olographic will dated September 22, 1924, and claimed to have been executed by decedent, in which the four children of decedent were named as legatees to the extent of $500 each and petitioner was given the residue of the estate. Thereafter, and on November 20, 1928, said Bustamente and Dupea filed a contest and objections to the probate of such olographic will through their attorneys, Randall J. Hood and W. J. Clark, and for grounds of contest alleged that the latter will was not the will of decedent, that it was executed by reason of the undue influence of said petitioner, and that decedent was of unsound mind at the time of its execution. Petitioner demurred to the contest and objections so filed, and also moved to strike and dismiss the same, generally on the ground of lack of interest in contestants by reason of the alleged invalidity of the bequests to them in the will under which they were claiming, due to uncertainty and lack of complete description of the property mentioned. The matter was continued from time to time until January 18, 1929, contestants not appearing at any time, and petitioner being present at all times, and the demurrer was sustained, fifteen days to amend being given, and the petition for revocation of the first will and for probate of the olographic will was continued to February 8, 1929. On the same day, January 18, Bustamente and Dupea filed an amended contest setting up the same grounds as the first contest, and also that the olographic will was not in the handwriting of the deceased and that it was a false, fraudulent, and forged instrument. To said amended contest petitioner filed a general and special demurrer to each ground of contest and also a motion to strike and dismiss the same on the grounds of lack of interest, that the allegations of the first and second grounds of contest were conclusions of law, and that one ground of contest contradicted the other. The motion to strike bears the following indorsement: "Received copy of the within motion this 28th day of January, 1929. Randall J. Hood by Secy." (Exhibit A.) Exhibit B, a copy of the demurrer, does not bear any indorsement of service accepted, but exhibit C addressed to contestants "and their attorneys," recites that the motion to strike and demurrer to the amended contest "herewith served on you" will be brought on for hearing in said Superior Court on February 8, 1929, at 10 a. m. The proof of service attached to said notice recites that a true copy of the same was served on the attorneys for contestants January 29, 1929, by leaving a copy thereof with Randall J. Hood at his office, "and that said notice was handed by Randall J. Hood back to the affiant, with request that said affiant take same to the office of Wm. J. Clark," and that affiant did so immediately, and left same "at the office of the said Clark, with the person then in charge of said office." Contestants do not deny that the hearing of the motion was noticed for February 8, 1929, at 10 a. m., in said court, but they allege that the "clerk of said superior court did not fix the 8th day of February, 1929, or any other day" for the hearing of said demurrer and motion, and that neither contestants nor their attorneys "ever received any notice from the clerk of said court" fixing said date or any other date for said hearing; and they also allege in their answer that there was a rule of the Superior Court in force and effect at the time requiring the notice to be so fixed and given. On February 8th petitioner appeared at the time and place fixed in said notice, but no one appeared for contestants. The court called and disposed of all other matters on the calendar, and, the contestants not then appearing, proceeded to hear the demurrer and motion to strike. It is admitted that the court had the first will before it at the time of said hearing, and that it granted the motion to strike, sustained the demurrer, and proceeded to hear proofs on the petition to revoke the first will and admit the olographic instrument to probate; also that the court made its order revoking the first will and admitting the latter will to probate, as well as ordering that letters testamentary issue to petitioner. Such letters were issued to her February 9, 1929.

*Hearing granted 3 P.2d 921.

On April 2, 1929, attorneys for contestants served on petitioner and filed a notice that on April 5 counsel would "move to vacate and set aside each of the following proceedings: Contest and opposition to probate of will dated September 22, 1924, denied. Amended contest to probate of will, denied. Motion to strike contest of will dated September 22, 1924, granted. Demurrer to amended contest of will sustained. Will admitted to probate. Certificate of proof of will filed." The record before us does not show that any grounds were stated in the motion or that it referred to anything upon which it would be based, and the language above used is practically a copy of the clerk's minutes of February 8 relative to the action of the court on the various matters before it that day in said estate of J. H. Smith, deceased. On April 9 the motion was heard, over petitioner's objection thereto, all parties being present, and was granted "as prayed for in said motion." There were two written orders made, based on the motion, one on April 24th, in practically the language of the motion in its reference to what was vacated, and a nunc pro tunc order dated June 6th, which recites that it is made "so that the records may show the true decision made by the court" and describes the orders sought to be vacated. Petitioner moved to strike the order of April 24th, and it was stipulated by counsel that such order might be stricken. Thereafter the nunc pro tunc order of June 6 was made by the court, which petitioner moved to strike as soon as she learned thereof, as well as all other orders made by the court based on said motion heard April 9, 1929, on the ground, among others, that the court was without jurisdiction to make any order except to "dismiss said motion of April 2nd." Such motion came on for hearing on November 15, 1929, both sides being represented by counsel, and was granted, and a written order was made on November 19th vacating all orders made on said motion of April 9th and also providing "that all of the orders made herein on the 8th day of February, 1929, shall be in force and remain as made of that date."

Thereafter, and on February 7, 1930, the contestant J. Truitt Bustamente, appearing for herself, filed another contest to or petition to revoke the will of September 22, 1924, on the same grounds mentioned in the first contest filed, which contest was stricken on motion of petitioner on March 3, 1930, the order reciting that notice of the hearing "was regularly given to the said Mrs. J. Bustamente, in the manner provided by law."

On May 14, 1930, said J. Truitt Bustamente and Annie Dupea filed another contest to or petition to revoke the will of September 22, 1924, on the same grounds as the amended contest filed by them on January 18, 1929, and stricken by the order of February 8th. The hearing on such contest was noticed for June 20, 1930. On May 24th petitioner McKenna moved to dismiss and strike such contest or petition on the ground that the matters of contest alleged had been adjudicated adversely to the claims of contestants on the several prior contests filed, and on the further grounds that it was filed too late, and that, under section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure, having filed a contest before probate, they were not entitled to file a contest thereafter.

The above proceedings were had before various judges of the Superior Court. The motion last referred to was the first proceeding in said matter to come on for hearing before the honorable Charles S. Crail, judge of said court, and on July 1, 1930, he denied said motion and fixed the 22d day of September, 1930, for the hearing of said contest, whereupon petitioner instituted the proceedings now before us.

It is contended by petitioner that the order of February 8th striking the contest then pending was a final adjudication of all matters alleged therein by contestants, that, having contested the will prior to probate, the latter cannot contest it on the same grounds after probate, and that the contest of May 14, 1930, is barred by the terms of section 1333 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondents on the other hand urge that the contest prior to probate was not determined on the merits, and was therefore no bar to a contest after probate on the same grounds, and that, the order of November 19, 1929, being a nunc pro tunc order finally admitting the olographic will to probate, contestants could at any time within six months from that date file a new contest.

[1, 2] From the record before us it would seem that the amended contest filed January 18, 1929, alleged the same grounds as the contest or petition for revocation filed May 14, 1930. The demurrer to and motion to strike the amended contest, or petition, filed January 18, 1929, was based on grounds that went to the merits as well as to the form of the petition. The record is silent as to the grounds upon which action was taken by the court, and ordinarily in such a case no bar could arise. Kirsch v. Kirsch, 113 Cal. 56, 61, 45 P. 164. In the present case, however, the court proceeded, after sustaining the demurrer and granting the motion, to take proof on the petition to revoke the first will and to probate the olographic will, and made its order revoking the former and admitting the latter to probate. In the face of that action, we must presume that the court sustained the demurrer and granted the motion to strike on the jurisdictional grounds urged, or else presume that it erred in proceeding as it did instead of granting a reasonable time, not exceeding ten days, to amend, as it should have done under section 1312, Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed at that time, if the orders made were based on the grounds going to matters of form only.

[3] Respondents admit that notice of hearing of the motion to strike and demurrer to the amended contest was given, but claim that under section XX of the rules adopted by the judicial council regulating the business of the superior court the time of hearing both demurrer and motion could only be fixed by the clerk of the court, upon whom the duty also devolved of mailing a notice of the date so fixed to counsel; and, that not having been done, the court had no jurisdiction to act on either the demurrer or motion on February 8th. Rule XX so referred to appears in the rules adopted by the judicial council on May 5, 1928, effective August 1, 1928. On December 19, 1928, the judicial council adopted a new set of rules, effective January 1, 1929, providing a different method. Rule XIX thereof provides for the filing of a memorandum of points and authorities relied on with each demurrer and motion, and, if a demurrer is filed without such memorandum, the clerk is required to place it for hearing on the next succeeding law and motion calendar; and in counties having nine or more judges, where the memorandum accompanies the demurrer, the hearing is automatically had on the law and motion calendar the fourth day thereafter. The scheme adopted is so in conflict with the former rules that there would seem to be no question but that they supersede the rules of May 5, 1928, and rule XXVII so provides. Rule X of the rules adopted by the Superior Court provides: "1. All demurrers and motions made on notice shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be heard and determined in one department to be designated, from time to time, by the court. When so designated such department shall be known as the Law and Motion Department. * * * The provisions of this rule shall not apply to the following proceedings, which shall be had in the several departments to which the cases shall have been assigned as provided elsewhere in these rules, to-wit: * * * (4) demurrers, orders to show cause, motions and other matters in probate * * * proceedings." This rule would not seem to be in conflict with rule XIX of the judicial council, at least so far as the noticing of motions is concerned, and the notice given of the hearing of the motion on February 8, 1929, appears to comply with it. Under the record before us the notice would seem to have been properly made.

[4] No appeal was taken from the order revoking the first will and admitting the later will to probate, and there would seem to be no way to determine in this proceeding whether or not the court erred in ruling as it did on the motion to strike. Mooney v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 705, 192 P. 542. It would seem that error in judgment in sustaining a demurrer to a will contest or in granting a motion to strike can only be reached by an appeal from the order admitting the will to probate, made after such rulings. Section 963(3), Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Stierlen, 199 Cal. 140, 142, 248 P. 509.

[5, 6] The notice of motion by contestants Bustamente and Dupea to vacate and set aside all orders made on February 8, 1929, appears not to have specified any grounds upon which it would be made or papers on which it would be based, and that would seem to be a necessary requisite to the hearing of such a motion. Section 1010, Code Civ. Proc.; Ross v. San Diego Glazed C. P. Co., 50 Cal. App. 170, 194 P. 1059; Mojave, etc., R. Co. v. Cuddeback, 28 Cal. App. 439, 442, 152 P. 943. The court therefore did the only possible thing when it vacated all orders based on such motion. The validity of the orders of February 8, 1929, did not depend upon the nunc pro tunc order of November 19, 1929. On principle, it would seem that the orders based on the defective motion to vacate had no effect at all, but, assuming they did, their vacation would simply leave the proceedings where they were before such orders were made, and the date of the probate of the olographic will would not be changed. Estate of Mitchell, 126 Cal. 248, 58 P. 549.

[7] The grounds of petitioner's motion to strike the contest or petition to revoke filed February 7, 1930, by J. Truitt Bustamente appear from the record to have been all directed to the merits. Respondents claim that no notice of the hearing of this motion was given, but the record does not show what was done and the recital in the order is conclusive on us. Estate of Parsons, 159 Cal. 425, 114 P. 570.

[8] The next petition to revoke was filed by both Bustamente and Dupea on May 14, 1930, more than a year after the admission of the olographic will to probate; and, even if new grounds of contest had been alleged, section 1333 of the Code of Civil Procedure would seem to be a bar to proceeding with a hearing thereon in the face of a motion to strike based on that ground.

[9] Another ground mentioned in the motion to strike said petition was that contestants, having filed a contest before probate. were not entitled to contest the will after probate. Section 1327, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended May 25, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 860, § 2), provides: "When a will has been admitted to probate, any interested person, other than a party to a contest filed before probate pursuant to section 1312 of this code * * * may, at any time within six months * * * contest the same or the validity of the will." (Italics ours.) The contestants above mentioned would seem to be expressly excepted by such section from the right to contest after probate, particularly in view of the fact that their contest before probate of the same will on the same grounds was determined adversely to them.

We are heartily in accord with the very just rule of having all cases decided on the merits after a full hearing of the evidence, but in the face of the record before us we see no way that the same can be done in this case. The court below should have granted the motion to strike filed by petitioner to the above-named contestants' contest or petition to revoke on May 14, 1930.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

PER CURIAM.

An application for a writ of mandamus in the above-entitled matter was filed February 6, 1930, and an alternative writ of mandate was granted and made returnable for March 10, 1930. No showing was made on that day, and since that date numerous continuances have been granted upon the request of the petitioner, but to this date the petitioner has failed to appear and has failed to make any showing why a peremptory writ should issue.

It is therefore ordered that for lack of prosecution the proceedings are dismissed, and the alternative writ is discharged.

Order denying new trial is not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action by the Consolidated National Bank of Tucson, Ariz., against the Reiniger Mining & Smelting Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed, and appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHIBALD, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment entered by the trial court against them in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,464.45.

Plaintiff brought its action in the court below to recover upon a judgment rendered the 29th day of March, 1920, in the superior court of the county of Maricopa, state of Arizona, in an action entitled George A. Kennedy, plaintiff, v. The Reiniger Mining & Smelting Company, a corporation, and Charles P. Reiniger, defendants. In said action the plaintiff caused a writ of garnishment to be issued and served on the Consolidated National Bank of Tucson, Ariz., the plaintiff in the present case. The bank failed to answer said writ, and, after judgment was rendered against the defendants in said action and on the same day, the plaintiff entered a judgment by default against said garnishee for the same amount as the primary judgment. The defendants in their answer to plaintiff's complaint admit that, at the time said writ of garnishment was served on said Consolidated National Bank, it was not indebted to defendants or either of them, and that it had no money or other property of either of the defendants. Both judgments were rendered March 29, 1920, and were final judgments on May 16, 1921, when said Kennedy assigned said primary judgment to said bank, and satisfied the judgment against the bank upon receipt from said bank of the amount of the judgment so taken against it by default. The facts above stated clearly appear from the evidence introduced, even without the documentary evidence, objection to the introduction of which was sustained by the trial court.

Appellant contends that the payment to Kennedy by the bank of the judgment against it was a satisfaction of the primary judgment as well as the one against the garnishee, and that the assignment of such primary judgment was wholly ineffective to prevent such satisfaction.

[1-3] There is no question but that, if the bank had satisfied the judgment against the defendants, it would have been a voluntary payment and the bank could not have compelled contribution. Segog v. Engle, 43 Minn. 191, 45 N. W. 427. The record is clear, however, that such was not attempted to be done by either party to the transaction. The witness Steinfield, who was the president of the bank at the time of the transaction with Kennedy, was asked regarding the payment made to Kennedy: "It was in full settlement of both transactions?" To which he answered: "No, it was settlement of the garnishment against the bank and an assignment of the claim upon which this was based." On direct examination said witness testified relative to the settlement as follows: "Q. What did the bank pay that $1,566.93 to Kennedy for? A. It paid it for the judgment that Kennedy obtained against Reiniger in an action which he brought against Reiniger and the garnishee judgment that the bank had entered against it because it inadvertently had forgotten to file an answer." There is nothing in the record to contradict such testimony. While it is true that the judgment against the bank effectually estopped it from denying as against the plaintiff, Kennedy, that it had no funds or property of the defendants in the action, and was not indebted to them, it did not make the bank jointly or severally liable to Kennedy on the same obligation with the defendants, nor did it create any relation at all with the defendants. As to them the bank remained as it was before, a stranger, and as such stranger, while it did not have the right, by paying the primary judgment and satisfying it, to compel contribution, as we have said, it certainly had the right to protect itself by paying the judgment so inadvertently rendered against it, and taking an assignment of the judgment against the defendants.

[4, 5] A garnishment proceeding is in effect a suit by the defendant against the debtor, by which plaintiff is subrogated to the rights of the original creditor. Huntington v. Risdon, 43 Iowa, 517. Here the defendants had no rights to which Kennedy could become subrogated, and, defendants not having been prejudiced by the assignment which Kennedy had the right to make and the bank to take, and not having paid the judgment against them, we do not see where they have any reason to complain.

[6] Defendants offered in evidence the complaint, answer, and transcript of minute orders of November 18, 1922, and December 30, 1922, in the case of Kennedy v. Charles P. Reiniger and Frank W. Leslie, in the superior court of the state of Arizona in and for Pima county, and also exemplified copies of the complaint, answer, first amended answer on motion to bring in additional parties defendant of the Consolidated National Bank of Tucson, supplemental answer of the same defendant, second supplemental amended answer of said bank, verdict of the jury, and transcript of minutes entered, particularly of October 11, 1921, and October 13, 1922, and to and including the minute entry of Friday, November 18, 1921, all in that certain action in the superior court of the state of Arizona in and for the county of Pima, entitled Selim M. Franklin v. Consolidated National Bank of Tucson, Ariz., to all of which plaintiff's objections to such introduction were sustained by the court. It is appellant's contention that the documents so offered show that the action of the Arizona court, in each case, bars plaintiff's action in the present case, and that the court committed prejudicial error in sustaining such objections.

The complaint in the first case, i. e., that of Kennedy v. Reiniger and Leslie, alleges the making and docketing of the judgment sued on here, the issuance of a writ of execution directed to the plaintiff in Pima county, Ariz. and its return unsatisfied. That the defendant Reiniger in 1919 purchased from certain parties an undivided one-half interest in and to certain mining claims, the deed for which he caused to be made to the defendant Leslie; that the purchase price was paid by Reiniger and title taken by said Leslie for his benefit, and for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of said Reiniger, and that Leslie had notice of such intent, and the complaint prayed that it be decreed that Reiniger was the real owner of said interest, and that the same be sold to pay plaintiff's judgment. The complaint was filed December 5, 1921, and after the assignment to the bank by Kennedy of the judgment sued on. The defendants in their answer set up a plea in bar, alleging substantially that the plaintiff had no real interest in the judgment set out in the complaint, for the reason that the same had been satisfied and discharged by the plaintiff in this action, and that said bank was the real party plaintiff, "wherefore, defendants plead in bar to this action that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest and that the same should be dismissed."

There seems to be but the one plea in bar in the answer in said case, as distinguished from the usual denials and allegations making up the answer, and which set up the defense of payment by reason of the payment and satisfaction of the judgment against the garnishee bank, and also that the claim of the bank under the assignment of the primary judgment to it by the plaintiff, Kennedy, had been adjudicated adversely in the said case of Franklin v. Consolidated National Bank, and, the bank being the real party in interest in said case of Kennedy v. Reiniger and Leslie, such adjudication was res adjudicata in the latter case. The defendants in such case offered in evidence in support of such plea in bar the judgment, assignment to the bank, and release of the garnishee judgment in the case of Kennedy v. Reiniger Mining and Smelting Co. et al., and on December 30, 1922, the court made an order sustaining said plea in bar. Counsel for defendants urges that, inasmuch as the assignment to the bank authorized it to take in the name of Kennedy "all lawful ways and means for the recovery of the money due or to become due on the judgment," and also gave the bank the power to take in Kennedy's name or otherwise "all lawful ways and means for the recovery of the money due or to become due on said judgment," and as there was no doubt but what the suit was being prosecuted in Kennedy's name for the benefit of the bank, the facts pleaded in bar were not that Kennedy had assigned the judgment to the bank, but that the judgment "had been paid in full, satisfied and discharged by the Consolidated National Bank of Arizona," and, the court having so decided, the judgment in that case is a bar to the action here. Unfortunately, the defendants in such case did not so frame their plea in bar, but based it on the clause that "the plaintiff is not the real party in interest and that the same should be dismissed." That would seem to be the only question raised by the so-called plea in bar, and would seem to be the only question the court had power to decide in disposing of the plea. The defense of payment is fully set up in the answer apart from the plea.

The documents in the case of Franklin v. Consolidated National Bank so offered in evidence show that the plaintiff in that case sued the bank for the sum of $1,806.03 which the complaint alleged the bank had agreed to pay to one L. E. Jettinghoff, and which claim was assigned by Jettinghoff to plaintiff. The answer of the bank sets out that one Laughlin purchased from one Anderson and said Reiniger a certain truck, for which he gave them two promissory notes in the sum of $1,750, and that thereafter Reiniger became the owner and holder of the notes; that thereafter, and on or about July 3, 1919, Laughlin placed in escrow the sum of $1,806.03, with instructions to pay the same to Reiniger for account of said Laughlin upon receipt of said promissory notes and bill of sale for said truck. On February 3, 1921, the bank, by one D. Bush, wrote a letter to said Reiniger, acknowledging receipt of the bill of sale and promissory note, which also provided: "I agree not to deliver above bill of sale and above notes to W. C. Laughlin until I have paid said L. E. Jettinghoff lawful money of the United States in full for the J. E. Anderson note for $1,750.00 and interest and protest charges." The answer then sets up the proceedings in the case of Kennedy v. Reiniger Smelting Co. et al., resulting in the assignment of the judgment in that case to the bank, including the service of the writ of garnishment on the bank, December 15, 1919. The answer then alleges that, at the time of the service of the writ on it, said sum of $1,806.03 was in the possession of the bank, "and that on or about March 19, 1921, one H. V. Anaya as assignee of said Anderson instituted a suit in said Arizona court to recover a sum of money alleged to be due, and caused a writ of garnishment to issue out of said court in said action and to be served on the bank."

The answer also alleges that said Jettinghoff was an employee of said Reiniger during all of the times mentioned, and that said Franklin was his attorney, that the receipt for the bill of sale was wrongfully and fraudulently obtained by said Jettinghoff from the defendants' clerk, D. Bush, who had no authority to issue the same, all of which was known to said Franklin, and that said Reiniger prepared said instrument. The answer then prays that Reiniger, Jettinghoff, Anaya, Laughlin, and Anderson be made parties to said action, and that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the $1,806.03 be adjudged to have been the property of said Reiniger and subject to the Kennedy garnishment, and that it be decreed that the bank be entitled to reimburse itself therefrom, and that it be adjudged that said Franklin and the other parties named have no right whatever to said $1,806.03. The judgment in said action recites that a jury was empanelled and sworn and that plaintiff and defendant each offered certain oral and documentary evidence and rested, after which the both parties made a motion for an instructed verdict, and that the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, on which verdict judgment was rendered for the plaintiff and against the defendant in said sum of $1,806.03. The bank's motion to bring in the additional parties was denied except as to said Anaya. The minute orders offered show that the plaintiff offered in evidence the letter referred to executed by "D. Bush" for the bank; that the defendant offered in evidence the original writ of garnishment in the case of Kennedy v. Reiniger Smelting Co. et al., plaintiff objecting thereto, and which objection was sustained. The offer of the assignment (evidently assignment of judgment to the bank) was also objected to by plaintiff, and the objection was sustained. The answer of the bank does not deny that Jettinghoff assigned his interest in said sum of money to Franklin, and consequently it admitted that the assignment was made, but alleges that it was "a purported transfer of assignment." It appears, however, that, at the time of the levy of the writ of garnishment in the bank, the $1,806.03 deposited with the bank by Laughlin was still his money, and that the conditions that would have given Reiniger or his assignee the right to claim it had not been performed, i. e., the promissory notes and bill of sale had not been deposited, and from the record offered apparently were not deposited until on or about February 3, 1921, so there would seem to be no merit in the contention of the bank in such case that said sum of money was subject to the lien of the garnishment on which judgment was rendered against it, as no relation of debtor and creditor existed at such time as between it and said Reiniger, and as against the claim of Reiniger's assignee, on the showing made, it had no right to set off said sum of $1,806.03 or any part of it (Aigeltinger Co. v. Healy-Tibbitts Const. Co., 23 Cal. App. 608, 139 P. 436, 438), and the assignment of the fund to Franklin carried the title to it, so the court evidently decided that there was no evidence of fraud in the transaction, and we fail to see how the evidence offered was competent to show that the question here was adjudicated by the court in that case, and no error was committed in sustaining such objections.

[7] Appellant further contends that the court erred in ruling that the answer of the defendants did not state a defense. In this connection counsel for defendants points out that the facts alleged in defendants' fourth and separate defense show a former adverse adjudication by the superior court of Maricopa county, Ariz., of the rights of plaintiff, and implies that defendants were prevented from introducing evidence in support of such defense by the ruling of the court. We would quite agree with counsel if we could find anything in the record showing that defendants had been prevented by such ruling from so introducing evidence on such fourth ground of defense.

The findings of fact of the trial court recite that no evidence was offered by the defendants, or either of them, on said fourth and separate defense, and such finding is supported by the record before us.

[8] After the documents mentioned above were offered in evidence the record shows the following colloquy between counsel:

"Mr. Gilbert: I would like to know if the testimony is all in.

"Mr. Veitch: No.

"Mr. Gilbert: Well, let us finish the testimony first; we have stipulated that all these objections were to be passed upon by the court, and held in abeyance.

"Mr. Veitch: To the end of the case.

"Mr. Gilbert: Yes sir.

"Mr. Veitch: Very well."

The record does not show any further offer of evidence by either party, and it shows that after argument the court made its ruling sustaining the objections theretofore made to the documents offered, and also that the court "also ordered that the objections of counsel for plaintiff to the effect that the answer of the defendants herein does not state sufficient to constitute a defense, be sustained." No evidence already introduced was stricken, however. It is true that the court made findings of fact, which could only be justified on the theory that some of the documentary evidence so offered (and objections to the introduction of which were sustained), was before the court, but the same result necessarily followed from the exclusion of such evidence, and we fail to see where any prejudice resulted therefrom. Code Civ. Proc. § 475. The notice of appeal recites that it is taken from the order denying a motion for a new trial in said action. Such an order is not appealable. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of C. M. Brannon, deceased. Mrs. Lillian Brannon filed petition for appointment as executrix, and for probate of will, and Jennie Lee Brannon contested the will and filed a petition for letters of administration. From an order and judgment admitting the will to probate and appointing Mrs. Lillian Brannon executrix, and from an order and judgment denying Jennie Lee Branon's petition for letters of administration, the latter appeals.

Affirmed.

Andreani, Haines, Bisher & Carrey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Call & Murphey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

On December 30, 1920, C. M. Brannon made his last will and testament, by which he gave, devised, and bequeathed to Jennie Lee Brannon, his wife, and to Mrs. Lillian Brannon, a former wife, his entire estate, real and personal, designating the latter as executrix. The widow appeals from an order and judgment admitting said will to probate and appointing the executrix so designated, and from an order and judgment denying her own petition for letters of administration.

While living with the contestant, the decedent executed his will, the material parts of which provided as follows: "I give, bequeath and devise to Jennie L. Brannon, my present wife, in fee simple, all that certain lot, tract or parcel of land," which they then occupied as a residence. "I give, bequeath and devise to Mrs. Lillian Brannon, my former wife, all the residue of my estate, whether real or personal." "Should either of the beneficiaries under this my will, object to the probate thereof, or in anywise, directly or indirectly, contest or aid in contesting the same, or any of the provisions thereof, or the distribution of my estate thereunder, then and in that event I annul any bequest herein made to such beneficiary, and it is my will that such beneficiary shall be absolutely barred and cut off from any share in my estate, and in such event, I hereby give, bequeath and devise all of my estate to the beneficiary above named who does not contest this will." About four months thereafter the testator's wife obtained a decree of divorce which, pursuant to a mutual property settlement, awarded to her the property devised and bequeathed to her by the testamentary disposition. In July, 1923, the parties remarried, said property was sold, the proceeds therefrom were invested by Jennie Lee Brannon in another home which she purchased in the name of herself and her husband as joint tenants, and they resided thereon until his demise. It is contended that, since the testator "married, and the wife survives the testator, the will is revoked" by the provisions of section 1299 of the Civil Code. Said section reads as follows: "If, after making a will, the testator marries, and the wife survives the testator, the will is revoked, unless (1) provision has been made for her by marriage contract, or (2) unless she is provided for in the will, or (3) in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision; and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation must be received."

[1-6] The purpose and effect of these provisions was to dispense with the doctrine of an implied revocation. In an appropriate case it will be presumed that an altered intention arises from a change of circumstances, so that, had the will been made under altered conditions, the testator would have made a different disposition of his estate. In re Comassi's Estate, 107 Cal. 4, 40 P. 15, 16, 28 L. R. A. 414; In re Meyer's Estate, 44 Cal. App. 289, 186 P. 393. The question then suggests itself: For what new condition or relationship must it be said that the testator might have intended to provide? In what did the resumed marital obligations of C. M. Brannon at the time of his death at the residence which appellant received differ from conditions existing at the date of his will, or from conditions which we must assume that he would have provided for had he made a subsequent will? We think merely to recite them is to state one and the same thing. A judicial severance of the marital relations by decree of divorce does not create an altered condition affecting the validity of prior testamentary dispositions. In re Patterson's Estate, 64 Cal. App. 643, 222 P. 374. We may not read into the statute an exception not incorporated therein by the Legislature, nor may a will be revoked by implication. In re Appenfelder's Estate, 99 Cal. App. 330, 278 P. 473. The implied construction of appellant that if, after making a will, the testator remarries his spouse and the wife survives him, the will is revoked notwithstanding that she is provided for therein, then falls of its own weight. And the contestant is not aided by argument that her sale of the property willed to her was inconsistent with the devise thereof, within the interpretation of section 1304 of the Civil Code by Estate of Benner, 155 Cal. 153, 99 P. 715, and like cases. It cannot be said that her acceptance and conveyance of the property intended for her and investment of the proceeds for her own benefit was inconsistent with the presumed intention of her husband as indicated by the terms of his will. Courts in interpreting a will are not concerned with the amount of the testator's bounty. In re Appenfelder's Estate, supra. He is not legally required to include a relative or friend, nor to make a just or a natural will. Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 P. 101; Estate of Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 P. 701; Estate of Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 P. 172, 711. Appellant was "provided for in the will" under conditions unchanged by marriage and of which C. M. Brannon expressly stated that he was cognizant when it was executed, and she cannot be heard to complain of a provision deemed inadequate.

[7] The only remaining question of importance which is presented is as to whether or not, if intentionally disinherited, appellant was "in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision" for her. We think this is answered affirmatively by the rule announced in Re Kurtz's Estate, 190 Cal. 146, 210 P. 959, that the wife may be "mentioned" by any description that would include her, but, in view of the conclusion reached herein, further discussion of the point becomes unnecessary.

The orders and judgments from which appeals are taken are affirmed.

CRAIG, J.

At about 9 o'clock at night on June 12, 1927, the occupants of an automobile were accosted by a highwayman on the public streets of the city of Los Angeles, who deprived them of a watch, a diamond ring, about $10 in money, and their car. About three years thereafter the appellant was apprehended and charged by information with the theft of the watch and the ring, of which a jury found him guilty. He has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

It appears that on the evening mentioned a lady and her escort were sitting in a black Auburn sedan in front of her residence on St. Andrews place, in said city, when a man appeared, pointed a revolver at them, and demanded that they "drive on"; that he entered the rear seat, menacing them with the weapon, ejected them from the car, and drove away. The automobile, watch, and ring were recovered, and the jewelry was identified by the owners during the trial. They testified that their assailant was of medium height, wore a light overcoat, Panama hat, and had a mustache, but were unable to swear that the defendant was the same person. A Mrs. Mae Dye, who testified that she had known the defendant for a period of about three years, received the ring, which consisted of three large diamonds and several small ones, from one Henderson, pawned it in the city of Pomona, and thereafter accompanied one Hatfield to the pawnshop where the latter purchased the same, and he subsequently delivered it to the officers. Henderson testified that on the evening of the robbery he was riding with the defendant in the vicinity of St. Andrews place, and that Cheaney was armed; that appellant had previously stated that he was going "out and hold somebody up," and that as they neared St. Andrews place he called the witness' attention to an automobile standing to the rear, and alighted, stating that he was "going back to the car"; that in about twenty minutes he returned with a black machine, which he parked, entered his own car with Henderson, and directed him to proceed; that, when Cheaney returned, he wore a false mustache, had in his possession a fur coat and the ring above described, remarking that he had taken them together with a watch from the occupants of the other machine, but that he had lost the watch. This witness also testified that Cheaney gave him the ring; that he left it at Pomona for sale, and later, accompanied by Mrs. Dye, he went again to that city where he withdrew the ring and delivered it to her prior to its hypothecation by the latter as heretofore observed. She corroborated this last statement. A physician, Dr. William R. McDaniels, admitted that appellant or some one who accompanied him to the witness' office deposited the watch with him as security for appellant's indebtedness to him for professional services, and that he (the witness) delivered the same to an officer. The doctor at about the same time also received a fur coat from the same source for a like purpose.

[1] The grounds of appeal consist of an asserted insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, and that the three-year statutory period of limitation had expired between the date of the alleged offense and the filing of the information. Although the trial court permitted the interposition of a demurrer at the close of the people's evidence upon this latter ground, and a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal was then made upon both grounds, conceding for the purposes of this decision only that the demurrer was presented in time, we think the ruling of the trial court in that behalf was not error. While the information was filed about three years and sixty-two days after the commission of the crime, it was pleaded and stipulated that the defendant was absent from and outside the boundaries of the state from July 8, 1928, to October 11, 1928, or a period of more than three months. The claim that the statute of limitations had run against the charge is without foundation. People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 221 P. 622.

[2, 3] Criticism of the evidence goes principally to its weight and to the lack of proof as to the origin of the coat, as to the defendant's possession of the watch, or of evidence other than the testimony of Henderson, an accomplice, as to Cheaney's presence at the scene of the crime. Witnesses called by the defendant testified to facts and circumstances which, if believed by the jury, might have led them to view his participation in the offense as an impossibility. But, resolving all intendments in favor of the defendant in these respects until the rendition of the verdicts, the commission of the offense, the departure of the defendant from the state, recovery of the jewelry from and through the instrumentality of persons well known to him, together with other circumstantial evidence heretofore recited, of which the jury were cognizant, it does not lie within the province of courts to question their verdicts. All were factors which the jury were bound to consider. There was substantial circumstantial evidence of defendant's participation in the crime even without Henderson's testimony. This may have been deemed as conclusive in its convincing force as testimony of direct witnesses, and sufficient to justify a conviction, excluding any other reasonable theory than that of the guilt of the accused. People v. Nagy, 199 Cal. 235, 248 P. 906. If the jury believed that the property was stolen, and that it was seen in the defendant's possession shortly after being stolen, they were entitled to a satisfactory explanation of its innocent possession in order to remove the effect of possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with such other suspicious facts, if any, as may have been disclosed. People v. Stennett, 51 Cal. App. 370, 197 P. 372. While recent unexplained possession of stolen property, standing alone, does not justify a conviction of larceny, such possession with slight corroboration by other inculpatory circumstances tending to show guilt is sufficient. People v. Farrell, 67 Cal. App. 128, 227 P. 210.

The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

O'DONNELL v. EXCELSIOR AMUSEMENT CO. et al.

No. 7408.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 19, 1931.

Appeal and error ⚷172(3).

Appellate court could not consider plaintiff's right to punitive damages urged for first time on petition for rehearing to sustain verdict.

Plaintiff in his complaint did not claim punitive damages nor allege any facts or circumstances warranting trial court in submitting such issue to jury, and during trial no such damages were claimed and court specifically instructed jury that case was not one for punitive or exemplary damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

On petition for rehearing.

Petition denied.

For former opinion, see 294 P. 737.

L. S. Hamm, J. G. Moser, and B. E. Kragen, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In his petition for rehearing, respondent urges for the first time that he is entitled to punitive damages, and that consequently even though the jury went beyond the limits of the rule of compensatory damages and included in its verdict an allowance to him of punitive damages, the verdict should be allowed to stand. The contention is based upon certain evidence adduced at the trial. It may be conceded that under some circumstances, where the act complained of was done with the authority, either express or implied, of the employer, or was subsequently adopted by him, he may be held liable for punitive damages. But as pointed out in the main opinion 294 P. 737, respondent in his complaint did not claim punitive damages, nor did he allege any facts or circumstances which would have warranted the trial court in submitting such an issue to the jury. Furthermore, throughout the trial of the action no such damages were claimed, and the court instructed the jury that "this is not a case for punitive or exemplary damages. * * *" It is evident, therefore, that the position respondent now assumes is not only at complete variance with the one taken by him throughout the trial of the action and on the appeal from the judgment, but the effect thereof is to ask this court to approve an award of damages having no foundation whatever in the allegations or prayer of the complaint, and which the trial court expressly instructed the jury respondent was not entitled to. Obviously, in the state of the record above described, and aside from any question of whether the evidence relied upon is even sufficient to support an award for punitive damages, respondent's contention that he is entitled to the same cannot be entertained. Furthermore, counsel for respondent are doubtless mistaken in their assertion that "the beating administered to (respondent) occurred while the show was in progress in the theatre and in the presence of numerous patrons, among them being his own daughter. * * *" According to respondent's own testimony, the assault for which he seeks redress took place after Murphy shoved him into the room and closed the door, at which time no one else was present.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

PEOPLE v. BLACK.

Cr. 37.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Jan 26, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1931.

1. Automobiles 🔑355(13).

Evidence in manslaughter trial held to sustain jury's finding that defendant drove automobile at unlawful speed and without due caution.

2. Automobiles 🔑353.

Prosecution proving, in manslaughter trial, that defendant negligently drove automobile, held not required to negative deceased's contributory negligence.

3. Automobiles 🔑355(13).

Evidence in manslaughter trial held to sustain jury's finding that defendant's negligent operation of automobile proximately caused death.

4. Automobiles 🔑355(13).

Possibility that deceased purposely threw herself in front of automobile held insufficient to create reasonable doubt of driver's guilt of manslaughter.

5. Automobiles 🔑355(13).

Evidence in manslaughter trial held sufficient to identify defendant as driver of automobile which struck deceased.

6. Criminal law 🔑680(2).

Prima facie proof of corpus delicti in trial for manslaughter by automobile held sufficient to render admissible testimony as to conversation with defendant concerning accident and failure to stop.

7. Criminal law 🔑823(6).

Instructions in trial for manslaughter by automobile held not erroneous as ignoring questions of contributory negligence and proximate cause, in view of other instructions.

The instructions complained of required conviction, and forbade acquittal on ground of unavoidable accident or contributory negligence, if defendant drove automobile so negligently as to indicate willful or wanton disregard of safety of persons or property, but jury was also instructed to acquit, if deceased's negligence was proximate cause of death or jury had reasonable doubt as to such fact, and that mere fact that defendant caused death of human being while committing unlawful act not amounting to felony is insufficient to sustain charge of manslaughter, in absence of causal connection between such act and death.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

W. C. Black was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals.

Raymond E. Hodge, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, of Los Angeles, for the People.

BARNARD, P. J.

The defendant was found guilty of the crime of manslaughter. The evidence discloses that on the evening of June 7, 1930, at about 8:30 p. m. at the intersection of Mt. Vernon and Rialto avenues in the city of San Bernardino, one Mrs. Minear was struck and killed by an automobile. Mt. Vernon avenue is a main highway and Rialto avenue is 54 feet wide from curb to curb. The corner was poorly lighted, and the intersection was a blind intersection within the meaning of the California Vehicle Act. The only eyewitness was sitting in his parked machine at a service station on this corner and was facing the intersection. He testified that a man in a Graham-Paige sedan, traveling north on Mt. Vernon avenue, approached the intersection at a speed of about 35 miles per hour. His attention was first attracted to the car by the speed at which it was coming. He first saw the car when it was 10 or 15 feet from the south line of the intersection. In a small fraction of a second thereafter, and when the car was about entering the intersection, the brakes on the car were applied. He heard the noise of the tires skidding on the pavement, and continued to watch the car, which went in a northeasterly direction for approximately 10 feet, straightened up, and continued in the same direction for almost 45 feet, then turned sharply to the left. About 10 feet north of the north curb line of Rialto avenue the car struck a woman and threw her a distance of about 30 feet. As her body was going through the air, the car was swinging around to face a westerly direction. The car stopped for about 10 seconds, and then immediately started up and sped westerly on Rialto avenue. Other witnesses testified as to the screeching of the brakes, the skid marks on the pavement, and other matters observed immediately after the collision. The car skidded about 64 feet in a northerly direction, and either came to a stop or practically to a stop, facing almost west. Broken glass and a rim from one of the headlights were found near the point of collision. The only eyewitness saw the deceased just before she was struck by the car, but did not see which way she was walking.

[1-4] Appellant's first and principal contention is that, assuming that he was the driver of the car in question, the evidence is not sufficient either to show the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or to show that the automobile was driven without due caution and circumspection. In particular, it is urged that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to show that the manner in which the car was driven was the proximate cause of the injuries to the decedent, and to show affirmatively that her injuries were not caused by her own negligence. In our opinion, the facts here shown are sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that the accident was due to the negligence of the driver of the car in question. The testimony as to the speed at which the car entered the intersection, the distance and manner in which it skidded, and the distance it knocked the deceased, are sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that the car was traversing the intersection at a speed greater than 15 miles per hour, and that it was not being driven with due caution and circumspection.

The law is settled that the prosecution, under such circumstances as existed here, is not required to negative contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. People v. Halbert, 78 Cal. App. 598, 248 P. 969, 970; People v. McKee, 80 Cal. App. 200, 251 P. 675. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the deceased was guilty of any negligence. The evidence shows negligence on the part of the driver of the car, and this evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries to deceased. It is difficult to imagine any negligence of which the deceased might have been guilty which would have, under these circumstances, constituted the sole proximate cause of the injuries she received, as distinguished from contributory negligence. If she crossed at the wrong place, or in attempting to escape turned back in her tracks, either would not be the sole cause of the accident under the conditions here appearing. While it is possible, as suggested by appellant, that the deceased may have purposely thrown herself in front of the car for the purpose of being killed, such an act would have been willful, and not merely negligent, and such a possibility is not sufficient to create a reasonable doubt. In a prosecution for manslaughter involving a bullet fired from a gun, we apprehend the prosecution would not be required to establish affirmatively that the deceased did not move a few inches into the pathway of the bullet, in order to commit suicide. While it was incumbent upon the prosecution in this case to show that the proximate cause of the accident was the manner in which the car was driven, we think this burden was met, and that it was no more the people's duty to negative this unreasonable possibility than it was to make such additional proof as to the actions of the deceased in the case of People v. Halbert, just cited.

[5] It is next argued that the appellant was not identified as the driver of the car in question. The car which struck deceased was a Graham-Paige sedan. As it sped away, it was observed to bear a dealer's license, No. 2455. Appellant was an automobile dealer. He was known to have driven prior to the accident a car similar to the one which struck the decedent, and he had been seen in such a sedan, bearing dealer's license No. 2455. Later that night a Graham-Paige sedan answering the description of the car seen at the place of the accident was found abandoned about four or five miles north of Colton, a city which almost adjoins San Bernardino. It bore the same license number. The glass and a metal rim were gone from the headlight. The rim found at the scene of the accident fitted the abandoned car. The shutters on the front of the radiator were caved in close to the right headlight. Later, appellant claimed this car and wanted it returned to him. A witness, a salesman formerly employed by appellant, testified that on the day following the accident he received a phone call from appellant asking him to meet him on the outskirts of San Bernardino, and that the following conversation there took place between them: "I said, 'Black, I understand the police are looking for you. I have heard that there was an accident' and I said 'It seems that you are very much wanted' and he made no reply just at that moment. Later on he said 'Well, I have had an accident' but he said 'I am in very much of a turmoil and I need help' and I said 'The best thing for you to do is to get yourself a good attorney and go right down to the police department and turn yourself over to them and explain to them the conditions,' and I says 'That would be the fair way to do it.' I asked him at the time if he was in the accident and I could get no direct reply and I asked him why he did not stop. Well, he said 'I had had a drink before the accident and I was afraid they would accuse me of being intoxicated.' * * * Black said that he needed assistance at the time and I said 'Black, if you did have this accident I don't want to be a party to it before or after.' In fact, I said 'it is a serious offense if you did have this accident relative to the woman that was killed the night before.' Well, he said 'I need a lot of help right at this time,' so my advice was to him to get an attorney which I repeated again. So he said that he would get an attorney and I asked him to turn himself over to the police to eliminate any further bother to them and I said 'if you did have the accident, it was a case of excitement, and explain it thoroughly.' * * * I said 'Even under those conditions, why didn't you stop?' He said 'I was panicky at the time, that is the reason I did not stop.' * * * I said 'Where did you leave your car?' He said he drove it back towards Colton; that was as much information as I remember that he gave me at that time about that. I said 'How did you get over in San Bernardino?' He said he walked over." We think this evidence is sufficient to identify appellant as the driver of the car in question.

[6] Appellant's next contention is that the above conversation was not admissible, for the reason that at the time it was received in evidence there had been no proof of the corpus delicti. This argument is based upon the claim that it had not been shown that the manner in which the car was driven was the proximate cause of the accident, in that it had not been shown that it was not due to the negligence of the deceased. Not only is this contention covered by what we have already said on that subject, but prima facie proof of the corpus delicti was sufficient to make this evidence admissible. In People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426, 429, the court said: "Concerning the admissibility of extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions, it has been correctly declared that: 'Proof of the corpus delicti of the conclusive and convincing character required to support a conviction of the crime charged was not a prerequisite to the reception in evidence of the extrajudicial statements of the defendant that he had killed the deceased. Prima facie proof of the corpus delicti was sufficient for that purpose; and it was not essential to the proof and purpose to show that the crime charged was committed by the defendant.' "

And then, after reviewing the authorities, the court added: "It is apparent from this review of the cases that the general trend of authority has been to hold that, upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti, the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused may be admitted in evidence, and, having been so properly admitted, they may, with the evidence aliunde, be considered by the jury in its determination whether or not all the elements of the crime and the connection therewith of the accused have been established to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt."

In commenting upon a state of facts somewhat similar to those appearing in this case, and where the presence of the defendant's automobile upon the wrong side of the road was held sufficient evidence that he was driving without due caution and circumspection, the court in People v. Halbert, supra, said: "The foregoing statement of facts shows that the evidence was sufficient to prove that the driver of the Ford coupe was guilty of involuntary manslaughter. The only additional fact necessary to sustain the conviction would be the fact that the defendant was the driver of the Ford coupe. The corpus delicti having been established by evidence apart from any admission or confession made by defendant, there remains no doubt that the fact that the defendant was the driver of the offending machine may be established by admission made by him of that fact."

And also: "It follows also that the corpus delicti, consisting of a crime committed by the driver of appellant's automobile, was established by competent evidence exclusive of any confession or admission made by the defendant. We thus arrive at the conclusion, applicable to the third count as well as to the first count of the information, that there is no merit in appellant's contention (based upon the claimed absence of competent proof of the corpus delicti) that the court erred in receiving evidence of his admission that he was in fact the driver of his automobile at the time of the collision."

We think the conversation was properly admitted in evidence, that the appellant was sufficiently identified as the driver of the car, and that the question of proximate cause was correctly submitted to the jury.

[7] Appellant next complains of certain instructions given to the jury. The first is instruction No. 7, which reads as follows:

"You are instructed that section 121 of the California Vehicle Act, as amended in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 539, § 49) defines 'reckless driving' as follows: 'any person who drives a vehicle upon a public highway in so negligent a manner as to indicate either a wilful or wanton disregard of the safety of persons or property, shall be guilty of reckless driving,' and upon conviction shall be fined, etc. * * *

"And in this connection you are instructed that if the jury believe from the evidence in this case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, W. C. Black, on or about the 7th day of June, 1930, in the said County of San Bernardino, State of California, did drive a motor vehicle upon a public street or highway, to-wit: Mt. Vernon Avenue, at or near the intersection of said Mt. Vernon Avenue with Rialto Avenue, in said City of San Bernardino, in so negligent a manner as to indicate a wilful or wanton disregard of the safety of persons or property and while so driving said automobile did drive the same upon and against one Florence Minear with such force and violence as to cause the death of said Florence Minear, then you must find the defendant guilty as charged in the information."

This is objected to as instructing the jury that they might leave out of consideration the negligence of the deceased; in other words, that it left out the question of proximate cause. A similar question was raised in the case of People v. McKee, 80 Cal. App. 200, 251

P. 675, 677, where a similar instruction was given, although based upon a different violation of the California Vehicle Act. In commenting upon this contention, the court said: "Appellant's next assault upon this instruction is based upon his contention that the jury were permitted by it to find the defendant guilty, though the intoxication was not the proximate cause of the accident. The jury were told in other instructions that the gross or culpable negligence or the operation of the machine with a reckless disregard for the safety of others must be the cause of death, and instruction No. 14 stated to them that death must proximately result from such operation. Taken as a whole, we think they correctly stated the law in this particular. However, relating to this point, appellant urges that the instruction permitted the jury to disregard the contributory negligence of the deceased. They were told, and correctly so, in another instruction, that it was no defense."

In the instant case, the jury was fully instructed as to the matter of proximate cause and as to the necessity of finding that the accident occurred because of the unlawful driving of the car in question, and not because of any negligent act of the deceased, in the following two instructions:

"No. 2. You are instructed that contributory negligence, that is negligence on the part of the person injured, which contributed to the injury, is no defense. You are instructed, however, that if you believe that the person injured in this case was injured and killed as a result of her own negligence, that is to say, that her own negligence was the proximate cause of her death, or if you have any reasonable doubt whether such is the case or not, you must acquit the defendant."

"No. 3. You are instructed that the killing of a human being in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony is manslaughter, where a causal connection exists between the unlawful act and the death. You are instructed in this connection, however, that the mere fact that you may believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony, and that while committing such unlawful act, the defendant caused the death of a human being, such is not sufficient to sustain a charge of manslaughter. There must be, in addition, a causal connection between the commission of the unlawful act and the death."

Appellant also complains of instruction No. 17, which reads as follows:

"You are instructed that a person who drives an automobile upon a public highway or street in so negligent a manner as to indicate either a wilful or wanton disregard of the safety of persons or property is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"And in this connection you are instructed that if you believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant did operate an automobile upon a public street or highway at the time and place alleged in the information in so negligent a manner as to indicate either a wilful or wanton disregard of the safety of persons or property, and that while so operating said automobile he struck and killed the deceased, Florence Minear, then you will find him guilty, and you cannot excuse or acquit him of the crime on the ground of an unavoidable accident or on the theory of misfortune, neither can you acquit him on the grounds that said Florence Minear may have been guilty of negligence, which contributed to the accident under such circumstances."

In this instruction the jury were, in effect, told that, if the defendant was operating his car in an unlawful manner, and while so doing struck the deceased, such an event would not constitute an unavoidable accident; and also that any contributory negligence of the deceased would not be a defense. While neither of the instructions complained of contains all of the law, neither is erroneous upon the points covered, and all of the instructions, taken together, disclose that the jury was fully and completely instructed that they could not find the defendant guilty unless his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, nor in the event they found the accident was caused by the negligence of the deceased.

The only other point raised by the appellant is that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in a certain remark made in his argument to the jury. Not only was this not repeated and fully covered by an instruction of the court, but appellant admits that, in itself, it would not be sufficient to constitute reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover a deposit made under a contract of option. The defendant answered. The receivers of the California-Eastern Oil Company and Julian Petroleum Corporation filed a complaint in intervention. The defendant answered the complaint in intervention. On the issues so framed, a trial was had before the court sitting with a jury. At the end of the plaintiff's case, the trial court granted defendant's motions for nonsuits. The plaintiff and the interveners have appealed, have brought up typewritten transcripts, and have filed one set of briefs. Hereinafter we will refer to both parties as the plaintiff.

On the 2d of October, 1926, the plaintiff and defendant executed a contract under the terms of which the plaintiff was given an option to buy a block of stock in the Superior Oil Company at $1 per share. He paid down $100,000, and under the terms of that agreement it was further provided that: "Henry Anchester shall have to and including the 1st day of November, 1926, in which to elect whether or not he will exercise this option. If Henry Anchester elects to exercise this option, he shall, on or before said date, deposit with the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles, the sum of two million dollars ($2,000,000) in cash with instructions to said bank to pay such cash to W. M. Keck or order, and will at the same time deliver to W. M. Keck a written notice of the exercise of this option, whereupon the said Henry Anchester shall be obligated to purchase, and W. M. Keck will be obliged to sell, * * * and in the event of the failure of Henry Anchester to make any of the payments hereinabove provided for at the times herein stated, all previous payments made by him shall be forfeited as agreed and liquidated damages for his breach of the agreement, and this agreement shall be terminated and he shall have no right, title, or interest of any kind or character in and to any of the stock of the Superior Oil Company so deposited or any claim or right of any kind against W. M. Keck or any other person. * * * Time is hereby declared to be of the essence of this agreement." On October 26, 1926, the plaintiff and defendant commenced a discussion of the terms of a new contract of option, not the modification of the existing option. Some of the terms of that proposed contract were to the effect that the plaintiff should have an option extending to the 27th day of December, 1926, at the same price per share, but the plaintiff was to pay $250,000 on the execution of the new option, and there was to be released to the defendant certain equipment then owned by the Superior Oil Company. Said negotiations continued from the 26th day of October until late in the afternoon on November 3, 1926. At that time the negotiations were broken off. No paper or papers were signed evidencing the new agreement, and we do not understand either party to contend that the inchoate transactions ever culminated in a contract.

The plaintiff did not plead the facts, but he pleaded two counts. He set up a common count as for money loaned, and he set up a common count as for moneys had and received. The complaint in intervention set up one count only, and that was a common count as for moneys had and received. In the defendant's answers he denied the material allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint and in the complaint in intervention. Each party made an opening statement. Many witnesses were called and examined. No one of them testified to any fact or facts showing rescission, abandonment, or estoppel excepting as the negotiations for a new option may be evidence thereof.

[1] The plaintiff contends that the defendant, by entering into negotiations with plaintiff looking toward the execution of a new option, estopped himself from relying on the contract of October 2, 1926, that he misled the plaintiff to his injury, and that the defendant therefore breached and abandoned said contract. He does not claim that the defendant, or any one of his agents, made any declaration or promise which lulled him to sleep. He relies solely on conduct. But, in that connection, the plaintiff testified that during those negotiations he stated "every fifteen minutes" that he was not to be understood as waiving any rights under the contract of October 2, 1926. The defendant stated his position in writing. He caused to be delivered to the plaintiff on October 30, 1926, a letter which states: "We understand that your option agreement with Mr. Keck dated Oct. 2, 1926, is still in full force and effect and that this other proposed agreement is simply tentative and not binding on either party and either party has the right to refuse to enter into any additional agreements other than the agreement of Oct. 2, 1926." Giving the plaintiff the benefit of every right to which he was entitled on the presentation of a motion for a nonsuit (Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 158 Cal. 599, 112 P. 53), it is patent that the plaintiff, under such a set of facts, may not claim that he was misled. This conclusion is re-enforced by a consideration of the terms of the proposed agreement dated November 3, 1926. Had it been executed, the plaintiff would not have been entitled to the repayment of his $100,000 nor for a credit as for a payment on account. It does not purport to be a modification of the option dated October 2, 1926. It does not mention that option nor the said $100,000. It is a wholly new and independent instrument.

[2, 3] Examined as an action in equity, the result is the same. If it be claimed that the plaintiff was misled, still it does not follow that he was wholly excused from performance. But, by proper pleadings and proof, he was entitled to apply to a court of equity to be given relief. Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 9, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. But he who seeks equity should do equity. If, as claimed, the plaintiff was ready, anxious, and willing on November 1, 1926, to elect to take up the option dated October 2, 1926, except for the wrong impression he formed as to the defendant's intentions as to a sale, then his remedy was to make a belated tender, and ask a court of equity to approve it and relieve him from his forfeiture. However, the plaintiff has never made a tender nor an offer to perform, and does not now do so. November 3, 1926, it became clear that the defendant was not willing to give another option under the terms of the inchoate agreement of that date. The plaintiff's rights, if any, depended, therefore, on the contract of October 2, 1926, and the duty rested on him of serving a written notice of his election and of tendering $2,000,000 as provided in that instrument. But this he has wholly failed to do.

The facts which we have already set forth show that the defendant at no time abandoned his contract dated October 2, 1926, but at all times relied thereon.

There is no evidence that at any time the defendant was ever in default nor that at any time he departed from his contract nor that he rescinded it in any respect.

The plaintiff cites and relies on Hulen v. Stuart, 191 Cal. 562, 217 P. 750. That case is not in point, because it involved very different facts. In that case the defendant Stuart made certain positive statements that he would later perform the existing contract. In the instant case a proposed agreement was merely being discussed, and the defendant made no promises as to the existing contract.

[4] The plaintiff complains because the defendant did not in his motions for nonsuits state specifically the defects in the proof that had been made by the plaintiff. The defendant replies that, when a motion for a nonsuit has been granted, a court of review will uphold the judgment of nonsuit if it can be upheld under any possible theory whether such theory was or was not specified in the motion. Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 412, 25 P. 487. Moreover, the plaintiff pleaded his case by adopting (1) a common count for money loaned and (2) a common count for money had and received. He did not plead the facts. In stating his motion for a nonsuit, the defendant was fully as exact and as specific as was possible under the allegations of the complaint. In his brief, the plaintiff states for the first time the circumstances under which he claims the courts should ignore the terms contained in his written contract. Until that brief was filed, the defendant could only guess the plaintiff's theory. The plaintiff heard the motion when it was made, but he did not then complain because it was too general and not specific, and thereafter the motions were argued at length in the trial court. We think the point is not well taken.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Mr. Justice Pro Tem. JAMISON delivered the opinion of the court.

On December 10, 1925, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted appellant against respondent, and she was awarded the custody of their two minor children, Robert and Owen Baldwin; the respondent being required to pay appellant $17.50 per week for their support. This divorce was made final on December 18, 1926, and in November, 1927, appellant married one Sidney Garcia. Thereafter, in January, 1928, respondent filed a motion to modify said decree by reducing said allowance for the support of said minors to $10 per week, and also a motion to modify said decree by changing the order therein awarding the custody of said minors to appellant and substituting therefor an order awarding their custody to respondent. On the 26th day of January, 1928, by stipulation of the parties made in open court, Mary A. Maxwell was appointed referee to take testimony regarding the custody of said minors, with direction to submit findings of fact and recommendation to the court concerning the custody of said minors.

On February 23, 1928, the said referee filed her report, and stated therein that since the marriage of appellant to Garcia in 1927, conditions surrounding the minors had materially changed for the worse, that the home was congested, the food supplied them was insufficient, their clothing neglected, and the minors generally uncared for, that the defendant resides with his mother, the grandmother of these minors, and that this home is entirely suitable for the residence of said minors. The referee recommended that the care, custody, and control of the minors be given to respondent, their father, Percy L. Baldwin. The said Robert Baldwin is now of the age of ten years and Owen Baldwin is now of the age of eight years.

On March 1, 1928, when the report of the referee came on for consideration before the court, appellant requested leave to file a supplemental affidavit, which was granted and the matter continued to March 9, 1928. The appellant filed her supplemental affidavit and respondent filed a counteraffidavit, and on March 8, 1928, the court made an order modifying the decree by giving the custody of said minors to respondent, and from this order the appellant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Appellant's only contentions are that the evidence does not support the order and that the best interests of said minors will be served by leaving them with appellant.

The bill of exceptions does not contain the evidence taken before the referee, and, as the affidavit of appellant contained in the bill of exceptions is controverted by the counteraffidavit of respondent, we find no merit in appellant's contentions that the order is not supported by the evidence.

[2] The court retains full jurisdiction to modify its decree where such modification is rendered expedient because of circumstances arising since the rendition of the decree which vitally affect the welfare of the children. Swenson v. Swenson, 101 Cal. App. 440, 281 P. 674; In re Wood (Cal. App.) 285 P. 323; Olson v. Olson, 95 Cal. App. 594, 272 P. 1113.

[3, 4] In passing upon a contest between divorced parents for the custody of minor children, the interest of the children is the paramount question to be considered. Olson v. Olson, supra. The trial court has a wide discretion in awarding the custody of children, and, unless it clearly appears that this discretion has been abused, its decision cannot be altered by the appellate court. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 P. 582; Cammack v. Cammack, 205 Cal. 674, 272 P. 288; Brown v. Brown, 92 Cal. App. 276, 268 P. 401.

We fail to find in the record any evidence of abuse of discretion by the trial court in awarding to defendant the custody of said minor children, nor has appellant pointed to anything therein which tends to support such contention.

The order is affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and George H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., and C. O. Thompson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Bernardino, for the People.

MARKS, J.

Appellant was charged with the crime of rape upon a female under the age of eighteen years, not his wife. He was found guilty of an attempt to commit rape and was sentenced to the penitentiary. He maintains that the evidence offered by the people was so inherently improbable that it will not support the verdict and judgment.

[1] No good purpose could be served by reviewing the testimony here in all its sordid and revolting details. It will suffice to state that it shows a bestial attack upon the prosecutrix, a girl of the age of sixteen years, by appellant. The crime was committed near a byroad about six miles north of the city of San Bernardino during a stop in an automobile ride following a dance. There were three girls in the party who were of the ages of fifteen, sixteen, and eighteen years respectively, and four boys who were of the ages of sixteen, eighteen, twenty, and twenty-one years respectively. The testimony of the prosecutrix would have supported a verdict of guilty as charged. It showed that the appellant accomplished his purpose by the use of force and that his victim resisted to the extent of her strength and ability and repeatedly called her companions to come to her aid. Her testimony is amply corroborated by her girl companions and other evidence. It is also corroborated in many particulars by the testimony of appellant and the boys of the party. That appellant attempted to, or did, commit the actual rape, and that the prosecutrix cried out for help, are the only particulars in which appellant contradicted the story of his victim. The evidence is amply sufficient and is not inherently improbable. We are satisfied that under its oath and the evidence before it, the only other verdict which the jury could have consistently returned was one finding the defendant guilty of rape.

[2] Appellant complains of the instructions given to the jury as well as of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions proposed by him. We have gone over all instructions carefully and can find no error of law therein prejudicial to the appellant. He particularly complains because the court submitted the question of attempt to commit rape to the jury, contending that the evidence clearly showed the appellant either guilty of rape or not guilty. In this we cannot agree with him. He produced an expert witness who testified at length. The sole purpose of this evidence was to disprove the prosecutrix's charge of penetration. This evidence presented an issue of fact which the court correctly submitted to the jury.

[3] The evidence discloses that there was a half-gallon jug half full of wine in appellant's car in which the seven young people rode to the scene of the crime. The wine was consumed by appellant and one or more of his male companions prior to the assault on the prosecutrix. Appellant objected to the introduction of evidence concerning the wine on the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, which objection was overruled by the court. He now maintains that this ruling was erroneous because the evidence tended to show appellant guilty of the possession and transportation of liquor. Under the following authorities, we are of the opinion that this ruling of the trial court was not prejudicial to appellant under the facts of this case: People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 P. 175; People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 482, 56 P. 251; People v. Ellis, 188 Cal. 683, 206 P. 753; People v. Piero, 79 Cal. App. 357, 249 P. 541.

[5, 6] Appellant further contends that he was denied due process of law for the reason that the reporter did not take down in shorthand the arguments of the district attorney. In his request for the preparation of the record on appeal he stated that he desired the transcription of the arguments of the district attorney and the trial court ordered the reporter to transcribe them. Only one paragraph of such argument appears in the record, together with appellant's objection thereto, and the court's order striking it out. The record contains no reason why the balance of the arguments were not incorporated, nor does it appear whether or not the reporter took down the arguments in shorthand. There was no request made for a diminution of the record. It is incumbent upon appellant to show error and that such error was prejudicial to his rights. There is no showing in the record that any portion of the arguments not transcribed contained anything prejudicial to appellant or anything to which he objected or assigned as error. We cannot assume error or prejudice to appellant. People v. Casey, 79 Cal. App. 295, 249 P. 525.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action by Thomas S. Littlejohns and others against Francis Henderson and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with instructions.

G. C. Watson and H. R. Collins, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

In this case a demurrer to the complaint was interposed upon the ground that the facts stated did not constitute a cause of action and was sustained without leave to amend and judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants. From this judgment plaintiffs have appealed.

The complaint sets forth in substance that on the 7th day of June, 1923, some 125 owners of lots in the city of Los Angeles, including plaintiffs, entered into an agreement, by the terms of which they mutually agreed that they and each of them, would not permit the said property to ever be used or occupied by persons of either the negro, African or Asiatic race, whether as owner or tenant and that upon any transfer, sale, assignment, or conveyance of said property said transfer, sale, assignment, or conveyance of said property should be subject to the covenants and conditions of this contract, and that upon the execution of any deed or conveyance would incorporate in said deed or conveyance an express covenant that the grantee of the said deed or conveyance, his heirs, assigns, and successors would not permit said property to be used or occupied by any person other than of the white or Caucasian race; that this covenant was executed in accord with a general plan for the purpose of making and maintaining the said property as desirable residence property and for the mutual benefit of said lots; that the said covenant should be construed to be a covenant running with the land for the benefit of all parties to the agreement and each and all of the several parcels of land; that upon a breach of the agreement or said covenant the continuance of such breach might be enjoined by any of the other owners, their heirs or assigns; that said agreement was duly recorded in the official records of Los Angeles county, Cal., on September 23, 1923; that thereafter three of the signers of said agreement conveyed the land owned by them and contained in the agreement to Lydia G. Montgomery and to Albert W. and Pinkie Wilson, the three last named being negroes; that the defendants Lydia G. Montgomery, Albert W. and Pinkie Wilson, Francis Henderson, C. A. Williams and Mrs. C. H. Williams, and C. Parker are of the negro race, and are in the use, occupation, and possession of parcels of land described in said agreement; that at the time of the purchase of said parcels and occupation of the same defendants had actual knowledge of the existence of said agreement and of the terms thereof; that the parties to said agreement are numerous and it is impracticable to bring them before the court; that their interests are identical with that of the plaintiffs, and this action is brought for and on behalf of all such persons. Then follow allegations of irreparable loss that will result to said owners by the continued occupation of the premises by defendants.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the agreement is purely personal and that if it could be construed to be a covenant it does not run with the land and would not be binding on the grantee. And it must have been upon this theory that the lower court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

We deem it unnecessary to call attention to the numerous authorities which are adverse to respondents' contention in view of a recent decision of the Supreme Court, namely, the decision set forth in the case of Wayt v. Patee, 205 Cal. 46, 269 P. 660, 661. This decision cites many of the authorities bearing upon the question under consideration and fully sustains plaintiffs' claim that the lower court erred in sustaining the demurrer. That was a case where the some sixty owners entered into a written agreement not to permit occupancy of the land owned by them by any person other than of the Caucasian race and that the restriction should be incorporated in all deeds or transfers of the property. It further provided that the covenant should run with the land until January, 1950. There the court said:

"The sole question presented on this appeal relates to the construction and legal effect of the instrument or agreement of the parties above set forth, whereby they sought to confine the occupancy of lots in said tract to persons of the Caucasian race. Since the decision by this court of the case of Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, 181 Cal. 680, 9 A. L. R. 115, 186 P. 596, it has been the settled law of this state that there is a material difference between a condition in a deed or other instrument whereby the owner of real property binds himself not to transfer or convey said real property to a certain class of individuals and a condition whereby the owner binds himself not to permit said real property to be occupied by the same class of individuals. The first condition is held to be in restraint of alienation, and thereby void under the terms of section 711 of the Civil Code. But a condition in a deed or other instrument against the occupancy of real property by persons of a certain class, as, for instance, those not of the Caucasian race, is valid and binding.

"The agreement, therefore, in the present action, whereby the parties thereto bound themselves not to permit their respective lots in said subdivision to be occupied by any persons other than those of the Caucasian race, and to incorporate such a restriction in all deeds of transfer of their respective lots was a valid covenant, and binding upon the parties thereto."

Further along in said opinion at page 51 thereof (269 P. 660, 662), the court further said:

"There can be no doubt of the proposition that personal covenants or agreements bestowing benefits and imposing restrictions upon the use of land may be enforced in equity, where a subsequent purchaser from the covenantor takes with notice of an existing equitable claim or interest in favor of another," citing Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 86 P. 686; McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 215 P. 678; Martin v. Holm, 197 Cal. 733, 242 P. 718.

[3] While the conveyance under which defendants acquired title to the land is not invalidated nor impaired, it does, however, prevent them from occupying or residing upon said property, even though the legal title thereto is in them. Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, supra; Wayt v. Patee, supra.

The complaint alleges that when the defendants purchased the property and entered into the possession and occupancy thereof, they did so with actual knowledge of said agreement. This being true, they are bound by the restricting covenant, and being members of the negro race, they cannot occupy or reside upon the premises so restricted.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrer, and giving the defendants a reasonable time to answer the complaint.

All concur.

David E. Peckinpah and Bert Green, both of Fresno, for respondent.

JENNINGS, J.

This is a motion to dismiss an appeal. The motion is based on the ground that the appellant did not file his brief within the time permitted by the rules of the court. The transcript was filed on October 6, 1930. The time for appellant to file his opening brief expired, therefore, on November 5, 1930. Notice of the presentation of this motion was served and filed December 10, 1930. The motion was noticed for presentation on January 13, 1931, and was presented on that date. On December 12, 1930, appellant's brief was filed. Appellant's attorney has presented and filed an affidavit from which it appears that during the period of his apparent delay he was diligently employed in the trial of various cases. Furthermore, the affidavit shows that the appeal has been taken and presented in good faith, and that the delay has not appreciably postponed the hearing of the appeal on its merits. Fishman v. Silva (Cal. App.) 291 P. 430; Righetti v. Monroe, etc., Inc. (Cal. App.) 289 P. 650.

The motion should be denied, and it is so ordered.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

This is an action brought by Clyde E. Cate, as administrator of the estate of Genevieve Brennan, deceased, against the Fresno Traction Company and its motorman, W. E. Gash, and also against William H. Bruce, the driver of the automobile in which Genevieve Brennan, deceased, and her minor son were riding at the time of the collision which occurred at a railroad crossing on September 20, 1928. The case was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict against all of the defendants for $20,001; also a verdict in favor of the Fresno Traction Company and W. E. Gash as against the cross-complainant on the cross-complaint of William H. Bruce. All of the defendants have appealed.

The Fresno Traction Company operates its electric trolley line on regular schedule between the city of Fresno and the town of Pinedale, which is situated some 9 miles north of Fresno, and has been operating such line for a number of years. The line runs approximately north and south between Fresno and Pinedale, and is a single track line where it crosses Shaw avenue, which is a paved highway and runs approximately east and west. The paved portion of the highway is 24 feet in width, and crosses the tracks of the Fresno Traction Company at a right angle. This intersection is about 5 miles from the city of Fresno in a level and sparsely settled country.

The deceased, Genevieve Brennan, a woman of thirty-five years of age at the time of the accident, was employed by defendant William H. Bruce, a man of thirty-seven years of age, to do general housework on a ranch upon which he was living and was leasing, which is located about 11 miles north of Madera. Some two weeks prior to the accident Bruce had taken Mrs. Brennan and her small boy to visit her mother, and on the date of the accident had gone for them and was returning them to his ranch. Bruce drove his automobile in a westerly direction along Shaw avenue. The trolley car involved in the collision approached Shaw avenue from Bruce's right, and was traveling in a southerly direction towards Fresno. For 637 feet along Shaw avenue before reaching the car tracks, and on Bruce's right as he approached the crossing and in the direction from which the electric car was approaching, there was nothing to obscure Bruce's nor Mrs. Brennan's vision of the electric car; the ground was level, no foliage, house, or other obstructions of any kind were in the open country on their right as they proceeded towards the rails of the Fresno Traction Company; 307 feet from the tracks facing east and in the direction from which Bruce and the deceased approached the tracks was a standard California State Automobile Association railroad sign. The property lines extend 18 feet both north and south of the paved portion of Shaw avenue; 12 feet 6 inches from the rail, and facing the direction from which the automobile was approaching, and 13 feet north of the paved portion of the highway, stood a standard railroad crossing sign. The automobile in which Bruce, Mrs. Brenan, and the child were riding was an open Ford. Mrs. Brennan sat next to Bruce in the front seat, and the boy was sitting at the right of his mother. From defendant Bruce's testimony, it appears that he and Mrs. Brennan were discussing what he had done while she had been away and a dance he attended. As they approached the tracks, and at a distance of about 60 or 80 feet therefrom, they both looked to the right and then he looked to the left. He further testified that he saw nothing; that Mrs. Brennan said nothing until just before the crash, when she said: "Lord! There is a car"; that he did not slow the speed of his automobile at any time during his approach to or while he was upon the tracks.

As to the motorman giving a warning signal, there is some conflict. Both the motorman and Robert Morris Hogan—the only passenger on the electric car at the time of the accident—testified that the motorman sounded a warning gong, the motorman stating: "Somewhere within about sixty feet of the edge of the paved portion of the highway, and I rang my gong * * * and he didn't check his speed any, and they were looking right at me, and I thought he was going on through, or he might have been aiming to stop; I can't say but he didn't check his speed * * * I went over and got a little air. Taken just enough air through my air valve to pull the car down so it would give him plenty of time for clearance on through. * * * Well, he didn't check his speed. I got up within—something about ten or twelve feet of the edge of the paved portion of the highway and he was anywhere from about seven to nine feet east of the street car rail and all of a sudden he slammed on his brakes and swayed just a little to the left, and I had taken all the air I had, then at that time, and I realized there was going to be an accident." The passenger, Hogan, stated that the motorman rang his gong "ten or fifteen feet before we hit the crossing. I couldn't say just exactly how far." Defendant Bruce testified that he heard no such gong sounded, and Floyd Lawden, a youth of thirteen years of age, who was walking along Shaw avenue and when about 100 feet west of the car tracks his attention was attracted by the crash of the collision, testified that he did not hear a gong or bell ring. When the motorman first observed the automobile, the electric car was traveling at 18 or 19 miles an hour, and when it approached the crossing it had been slowed down to 17 miles per hour. The speed of the automobile, according to defendant Bruce, was from 18 to 22 miles an hour. The automobile was struck about the center of the highway, shoved along and across the same and up to a telephone pole which stood 18 feet south of the southerly edge of the paved portion of the highway and a few feet west of the electric car tracks. Mrs. Brennan and her son sustained injuries from which they both died the next day.

[1-6] The facts clearly show the driver of the automobile to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in driving his automobile upon a railroad track, which is itself a sign of danger, without first looking and listening. Giannini v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. App. 126, 276 P. 618, and cases collated. Shaw avenue is outside the limits of any incorporated city, and, there being no ordinance compelling the motorman to stop at the intersection, the action is governed by different rules of law than those which arise within the corporate limits of a municipality, coming under the same rules of law applicable to steam railways. New York Lubricating Oil Co. v. United Railroads, 191 Cal. 96, 215 P. 72; Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 362, 219 P. 992, 995. The evidence discloses that the motorman observed the automobile proceeding at an ordinary rate of speed, and therefore had a right to rely upon the presumption that the driver would perform his duty and stop at the intersection. And this is especially true where, as here, the driver was looking directly at the electric car. His view was clear and unobstructed, and the fact that he testified that he did not see the car nor hear the warning gong is immaterial, as "the law presumes that a person possessing normal faculties of sight and hearing must have seen and heard that which was within the range of his sight and hearing." Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 746, 754, 210 P. 259, 262. Furthermore, a person approaching a railroad track, which is itself a warning of danger, must take advantage of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen, and a traveler may not depend upon a custom or even a duty enjoined by law to give appropriate signals of the approach of trains, and has no right, because he heard no such signals, not to look and listen. Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 776, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842. Vaca v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal. App. 470, 475, 267 P. 346. The motorman had the right to presume that the driver of the automobile would stop or turn aside until his conduct was such as should reasonably have led him to apprehend the contrary. So long as it appeared that the driver, "with reasonable care, could stop his automobile, or turn it to one side or the other, so as to avoid a collision, and there were no obvious indications that he might not do so, the motorman had the right to assume that he would do so and upon that assumption to proceed along the track." Arnold v. San Francisco-Oakland Railway Co., 175 Cal. 1, 164 P. 798, 800. "The operator of such train or car was not bound to check the otherwise rightful speed of his train or car in approaching and passing such crossing until at least he has reason to believe that such person so approaching such crossing is not performing, or is not likely to perform, his duty in the foregoing regard." Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.

In the present case the testimony shows that the motorman was not aware of any danger until his car was approximately 10 or 12 feet from Shaw avenue. Up to that time he believed—as under the law he had a right to believe—that the driver of the automobile would obey the law and either stop his automobile or speed up and go by, and this especially in view of the fact that, when he first looked, the occupants of the automobile were looking at him. In fact, the testimony of Bruce was that when he was 80 feet back from the track both he and the deceased looked in the direction of the oncoming car, and the testimony further establishes the fact that Bruce could easily have stopped his automobile before reaching the intersection. From a point 10 or 12 feet from Shaw avenue, where the motorman first became cognizant that a collision would occur or first realized there was imminent danger, he did everything within his power to stop the car; he gave it all the air he had, and did his utmost to prevent the accident.

Respondent urges that the question of the contributory negligence of the deceased is one of fact for the jury, and cites Parker v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 609, 615, 269 P. 622, 624, wherein it is said: "It is impossible to lay down a general rule as a test of a passenger's responsibility under such circumstances. At times it might be highly improper to suggest any course of action on the part of the driver. At other times the circumstances might be such as to charge the passenger with some duty to suggest caution or otherwise endeavor to protect himself. See Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460; Stewart v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 44 Cal. App. 202, 186 P. 160. Each case must rest upon its own set of facts, and the determination of those facts, as a general rule, is one for the jury."

[7, 8] We concede that the question of a passenger's contributory negligence is ordinarily a question for the jury, and, further, that the contributory negligence of the driver cannot be imputed to a passenger. Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385; Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 171 P. 1059; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319; Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 679, 269 P. 529, 531. We do not, however, agree with respondent that the facts in Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, upon which he principally relies, are analogous to those in the present case. In that case the facts, and we think the law applicable here, are stated in the following quotation: "Respondents contend that under the authority of Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709, and Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460, that a passenger in a vehicle operated by another is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and that, if such passenger is aware that the operator is carelessly rushing into danger, it may be incumbent upon him to take steps for his safety. These cases undoubtedly contain a correct statement of the law upon the subject of a passenger's duty in case of known danger. They have little or no application to the present case, for the reason that it does not appear that there was anything that could have been done by the deceased which would have averted the collision. Had he looked in the direction the train was approaching, he could not, owing to the obstructions between him and the railroad right of way, have seen it until it had almost reached the street upon which he was traveling. Furthermore had he seen it in time to have warned the driver, there is no assurance that the latter could have brought his machine to a stop before reaching the railroad track."

In the present case the deceased's view of the approaching car was unobstructed; the ground was level; no foliage, house, or obstruction of any kind were in the open country as the driver and passenger proceeded toward the crossing. The passenger at a distance of from 60 to 80 feet from the crossing—according to the testimony of all of the witnesses—looked directly at the car, and, as it was within the range of her vision, she saw it. Young v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. There was but slight variation between the rate of speed of the electric car and the automobile when the automobile was from 60 to 80 feet from the crossing. The driver maintained his same rate of speed, and evidently through mental abstraction—his mind being on a dance he was telling the deceased about which he had attended while she was away—failed to observe the close proximity of the electric car and to realize that he was driving into danger, and drove his automobile directly into the path of the on-coming car. Had the deceased called the attention of the driver to the electric car, at the rate of speed he was driving he could easily have stopped the automobile and averted the collision.

[9-11] While it is true that the deceased is presumed to have done what a reasonable and prudent person could or would have done for his or her own safety, such presumption is disputable, and the undisputed evidence here refutes such presumption. While the question of the contributory negligence of the passenger, as a rule, is one for the jury (Parker v. Southern Pacific Co., supra), we think the facts as disclosed by the record are such that reasonable persons could draw but one conclusion, and therefore the question of contributory negligence in the present case is one of law. When one finds himself in a position of peril and makes no attempt whatever to extricate himself from such position, such lack of action on his part constitutes want of ordinary care (Giannini v. Southern Pacific Co., supra). We think the facts here bring the case under the rule announced in Thompson v. Los Angeles etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709, and Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460, and reaffirmed in Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 679, 683, 269 P. 529, 531, "that a passenger in a vehicle operated by another is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and that, if such passenger is aware that the operator is carelessly rushing into danger, it may be incumbent upon him to take steps for his safety." In other words, that it was incumbent upon the deceased to call the attention of the driver to the danger into which he was blindly driving.

[12] There is no merit in respondent's contention that the defense of contributory negligence is not available to defendant Gash, as contributory negligence is not pleaded by him. While it is generally true that contributory negligence of the plaintiff must be pleaded by defendant in order that he may rely upon it as a defense, it is available if the evidence of the plaintiff affirmatively shows such contributory negligence. 19 Cal. Jur. 681, 698; Robinson v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 426; Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 254, 64 P. 255; Kenny v. Kennedy, 9 Cal. App. 350, 99 P. 384.

The depositions of defendants Bruce and Gash were read in evidence by the plaintiff, from which it affirmatively appears that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.

[13] As what we have said disposes of the case upon its merits, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the points urged by appellants that the court should not have permitted the jury to find specially the amount each particular heir was entitled to receive from the total damage found, and that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions. We might, however, say that, while such fact might not call for a reversal, the jury should not have been permitted to divide the total amount found between the heirs, fixing the loss of Frank Brennan at $1 and the other four heirs at $5,000 each. Under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is not intended that the amount recovered shall be divided into integral or proportional parts. Robinson v. Western States Gas Co., 184 Cal. 410, 194 P. 39.

As to the point urged that the court erred in refusing certain instructions, we may say that in our opinion the instructions correctly state the law, and should have been given, unless the principles they announce are embodied in other instructions. There is no claim that the instructions refused are covered by others with the exception of defendants' instruction No. 4, which deals with the prudence and care a guest in an automobile must exercise, and we think the instruction quoted by respondent as given by the court is sufficient on this question.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action by Carl O. Wheat against D. A. McNeill. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, 295 P. 105.

Burr A. Brown, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Willis I. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

Plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from a judgment entered after order sustaining without leave to amend a general and special demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint. The action was brought to have set aside and vacated a judgment theretofore recovered by the respondent against the plaintiff in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, wherein the respondent D. A. McNeill was plaintiff and the appellant Carl O. Wheat was defendant.

The record before us shows the following:

That on August 14, 1925, respondent was injured by an automobile operated by the appellant; that on August 12, 1926, the respondent began an action to recover damages against the appellant herein for the personal injuries above referred to. On August 17, 1926, the appellant was personally served with summons in said action, by a person duly qualified to make service thereof, the service being made in the county of Orange. On August 19, 1926, the summons was filed, together with a return of service alleging service to have been made in the county of Los Angeles instead of in the county of Orange. On September 20, 1926, no appearance having been made by the appellant in said action, and more than thirty days after the service above mentioned, the default of appellant in the action referred to was duly entered. Thereafter, on April 5, 1927, after hearing by the court, judgment was entered in said action for personal damages in favor of the respondent and against the appellant, in the sum of $3,000 damages and $12 costs. On November 8, 1926, the appellant was served with an order to appear for examination on supplementary proceedings. On November 25, 1926, the appellant filed a notice of motion in said action, prosecuted by the respondent to obtain damages for personal injuries, as above stated, to vacate said judgment on the grounds that said judgment was taken through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of appellant, and that said judgment was procured by extrinsic fraud on the part of the respondent.

The points made by the appellant in the case now before us are to the effect that the affidavit of service and the recitation contained in the judgment that personal service of summons and complaint was made in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, when in truth and in fact such personal service was made in the county of Orange, state of California; that the default judgment was obtained through appellant's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect; and that the default judgment against the appellant was procured by extrinsic fraud. The allegations of the complaint relative to the service of summons, mistake, fraud, etc., are shown by the following excerpts therefrom: "That the plaintiff is further informed and believes and upon such information and belief alleges that said Robert C. Fonda was not at the times hereinafter mentioned, an officer of the law, authorized to make the service of a summons in an action in the manner as prescribed by statute, and that said Robert C. Fonda, as an individual, and as the authorized agent and under the direction of the said D. A. McNeill and the said California Casualty Indemnity Exchange, made the service of the summons and complaint in the action aforesaid, entitled D. A. McNeill, plaintiff, v. Carl O. Wheat, defendant, and made return thereon that he served said Carl O. Wheat, as defendant in said action in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, on the 17th day of August, 1926, when in truth and in fact said defendant, the plaintiff herein, was served, if regularly served at all, with process in said action, at his residence in the County of Orange, State of California; that judgment by the Court in said action rendered on the 5th day of April, 1927, also recites that said defendant, plaintiff herein, Carl O. Wheat, was regularly served with process within said County of Los Angeles, and that such return of service and such judgment by the Court, for the reasons aforesaid, were not regularly made and as in such cases by law provided. That the plaintiff is further informed and believes, and therefore alleges that the default of the defendant, the plaintiff herein, Carl O. Wheat, in said case No. 202988, in said Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, was entered and ordered filed on September 20th, 1926; that judgment was rendered upon the hearing of such default in department 3 of said Court on April 5th, 1927, wherein said D. A. McNeill was given judgment for $3000.00 against the plaintiff herein, with his costs and disbursements, taxed at the sum of $12.00; that such judgment so rendered by the court was filed on April 5th, 1927, and docketed on April 7th, 1927, in Book 640 at page 207 of Judgments; and that said default and said judgment were taken against this plaintiff through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, and that said default judgment was further procured by extrinsic fraud, as is more fully hereinafter set forth. That on or about the 14th day of August, 1925, the said Robert C. Fonda called upon this plaintiff Carl O. Wheat, and represented that he was the agent, investigator and adjuster of said California Casualty Indemnity Exchange, and that his said Company was paying to the said D. A. McNeill certain insurance by way of compensation and medical expense as a result of said alleged accident; that he was authorized by said Insurance Company, and under the terms of its policy, by the said D. A. McNeill, to effect a settlement and adjustment of said purported claim for damages; that his Company had not expended to exceed $750.00 by way of compensation and medical expense, as a result of said accident; that he was authorized, under the terms of said policy of insurance, to compromise the claim of said D. A. McNeill for that amount; that further, if the said Carl O. Wheat would furnish said Fonda the dates when the plaintiff's existing insurance would expire, and would place such insurance with his, Fonda's Company, the whole matter could be settled and would be adjusted to the satisfaction of his said Company and the said D. A. McNeill; that the said plaintiff, Carl O. Wheat, so agreed to place his insurance with said Company, in full settlement of such alleged and purported claim for damages and as consideration for a full release from said D. A. McNeill for any and all claims for damages; that said plaintiff, Carl O. Wheat, as he had agreed to do, furnished the expiration dates of the insurance which he was carrying and relied upon the representations of said Fonda, and is now, and at all times herein mentioned, has been ready to place his said insurance with said Company, in accordance with the terms of the aforesaid agreement of settlement and compromise."

The complaint likewise further alleges that on the 25th day of November, 1927, the appellant in this action duly served and filed a notice of motion in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, in the personal injury action to which we have referrred, to set aside such judgment upon the ground that said judgment had been taken against the appellant herein through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and upon the further ground that said judgment was procured by extrinsic fraud, and without setting forth in the complaint what action, if any, was taken by the trial court upon the motion just referred to, the complaint in this action further alleges that the plaintiff has exhausted his rights at law to have such judgment set aside on motion, and has no sufficient and adequate remedy at law, in that the time for appeal from said judgment has passed. This, of course, does not set forth the fact that any hearing has been had upon said motion, and that if said motion had been denied by the trial court, the time for appealing from the order denying such motion had expired prior to the filing of this complaint.

[1, 2] As to the mistake, inadvertence, etc., alleged in the complaint, and the fraud in relation thereto, the following excerpt from the complaint may be recited as a complete answer to any grounds for relief: The complaint uses the following language: "That the plaintiff was at such time (referring to the service of summons), of the opinion and belief that such summons and complaint, in order to be legal, had to be served upon him by a sheriff or an officer of the law; that at such time the plaintiff was not of the opinion and belief that he had been actually and legally served with a copy of the summons and complaint in said action, or in said action at all; that because of the aforesaid facts the plaintiff, through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, failed to employ the services of an attorney, and refrained from making any legal defense to such action, and suffered a default to be taken therein and judgment rendered against him." This, of course, constitutes no excuse whatever. By his own pleading the appellant in this case shows that the service of summons in the personal injury action, that is, the action where judgment was taken by default against the appellant, was had in entire accordance with the provisions of sections 410 and 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3, 4] While the complaint in this action shows that the appellant on the 25th day of November, 1927, served and filed a notice of motion in the personal injury action referred to, setting aside the judgment therein on the grounds that it was allowed to be entered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, and upon the further ground that said judgment was procured by extrinsic fraud, the complaint likewise shows that it was not made within six months of the entry of the judgment, and therefore, as to the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, the time has gone by for raising such questions, and only the question of fraud can be considered herein. So far as the service of summons is concerned, and the entry of the default, while it does appear that the person making the return of the service of summons was mistaken as to the county in which the service was made, the fact exists that no default was entered against the defendant in said action, the appellant in this action, until more than thirty days had elapsed after the service of summons, and therefore the default was not prematurely entered, and the affidavit of service, though admitted to be erroneous as to the place of service, nevertheless showed the fact of service, and it was this fact that gave the trial court jurisdiction, and everything necessary to constitute a valid service of summons in the personal injury action referred to appears by the complaint in this action.

[5] In examining the complaint filed by the appellant herein, we find there is a complete absence of the following essential facts, as set forth by the respondent, necessary to constitute a cause of action based upon fraud: A representation as to a material fact, not merely an expression of opinion; that the representation is false or knowingly so, or else recklessly made, or without reasonable ground for believing it true; that it was made to induce the other party to act or refrain from acting; that it was relied upon, and in reliance thereon action was taken or refrained from being taken; that by reliance thereon the party has suffered damages.

A succinct statement of the law as to what is necessary to be set forth to show action of a fraud is set forth in 12 California Jurisprudence, p. 724, in section 12, which reads as follows: "Fraud may be the basis of an action for damages for deceit. When a cause arises out of an alleged false representation, the plaintiff, in order to prevail, must ordinarily show that the representation was as to a material fact; that such fact was false and known to be false by the party making it, or else recklessly made, or without reasonable grounds for believing its truth; that the representation was made with intent to induce the other party to do or refrain from doing some act; that it was relied upon by the other party—in other words, that such other party was actually misled and deceived and induced by it to act or refrain from acting; that in so acting or refraining from acting he was ignorant of the falsity of the representation and reasonably believed it to be true; and that he thereby suffered damage or injury. The absence of any one of these elements is generally fatal to a recovery." Nothing of this kind appears in the complaint.

Other authorities might be cited and a further elucidation made of the correctness of the trial court's ruling, but what we have set forth is sufficient to show that the judgment entered in this action is proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

PLUMMER, J.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to set aside a default judgment.

The record in this case shows that on the 14th day of August, 1925, the plaintiff was injured by an automobile driven by the defendant. The action herein was begun on the 12th day of August, 1926; summons was served on the defendant on the 17th day of August, 1926, personal service being made upon the defendant in the county of Orange, by delivering to and leaving with the defendant a true copy of the summons attached to a true copy of the complaint in said action. The record shows that the service was made by a person duly qualified to make such service. Thereafter, no appearance having been made by the defendant, on the 20th day of September, 1926, default was entered in said action, and on April 5, 1927, after the hearing of witnesses in open court, judgment was entered against the defendant in the sum of $3,012. Thereafter, and on November 25, 1927, defendant moved to vacate the judgment on the ground of defendant's mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and upon the ground that the judgment was obtained by extrinsic fraud. The record shows that this motion was made more than six months after the entry of the judgment, and was therefore too late to give the court jurisdiction to set aside the default on either the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, as provided for in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. While the return of the summons erroneously stated the service of summons in the county of Los Angeles, the record shows that service was actually made in the county of Orange, but more than thirty days elapsed after service before the default of the defendant was entered. The affidavit filed by the appellant in support of his motion establishes the fact of service of summons in all particulars as required by sections 410 and 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and what we have said in the case of Carl O. Wheat, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. D. A. McNeill, Defendant and Respondent, 295 P. 102, in an opinion this day filed, applies to the service of summons, and also as to the failure of the appellant to set forth any facts justifying the setting aside of the default judgment.

On the ground of fraud, for the reasons stated in the opinion in the case to which we have referred, the order appealed from in this action is affirmed.

All concur.

Joe A. Smith was convicted of violating the Corporate Securities Act, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Josiah Coombs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel B. Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BARNARD, P. J.

The defendant was charged with a violation of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California in an information containing eleven counts, each count being similar in form to the first one, which reads as follows: "Joe A. Smith is accused by the District Attorney of Riverside County and State of California, by this information of the crime of a felony, to-wit: violation of the Corporate Securities Act committed as follows: That said defendant on or about the 16th day of December, 1929, at the said County of Riverside, State of California, and before the filing of this information, did willfully and unlawfully sell to J. A. Toombs and Hazel Toombs for value, 1000 shares of stock in Angeles Mines Incorporated, a corporation, purporting to convey an interest in a business to be carried on for profit, to-wit: the business of mining, under the name and style of Angeles Mines Incorporated, without first obtaining a permit from the Corporation Commissioner of the State of California so to do." He was found guilty by a jury, and from the judgment which followed he has taken this appeal.

It is earnestly urged that the case must be reversed because the appellant, as an individual, was selling stock personally owned by him, which he had acquired for value, and that he comes within the exception provided for in section 2 (c), paragraph 3 of this act, which exception reads as follows "(c) Except as hereinafter expressly provided, the provisions of this act shall not apply to the sale of any security in any of the following transactions: * * * 3. The sale in a bona fide way of any security by an owner who is not the issuer or an underwriter thereof, who sells the same for his own account; and not for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act." Stats. 1929, p. 1254. Appellant relies upon the case of People v. Pace, 73 Cal. App. 548, 238 P. 1089, 1094. In that case the question was presented as to whether or not an individual who was a bona fide owner of securities might lawfully sell them in repeated and successive transactions of a like or similar character, without first securing a license or permit in accordance with the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. It was there held that this act as it then stood, was unconstitutional, in so far as it attempted to prevent such a bona fide owner from selling securities individually owned by him in repeated and successive transactions of like or similar character. That case involved a question very different from the one now before us, it being there pointed out by the court that the defendant therein had informed the parties purchasing stock from him that the stock being sold them was not treasury stock but was being transferred to them through some individual; that the corporation received no part of the money paid by the purchasers of the stock and all such money was retained by the defendant as his own funds; that no contention was made either at the trial or upon appeal that the defendant was not the bona fide owner of the stock sold; that no contention was made that the defendant either in acquiring the stock or selling the same was acting for the corporation; and further, that it was not even suggested that the defendant in acquiring and selling the stock was resorting to a subterfuge, in order to avoid the necessity of procuring a permit. In its opinion, the court said: "We would suggest that if the purpose of the section is to prevent fraudulent conduct in the sale of securities, it would not be a difficult matter to draft a provision of the law that would meet such a need." Subsequently, the Corporate Securities Act was amended and the portion providing an exception to the necessity of obtaining a permit, so far as here applicable, now reads as above set forth. It is appellant's contention that he comes within that exception; that the only question involved is as to whether he was the owner of the stock alleged to have been sold; that it affirmatively appears from the People's evidence that he was such owner, and the case should not have been allowed to go to the jury; and, further, that all evidence concerning the circumstances of each sale, and all evidence as to how he acquired the stock in question was inadmissible. On the other hand, it was and is the theory of the prosecution that it was proper to submit to the jury the questions as to whether the defendant was in fact the owner of the stock sold and was selling it in a bona fide way, whether he was selling the same for his own account and not for the benefit of the corporation, and also whether he made the sale in the manner he did for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act.

The stock sold by appellant was certain stock in a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Nevada, under the name of "Angeles Mines, Incorporated." It is conceded that this corporation had never applied to the corporation commissioner of the state of California for a permit to sell securities, that the appellant had never applied for a broker's or agent's license or permit to sell securities, and that no such permits had been issued. It is also conceded that the appellant sold shares of stock in this corporation to the several individuals, and in the amounts, as alleged in the various counts of the information. In connection with the incorporation of Angeles Mines, Incorporated, and how the stock in question came into the possession of appellant, the following facts appear: Articles of incorporation of the company named were filed in the office of the secretary of state of the state of Nevada on June 6, 1929, naming as original subscribers and first directors, three persons, to wit: Frank S. Cliff with 300 shares, F. E. Meder with 100 shares, and L. H. Peters with 100 shares. These articles were signed by these three persons and acknowledged on June 6, 1929. The minutes of the corporation show that the first meeting of incorporators was held on June 6, 1929, in Carson City, Nev.; the above-named three incorporators being present. It was reported that the articles of incorporation had been filed on that same day; the three persons above named were elected directors to hold office for the ensuing year; and a resolution was adopted authorizing the directors to issue the entire capital stock of the company "for money, labor done, personal property, real estate or leases thereof, or any of such considerations, as they shall from time to time deem advisable." Thereupon, the secretary presented transfers of subscription as follows: From Frank S. Cliff to Joe E. Smith, 300 shares; from F. E. Meder to Joe E. Smith, 100 shares; and from L. H. Peters to Joe E. Smith, 100 shares. A motion was passed approving these transfers, the written transfers being entered in the minutes. While there is an error as to the middle initial, appellant conceded in his testimony that these shares were on that date transferred to him. The next meeting shown by the record is the first meeting of directors, which was held in Carson City, Nev., on June 13, 1929, pursuant to a written waiver of notice signed by Frank S. Cliff, F. E. Meder, and L. H. Peters, although they had previously assigned to appellant all their stock in the corporation. The minutes of this meeting show that Cliff was elected president, Meder vice president, and Peters secretary and treasurer. Thereupon, the chairman read a letter from appellant offering to quitclaim to the corporation all his interest in certain mining claims in Los Angeles county, Cal., described in the letter, in exchange for 350,000 shares of the common stock of the corporation, at the par value of $1 per share, the same to be issued to him or to his nominees; whereupon, at the same meeting, a resolution was adopted accepting this offer and directing the transfer of said 350,000 shares of stock to the appellant. Thereupon, these same three directors adopted a resolution accepting their own resignations as officers and directors of the corporation, to take effect at the close of the meeting. Thereupon, the appellant, his attorney, and another, were elected officers and directors of the corporation by the three retiring directors, the appellant being elected president, treasurer, and director. The minutes of the same meeting, on June 13, 1929, in addition to the written resignation as officers and directors of the three original incorporators, also show that there was put in the signed but undated resignations of appellant's attorney and the other party, who on that day had been elected officers and directors with the appellant.

It thus appears that appellant owned all of the stock of the incorporators from and after June 6, 1929, that his proposition to exchange his mining claims for 350,000 shares of stock in the corporation was presented at the first meeting of the board of directors and accepted that same day by three directors who had a week before assigned all of their interest in the corporation to the appellant, and who at the same meeting at which they accepted this proposition, accepted their own resignations as officers and directors of the corporation and elected appellant, his attorney and another, as such officers and directors; and that all of these new officers and directors, with the exception of the appellant, at the same time handed in their undated resignations as such officers and directors. Thereafter, as shown by the minutes, these three new directors continued to hold meetings, presided over by the appellant as president, all subsequent meetings being held in Los Angeles, Cal. At the first meeting, on July 1, 1929, one Harcourt was employed as superintendent of construction on the company's mining properties. The appellant, as president of the corporation, was authorized to borrow the sum of $5,000 or any portion thereof, from any bank or individual. At a meeting of the board of directors on August 18, 1929, a report was submitted by appellant, as president, showing the progress of development work at the mine and showing that four additional men had been employed. At a meeting on September 2, 1929, although no borrowing of money or other financing was reported by the president, he reported it was necessary to install a water system and was authorized to proceed therewith. At a meeting on September 16, 1929, the president reported that the water system had been installed, and that the corporation had incurred a monthly rental of $50 for water. At a meeting of the board of directors held on October 14, 1929, the by-laws were so amended as to permit the annual meetings of the stockholders to be held in Los Angeles. At a meeting held on January 16, 1930, the president was authorized to borrow $25,000, or any portion thereof, from any bank or individual.

It further appears that the defendant acquired the mining claims which he exchanged for the 350,000 shares in this corporation partly from one Harcourt and partly from two persons acting as trustees for one Carpenter. Harcourt testified that he owned five of these claims, upon which he had spent about $3,700 in development work, and that he thought they were worth about $50,000; that he quitclaimed these to the appellant on February 1, 1929, receiving 75,000 shares of stock in Angeles Mines, Incorporated, in payment therefor, but that this stock was not delivered to him until some time in July, 1929; that at the time he delivered the quitclaim deed to appellant, it was agreed between them that he was to get 75,000 shares of stock for his property, but at that time no corporation had been formed. He further testified that between May and September, 1929, appellant furnished to him various supplies for the purpose of developing the mine, including the paying of labor bills amounting to $1,700. The appellant himself testified that while he bought the claims from Harcourt on February 1, 1929, and subsequently gave him 75,000 shares of stock in the corporation for the property, no agreement to do this was made before June, 1929, and that when Harcourt deeded the property to him it was agreed that Harcourt should have some interest but the amount thereof was not stipulated. He further testified that he bought the Carpenter claims for 25,000 shares of stock in the corporation, paying the same after the company was incorporated, but that when he bought the same on February 2, 1929, there was no price agreed upon between them, but that "they were trusting to my integrity to deal fairly and rightly with them." He further testified that his proposition to exchange the mining property for 350,000 shares of stock in the corporation was made to the corporation on the same day it was accepted; that the total issue of stock in the corporation was 350,000 shares, 250,000 of which were issued to him, 70,000 to Harcourt, and 30,000 to Carpenter; that at the time of the trial he still owned 200,000 shares; that he had never met the three directors of the corporation at the time they elected him president on June 13, 1929, and transferred 350,000 shares of stock to him; that he first heard of the corporation on the day it was organized, and that he heard of it through his attorney; that the stock certificates had not been printed on June 13, 1929; and that he put in some improvements on the mining properties after he became president of the corporation but could not say how much he had expended in this, nor could he approximate it. He further testified that the original shares in the company were transferred to him on June 6, 1929, as a part of the consideration for the proposition which he first made to the company on June 13, 1929, a week after the stock was transferred.

In reference to how the sales were made, the evidence shows that the appellant was a preacher; that he had formerly preached at the Four Square Church in Riverside, and most, if not all, of these sales were made to parties who attended this church. J. A. Toombs testified that he was a member of this church; that he became acquainted with appellant through the purchase of a Bible from him; that between the first and 16th day of December, 1929, appellant called at his home and told the witness and his wife that he had a project he was putting over; that he was selling stock in a mining company and he showed samples of gold and silver ore; that he told of a man named Carpenter, stating that Carpenter had been converted under his ministry and healed at one of his meetings; that he had investigated a mine belonging to Carpenter and decided it was a project fit "to put over to carry on the work of the Gospel"; that the project would pay dividends at the rate of 20 per cent. a month, and that 10 per cent. of the net earnings of the mines were to be set aside for the work of the Gospel, to be divided among the churches in different districts in proportion to the amount of money invested in each district; that appellant stated he was selling stock in the Angeles Mines, Incorporated, but said nothing about it being his own stock; that witness invested over $1,000 and had received nothing back; and that appellant promised the witness remuneration for any help he would give him in selling stock to others, saying that the state allowed him to give him 10 per cent. of any amount that the other party might invest. Appellant stated that he was representing the corporation of which he was president and was trying to raise some money to put the mine over; and that he needed the money to pay for some cyanide. Mrs. Hazel Toombs corroborated her husband's testimony and added that the appellant had stated that Carpenter wanted to give appellant a mine to help in the Lord's work and that "he just gave him this mine," and further that appellant stated he "wanted to sell the stock and put over the mine and get this money, to go ahead and develop this mine." W. A. Hart, who also bought a thousand shares of this stock, testified that appellant told him "he wanted to raise money to develop that mine, and that is what the money—what stock he sold, that is what the money would be used for, for developing this mine, and he also said ten per cent. of the net income after it was in operation, would go for Mission purposes, and also pay—commence paying the first of March, twenty per cent. of what I might invest. In five months I would have my investment all paid back"; that appellant represented he was selling the stock "of the corporation"; that when he purchased this stock appellant took a blank certificate out of his brief case and filled in his own name, Joe A. Smith as the owner, and 1,000 shares on the face of the certificate, and then turned it over and filled in the other side; that appellant told him that the state authorities at Sacramento would not grant him a permit to sell stock with a clause in it giving 10 per cent. of the profits to missions, and that this was the reason the company was incorporated in Nevada; that he also told him he carried the blank certificates around with him in order to expedite matters, and all the purchaser would have to do was to send the stock in to Los Angeles and have it transferred; that he further stated that the stock belonged to the Angeles Mines, Incorporated, and that every dollar which the witness paid for the stock would be used in the development of this mine. Mrs. Milholland testified that she purchased some of the stock; that appellant introduced himself as a representative and president of the Angeles Mines, Incorporated; stated that the purpose of the organization was chiefly religious, and secondly, financial, for the benefit of the investor; and that the money she paid was to be used in the development of the mine. Mrs. Glick testified that appellant told her he was representing the corporation and that this was not his own stock. The appellant admitted having sold the stock as alleged in the information, but testified that the stock was issued to him in exchange for mining properties, and that he later sold the stock as his individual property.

Most of the contentions of appellant may be treated under the one head, that the evidence does not support the verdict. Appellant not only contends that it was necessary for the prosecution to show that he was not the owner of the stock he sold, but takes the further position that his ownership is conclusively shown by the certificates bearing his name upon their face, and by his testimony that he paid something of value for them, and therefore that all other evidence as to such ownership or as to his methods in the sale of the stock, was inadmissible. He disposes of the question of fraud with the ingenious argument that one witness, a former owner of the mine, stated that it was worth $75,000 and that he had put $3,700 into its development, and since this conclusively shows that appellant had paid value for the 350,000 shares of stock, there was no fraud. Even if the mine was worth $75,000 appellant paid nothing until after the corporation was formed and then turned over 100,000 of the shares to the original owners of the land and kept 250,000 shares, although he had put nothing in. He himself testified that he paid nothing when he took the deed to the mining claims, and that there was no agreement as to what he was to pay until after the corporation was organized. Harcourt, from whom the claims on which the mine was situated were purchased, testified that when he gave the deed to appellant, on February 1, it was agreed he was to get 75,000 in stock but that no corporation was yet formed. Appellant not only represented to the various purchasers that he was selling stock for the company in order to get money with which to develop the mine, but the record shows that he actually put some money into such development work. While his counsel argues that it was legitimate for him to loan his own money to the corporation, we find no evidence in the record that he ever made any such loan.

[1, 2] Appellant argues that the words "bona fide," in the section of the California Securities Act we have been considering, does not refer to the manner of sale but has to do only with the question of the genuineness of the ownership of the stock, and the genuineness of the incorporation of the company in another state for a legal purpose. We think these words also have reference to the manner of sale, but even if appellant is correct in his contentions, the evidence as to the method of sale and circumstances surrounding the organization of the company, and the acquiring of the stock by the appellant, the admission of which is attacked, was admissible for the purpose of showing whether the appellant was, in fact, the owner of the stock; whether, in fact, he was acting for himself or acting for the corporation; and whether his method of procedure was for the purpose of evading the provisions of the act in question. The jury was not compelled to believe his statement that he was the owner of the stock, but was entitled to consider the surrounding circumstances in determining whether he was in fact the owner, whether he was acting for himself or for the corporation, and whether the sales were made in a bona fide way or for the purpose of evading the act.

[3] The evidence shows that at the organization meeting of the corporation all of the stock in the company was transferred to appellant and that no one else owned any of the stock until he caused certain shares to be transferred to others in payment for the mining claims involved. At the time his proposition to exchange the mining claims for all of the stock of the corporation was acted upon, he owned all of the stock in the corporation and through dummy directors was dealing with himself. Whether or not he was the owner of the 350,000 shares of stock, he was, in fact, the issuer thereof. The evidence is sufficient to show that the sales of stock described in the information were not sales of securities by an owner who was not the issuer thereof; that such sales were not made in a bona fide manner by an owner for his own account alone; and that such sales were not entirely for his own account but in part for the account of the corporation, and made with the purpose of securing funds to sufficiently develop the property which had been transferred to the corporation to make such a showing as would enable the appellant to make further sales for his own profit. We think the evidence is sufficient to show that the entire proceeding was carried out by the appellant for the purpose of evading the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. If the circumstances disclosed by this record do not show a deliberate intention to evade this act, it would be difficult to imagine a set of circumstances that would show such an intention. In our opinion, the evidence is entirely sufficient to support the verdict.

Appellant complains of the giving and refusal of certain instructions, but except in one instance where the matter complained of was fully covered by another instruction, the views, we have herein expressed dispose of these objections. After carefully examining the instructions, we find no error therein.

Appellant advances the proposition that under the authority of People v. Pace, supra, the portion of the act here under consideration, is unconstitutional. The matter is not otherwise argued, and the authority is so clearly not in point that we do not feel called upon to go into the question at any length. In our opinion, the point is without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

CROCKETT LAND & CATTLE CO. v. AMERICAN TOLL BRIDGE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA et al.

S. F. 13381.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 22, 1931.

1. Eminent domain 🔑317(2).

Where statute in terms provides for condemnation of land for public use, it will be construed to authorize taking of fee.

2. Eminent domain 🔑317(2).

Toll bridge company, condemning land for approach to toll bridge, obtained fee and not mere easement (Code Civ. Proc. § 1239, subd. 1).

3. Eminent domain 🔑317(2).

If condemnor taking land for approach to toll bridge only obtained easement, it included right to enjoy easement; hence original owner could not occupy land condemned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by the Crockett Land & Cattle Company against the American Toll Bridge Company of California and others. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez, and John G. McKean, of Oakland, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J.

The sole question presented by this appeal is as to the relative rights of the parties herein as defined by the decree of condemnation rendered in favor of the assignor of respondent American Toll Bridge Company of California, wherein a strip of land containing seven-tenths of an acre, owned by appellant, was condemned as and for a viaduct and approach to the Carquinez Straits bridge. Said bridge is a structure of great magnitude, and spans the Carquinez Straits, a navigable body of water, at a point between San Pablo and Suisun bays. Its northerly viaduct and approach rests on Solano county soil and its southerly viaduct and approach are built on Contra Costa county soil. It is with the latter situation that this appeal has to do.

On February 5, 1923, the board of supervisors of Contra Costa county granted to Rodeo-Vallejo Ferry Company a franchise to construct, operate, and maintain said bridge, and subsequently its rights in the premises were sold and transferred to respondent American Toll Bridge Company of California. Said Toll Bridge Company having been let into the possession of said seven-tenths acre strip upon complying with the decree requiring the payment of $5,000 as the value of said strip, as found by the jury, and the additional sum of $1,000, fixed by the court as a fund to pay any further damages or costs that might be recovered in said proceeding, as well as all damages that might be sustained if for any cause the property should not be finally taken for said public use, built thereon one small residence, and moved thereon another, and constructed two garages, all of which are located beneath the floor level of the bridge at depths varying from 35 to 120 feet below said floor level. Said two small residence houses are occupied exclusively by its toll gatherers, watchmen, and other employees, who, in addition to the performance of other duties, are charged with the duty of inspection and reporting any structural or serious changes which might threaten the safety of the bridge, as well as protecting it against the acts of maliciously disposed persons or fortuitous events.

Appellant claims the right to occupy said houses on the theory that the condemnation proceedings did not vest the fee of said seven-tenths acre in the condemner. In fact, it is contended that, under the provisions of section 1239, Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 1, the Toll Bridge Company had not the right to condemn the fee, but an easement only in said lands, and that the occupancy of the whole of said strip is not necessary for the use and enjoyment of said easement. Said statute provides: "The following is a classification of the estates and rights in lands subject to be taken for public use:

"1. A fee simple, when taken for public buildings or grounds, or for permanent buildings, for reservoirs and dams, and permanent flooding occasioned thereby," etc. That the land taken is to be devoted to a public use is not contested. That a massive steel and concrete bridge spanning for a great distance navigable waters of the San Pablo and Suisun bays built for public use in the manner described in the proceedings is both a public and permanent building within the meaning of said section 1239, would seem to require nothing further to be urged in its defense than a statement of the proposition. That the right of eminent domain may be exercised in acquiring private property for a use such as has been granted by franchise to respondent is made specific by the provisions of section 1238, Code of Civil Procedure. It matters but little so far as the right of respondent to occupy said houses is concerned, whether the respondent was given the power to condemn the fee or merely an easement in said seven-tenths acre strip in view of the need that exists for the exclusive occupancy of the whole of said strip. That the condemnation suit was tried upon the sole theory that the fee was sought rather than an easement is made manifest by the pleadings and the proceedings had upon trial. The complaint in said proceedings alleges the necessity of "acquiring the herein described lands. * * *" "The whole of said land is and will hereafter be necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of said bridge approach." The prayer is for a judgment condemning and taking said lands as described for a public use and for the determining of the value of said land. (Italics supplied.) The verdict of the jury reads: "We the jury in this case hereby assess the value of the .7 acre tract involved in this action at the sum of Five Thousand Dollars, $5,000." Nothing was said about acquiring a lesser interest than the fee, and the sum of $5,000 awarded to appellant as the value of a precipitous seven-tenths of an acre of land situate on a wide stretch of the bay shore would indicate that the jury understood that they had appraised the full value of the fee. The court found that the use for which said strip of land was condemned and taken was a public use, to wit, the construction, operation, and maintenance of a toll bridge for the transportation of vehicular, freight, pedestrian, and other traffic, and for furnishing transportation to the public generally, and it was necessary as and for an approach to said bridge. The judgment makes mention that the issue of the value of the land sought to be condemned was submitted to the jury, and approves the value as fixed by the jury.

The final order of condemnation was filed October, 1923. Appellant accepted the $5,000 award and costs, and neither moved for a new trial or appealed from the judgment. After a lapse of three and a half years, it filed its complaint, praying that it be restored to possession of said strip of land without an offer on its part to return said sum of $5,000, or any part thereof.

The trial court found that said strip of land was, in the condemnation proceeding, condemned in fee, and that on April 22, 1924. the award and costs were accepted by the appellant herein, and the judgment has become final; that said bridge had been fully completed and was in full operation at the time the instant action was commenced; that said bridge is a permanent building within the meaning of section 1239, Code of Civil Procedure, and a public building within the meaning of the provisions of the Political Code; that the proper safeguarding, care, and operation of said bridge requires that the owners and operators of the bridge have the exclusive occupancy of said strip of land.

[1, 2] The judgment which followed did not make special mention of the fee, but adjudged the respondent bridge company to be entitled to the sole and exclusive occupancy of said strip of land until the expiration of the franchise granted to respondent by the board of supervisors of Contra Costa county, at which time it will become the property of the counties of Contra Costa and Solano, state agencies, subject to the right of the state to acquire it prior to the day on which the franchise expires. The law is that, where the statute in terms provides for the condemnation of lands for public use, it will be construed to authorize the taking of the fee. McCarty v. Southern Pacific Co., 148 Cal. 211, 82 P. 615. The same rule would apply to pleadings and judgments.

Apart from the question as to the ownership of the fee, there can be no doubt that the respondent is entitled to the exclusive occupancy of the entire strip upon which there are erected six or more massive towers and piers, which support the weight of the bridge. It may become necessary to construct other piers or to resort to other methods as a means of strengthening the pier support, which carries an enormous overhead tonnage, and thereby practically occupy the whole of said seven-tenths of an acre of land. Surely such a right could not be contested. The houses, which are occupied by toll-gatherers, caretakers, and others, are so located as to give to the occupants a full view of the tower and pier structure for the entire length of the bridge, and serve as convenient telephone stations for communicating with the farthest end of the bridge in emergency cases. A part of the electric lighting appliances are located also upon these premises. The occupancy at all hours of said foundation base by said several employees and their families affords a vantage point from which ready and frequent observation may be made of the understructure of the bridge, as well as an opportunity to observe trespassers, and said occupancy is not only consistent with the maintenance and operation of a public bridge of the type of the Carquinez bridge, but it is in the interest of public safety. This court held in McCarty v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, that the condemnation of an easement for levee purposes gave to the owner of the easement the right to erect and maintain on the levee all buildings or other constructions that may be reasonably necessary or convenient for the use to which it is devoted, or which are adapted to preserve it in good condition for that use.

In Tucker v. Tower, 9 Pick. (26 Mass.) 109, 19 Am. Dec. 350, an easement was granted for a toll road. It was held that a residence erected thereon in which the toll gatherer lived and collected fares was a reasonable use of the easement. The court further said:

"The ground taken by the plaintiff is founded upon a supposed limitation of the right of the corporation to use the surface of the land only for the purpose of travel; but we do not understand their right to be so limited, but that they may make such use of the land below the surface as may be necessary to secure and maintain the proper enjoyment of their franchise; thus, without doubt, posts may be sunk into the earth for the gate to swing upon; and such digging of the soil is justifiable as may be necessary for drains to the road. And we are of opinion also, that a toll-house may be placed there, and that if convenient this may be made so as to accommodate the toll-gatherer with a dwelling-house; and that all things necessary for this may be also lawfully done, such as the cutting down the trees, digging a cellar, well," etc. Reading v. Davis, 153 Pa. 360, 26 A. 62.

[3] That the fee of said strip was condemned and it was so understood by the parties to the condemnation action there can exist no doubt. If in fact only an easement was obtained, it was an easement which included what are termed secondary easements, that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the proper enjoyment of the easement itself. North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 P. 69; Hamaker v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 59 Cal. App. 642, 211 P. 265.

From any angle the case may be examined, it is plain that the occupancy by appellant of said strip condemned as and for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a toll bridge would be to place an unreasonable and unwarranted limitation upon the rights of said bridge company, and would seriously interfere with the proper enjoyment of the franchise which has been granted to it.

There is but little, if any, merit in appellant's contentions that it is legally entitled to occupy any portion of said condemned strip.

Judgment affirmed.

BALAAM v. PERAZZO.

Sac. 4356.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 23, 1931.

1. Judgment 🔑117.

That defendant in action to quiet title defaulted did not justify relief beyond that demanded (Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

2. Judgment 🔑17(1).

Defendant, in action to quiet title, had no right to affirmative relief against defaulting codefendant, not served with answer or cross-complaint seeking such relief (Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

3. Judgment 🔑17(1), 117.

Judgment quieting title in defendant as against plaintiff and codefendant, not served with defendant's answer or cross-complaint, which sought no such relief against codefendant, held void on face, and properly modified of court's own motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

It appeared that defendant claimed to be owner as against alleged title of plaintiff, but made no averment of any right or title against codefendant, who was not served with answer or cross-complaint, that no evidence was offered with regard to any claim against codefendant, and that no finding thereon was made. Conclusions of law stated defendant was entitled to have title quieted as against plaintiff, but no mention was made of codefendant.

4. Appeal and error 🔑82(2).

Order modifying judgment void on face, being made after final judgment, was appealable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by H. C. Balaam against J. J. Perazzo. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

W. R. Bailey and Adolph Feierbach, both of Visalia, for appellant.

Karl A. Machetanz, of Exeter, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J.

This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to quiet title to lot 26 and the south half of lot 25 in middle block of Baker's addition to the city of Exeter, county of Tulare, state of California. The complaint is in the usual form of an action to quiet title which, after setting up ownership of said lands in the plaintiff, alleges that the defendant claims some right, title, or interest in said lands, but that his claim is without right, and closes with the prayer that the plaintiff's title be quieted as against the defendant and as to said lands. The answer of the defendant, after denying plaintiff's claim of ownership, alleges that the plaintiff has in fact no interest in said premises, and then proceeds to allege affirmatively ownership thereof in the defendant, and, upon the predicate thereof, prays for affirmative relief that the defendant be adjudged to be the owner of, and entitled to the possession of, said premises, and that the plaintiff has no right, title, or interest therein. Upon the issues as thus joined, the Superior Court made and entered its findings and judgment in the plaintiff's favor, and it is from such judgment that this appeal has been taken.

The facts upon which the respective claims of the plaintiff and defendant are founded are practically undisputed, and may be briefly stated as follows: On and prior to October 23, 1923, one G. A. Perazzo was the owner of the premises involved in this action and of certain other lands and premises in said county of Tulare. Upon the above date Brambilio Juarez obtained a money judgment against G. A. Perazzo in the Superior Court of said county, which was duly docketed upon October 26, 1923, and thus became a valid and subsisting lien on any land standing in the name of G. A. Perazzo on the records of the county recorder of said county of Tulare as of said date. On October 28, 1924, G. A. Perazzo conveyed to his wife, Victoria Perazzo, the said and other pieces of property, which, however, were subject to the lien of the aforesaid subsisting judgment in favor of Brambilio Juarez. On February 1, 1926, a writ of execution was issued upon the aforesaid judgment in favor of Brambilio Juarez, and thereafter, and in pursuance thereof, the premises involved in this action were sold under said writ to Brambilio Juarez, who thereafter, and on the 23d day of August, 1927, prior to the issuance of the sheriff's deed thereon, duly assigned the certificate of sale to H. C. Balaam, plaintiff herein. On August 24, 1927, the sheriff executed and delivered to H. C. Balaam a deed to the aforesaid premises, which was duly recorded on September 1, 1927. Thereafter, and on November 20, 1928, the present action was commenced against the defendant J. J. Perazzo, who has succeeded to the interest of G. A. and Victoria Perazzo, which in due course ripened into the judgment from which this appeal has been taken. On December 3, 1924, one N. C. Medley commenced an action to quiet title in said court, affecting the aforesaid and other lands, against G. A. Perazzo, Victoria Perazzo, Brambilio Juarez, and certain other defendants not material to this controversy, the plaintiff Medley alleging that he was the owner of said premises and the whole thereof by virtue of a judgment which had been theretofore obtained against G. A. Perazzo, upon which judgment an execution sale had been had, at which sale the plaintiff Medley had become the purchaser of said premises, and as such was entitled to have his title thereto quieted as against the defendants in said action. The complaint and summons in said action were duly served upon G. A. Perazzo, Victoria Perazzo, and Brambilio Juarez. Jaurez did not appear or answer in said action. Victoria Perazzo, however, did answer, denying the alleged title of the plaintiff Medley to the lands involved therein or any portion thereof, and alleging herself to be the owner thereof by virtue of her aforesaid deed from G. A. Perazzo bearing the date of October 28, 1924. In her answer she asserted no claim of ownership of the pieces of land involved in this action as against Brambilio Juarez, and in her prayer she asked only for affirmative relief against the plaintiff Medley and all persons claiming under him. It affirmatively appears from the record in said action that the aforesaid answer of Victoria Perazzo therein, affirmatively claiming the ownership in herself of said lands, was not served upon her codefendant Brambilio Juarez, and that he made no appearance in said action in so far as the affirmative pleading of Victoria Perazzo was concerned. Upon the trial and submission of the cause, the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of the defendant Victoria Perazzo, wherein the trial court found Victoria Perazzo to be the owner of lot 26 and the south half of lot 25 in middle block of Baker's addition to the city of Exeter, etc., and that she was "entitled to have her title quieted as to said real propery against claims of plaintiff herein, and to judgment for her costs." In its conclusions of law the court directed judgment in Victoria Perazzo's favor to be entered accordingly. It appears, however, that said judgment was on December 2, 1925, entered in the following form:

"It is therefore declared, ordered, adjudged and decreed that Victoria Perazzo, one of the defendants herein, is the true and lawful owner of the south half of lot 25 and all of lot 26 of the Middle Block of Baker's Addition to the city of Exeter, and every part and parcel thereof, and her title thereto is adjudged to be quieted as against all claims, demands, or pretensions of the plaintiff, or of other defendants herein, and said plaintiff and other defendants are hereby perpetually enjoined from setting up any claim thereto or any part thereof."

"Now, therefore, on the court's own motion, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said judgment, in so far as it relates to and affects the rights of B. Juarez, also known as Brambilio Juarez, in and to the property aforesaid is void and of no force and effect and should be and is hereby vacated and set aside." From the aforesaid order no appeal was taken by or on behalf of Victoria Perazzo or her successor in interest J. J. Perazzo, the defendant in this action. The present action was commenced, as we have seen, on November 20, 1928. The defendant Perazzo by his answer denied the ownership and right of possession of the plaintiff in and to the premises in question, and, having so done, undertook on his own behalf to state in the usual form a cause of action to quiet title thereto against said plaintiff, and prayed for such affirmative relief. Upon the trial of the cause, the said defendant insisted, and upon this appeal still insists, that the judgment rendered and entered in the action entitled N. C. Medley v. G. A. Perazzo et al., above referred to, was valid on its face in so far as the trial court undertook thereby to decree that Victoria Perazzo was the owner of the above-described premises, and that "her title thereto is adjudged to be quieted as against all claims, demands or pretensions of the plaintiff, or of other defendants herein, and said plaintiff and other defendants are hereby perpetually enjoined from setting up any claim thereto or any part thereof," and that, this being so, the order of the trial court made and entered on July 21, 1927, wherein it attempted to modify said judgment by striking therefrom the aforesaid portion thereof, was a void order, since it appeared upon the face thereof to have been an order made and entered on the court's own motion more than one year after the making and entry of the judgment which it purported to modify, and further made and entered ex parte and in violation of the express provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that said order, being thus void upon its face, for the foregoing reasons, was the proper subject of collateral attack in this action, and that the same could not be relied upon by the plaintiff herein to support the judgment of the trial court made and entered herein in his favor, and hence that said judgment should be reversed. We are unable to sustain the foregoing contentions of the appellant herein in the foregoing regards. It is true that in the action entitled N. C. Medley v. G. A. Perazzo et al., the defendant therein, Brambilio Juarez, suffered a default to be taken against him in so far as the asserted claim of title by the plaintiff therein to the premises here in question was involved. This fact, however, would not have entitled the plaintiff in that action to be granted any relief in excess of that demanded in his complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 580; Staacke v. Bell, 125 Cal. 309, 57 P. 1012, and cases cited; Lang v. Lang, 182 Cal. 769, 190 P. 181; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Welch, 202 Cal. 314, 260 P. 545), and certainly could not have entitled the defendant Victoria Perazzo in said action any right to affirmative relief therein as against Brambilio Juarez without service upon the latter of her answer or cross-complaint seeking such affirmative relief (Staacke v. Bell, supra).

The record in the foregoing case discloses that the defendant therein, Victoria Perazzo, while affirmatively setting forth in her pleading therein that she was the owner of the premises in question as against the asserted title of the plaintiff Medley thereto, made no averment whatever as to her right or title to said premises against her codefendant Brambilio Juarez, and did not in her prayer to her said pleading seek for any relief whatever against him. It further affirmatively appears that no service of the aforesaid answer of Victoria Perazzo was made, or attempted to be made, upon Brambilio Juarez; that during the trial of said cause no evidence whatever was presented with relation to the right or claim of said Juarez in or to said property or any portion thereof, nor was any finding thereon made by the trial court. In its conclusions of law the court found that Victoria Perazzo was "entitled to have her title quieted to said real property against claims of plaintiff herein and to judgment for her costs." Such being the state of the record in the case of Medley v. Perazzo et al., as disclosed by the judgment roll therein, it conclusively follows that the trial court therein had no power or jurisdiction to include in its judgment therein any adjudication whatever as to the rights of Brambilio Juarez in and to the premises involved in the present action, and that in so far as the judgment therein undertook to adjudicate that the defendant Victoria Perazzo should have her title thereto quieted as against her codefendant Brambilio Juarez said judgment was void upon its face. Lang v. Lang, supra; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Welch, supra. This being so, it further conclusively follows that it was within the power of the trial court, upon having its attention in any manner called to the fact that a portion of one of its judgments was void upon its face, of its own motion to made and enter the order which the court did make and enter upon July 21, 1927, modifying its said judgment so as to strike therefrom the portion thereof which upon the face of the judgment roll in said action appeared to be void. People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 675, 77 P. 651; People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 P. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448. Furthermore, its said order, being one made after final judgment, was an appealable order, and from said order neither the defendant herein nor his predecessor, Victoria Perazzo, appears to have taken an appeal.

For the foregoing reasons it would seem clear that the defendant in this action was not entitled to urge upon the trial thereof or upon this appeal either the validity of the judgment in the former action of Medley v. Perazzo as against Brambilio Juarez, the predecessor of the plaintiff herein, nor to urge upon this appeal that the trial court was in error in upholding the order made and entered on July 21, 1927, in said former action, and, having done so, in adjudging upon the record herein that the plaintiff herein as the successor of Brambilio Juarez was entitled to have his title quieted as against said defendant, and to enter its judgment accordingly quieting the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HOWARD.

Cr. 3284.

Supreme Court of California.
Dec. 31, 1930.

1. Jury 🔑33(1).

Substitution of alternate for regular juror who disclosed prejudice against certain witnesses, instead of ordering mistrial, held not invasion of right of jury trial (Pen. Code, § 1089; Const. art. 1, § 7).

> No invasion of right of jury trial occurred, since the same proceedings were had in selection of alternate jurors as in the case of first twelve jurors who took their places in the box, and no complaint was made that the alternate juror selected was not in fact a fair and impartial person to act as juror.

2. Jury 🔑149.

In murder prosecution, procedure by which alternate juror was substituted in place of regular juror disclosing prejudice against certain witnesses held mere irregularity (Pen. Code, § 1089; Const. art. 1, § 7).

3. Jury 🔑79(3).

Defendant had right to impartial jury, but not to jury composed of particular individuals.

4. Criminal law 🔑736(2).

Where evidence on whether confession was result of promises by authorities to merely charge defendant with manslaughter was conflicting, question was for jury.

5. Criminal law 🔑683(1).

In murder prosecution, decedent's estranged wife's testimony respecting defendant's proposal of marriage and her answer held proper rebuttal evidence, where defendant had testified otherwise.

6. Homicide 🔑22(2).

To be "murder of first degree," killing must be premeditated, except when done in perpetration of certain felonies (Pen. Code, § 189).

> [Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Murder in First Degree," see Words and Phrases.]

7. Homicide 🔑22(1).

If act is preceded by, and is result of, concurrence of will, deliberation, and intent, crime of "first-degree murder" is proved (Pen. Code, § 189).

8. Homicide 🔑23(1).

When killing is proved to have been committed by defendant, presumption is that it was malicious and an act of murder, but, in such case, verdict should be murder of second degree (Pen. Code, § 189).

9. Homicide 🔑254.

Evidence held to establish second-degree murder rather than first-degree murder as found by jury (Pen. Code, § 189, and § 1181, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1037).

RICHARDS, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

John Lee Howard was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals.

Judgment modified, and cause remanded, with directions.

Superseding opinion in 289 P. 830.

Josiah Coombs, John A. Deweese, and Delbert A. Hessick, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

WASTE, C. J.

The defendant was charged with the murder of Victor A. Cooley. The jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, without recommendation. The court below denied motions for new trial and for reduction of sentence, and pronounced sentence and judgment imposing the death penalty. Defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the orders denying the said motions.

At the commencement of the trial, it appearing that the case would be somewhat protracted, two alternate jurors were duly selected, as provided by law. These alternates took the necessary oaths, assumed their places in the box with the regular jurors, and heard all of the evidence introduced upon the trial. At the conclusion of the evidence, and during the oral argument, one of the regular jurors sought the trial judge in chambers prior to the convening of court, and there disclosed to him that she personally knew two of the witnesses who had testified on behalf of the defendant in the cause, and that on account of certain facts which she personally knew concerning these witnesses, and which she disclosed to the judge, she was prejudiced against each of said two witnesses and their testimony. The judge thereupon called the attorneys for the prosecution and for the defense and also the defendant into his chambers and fully disclosed the situation to them. There was considerable discussion, in which the defendant personally took some part, concerning the situation in which the cause was placed, it being generally agreed that the juror who had reported to the judge should be excused from passing on the case. Thereupon one of the defense counsel suggested a stipulation excusing the juror and selecting in her stead one of the alternates, stating "there is no real reason why she should sit in preference to either of the two alternates. * * * Why can't we stipulate * * * that the juror be excused because of her statement to the court, and that the clerk may draw one of the two alternates." A stipulation to this effect was entered into in open court by the respective counsel, and the regular juror was dismissed, and one of the alternates, chosen by lot, took her place in the jury box. The regularity of this proceeding by which the alternate was selected was also stipulated to. The closing arguments were then concluded, and the cause submitted to the jury, which, as already stated, returned a verdict finding defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, without recommendation.

[1-3] It is now contended by the defendant that, upon discovering the state of mind of the regular juror, a mistrial should have been ordered, and that to substitute the alternate for the regular juror under such circumstances amounted to a reversible error, in that he was thereby deprived of a trial by jury as guaranteed by section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution. While the value and importance of the privilege thus guaranteed cannot be overemphasized, on the record now before us we cannot see how or wherein there was any invasion of the common-law right of a jury trial. The first essential of a common-law jury in criminal causes is a jury of twelve citizens, no more nor less, drawn from the locality, duly examined and sworn to try the cause. No objection was offered to the panel in this case. The second requirement is that the jurors must be impartial. No claim is made that juror Shields, the alternate selected, was not in fact a fair and impartial person to act as a juror. While the record brought here does not contain the examination of the jurors on voir dire, it does indicate that the same proceedings were had in the selection of the alternate jurors as in the case of the first twelve who took their places in the box. We may assume that the defendant was satisfied that the alternate jurors thus selected would give him the fair and impartial trial to which he was entitled, should either be called in lieu of one of the other jurors. The third essential is that the verdict shall be unanimous, and that was so in this case, for the record shows that the twelve jurors agreed and returned a unanimous verdict.

While the circumstances of this case are not such as to bring it within the purview of section 1089 of the Penal Code providing for alternate jurors, we think the procedure by which the alternate juror was substituted in the place and stead of the regular juror was, at most, but an irregularity which in no way substantially affected the defendant's rights. In the execution of the means which the lawmakers provide to enforce the guaranties of the organic law, the end to be effected must be through the adoption of a reasonable and practical method to secure attainable ends. When this has been done, nothing more can be demanded, from the very nature of things. It is not claimed that the verdict would have been any different had the alternate juror not participated in the deliberations of the jury. He was subject to the same challenge and took the same oath as the other jurors. We should assume that in all respects he obeyed his oath and that he well and truly tried all the matters in issue and rendered a true and impartial verdict in the cause. Defendant's right was to a fair and impartial jury, not to a jury composed of any particular individuals. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 199, 48 P. 75. The situation here presented is not one in which a waiver of the right to a jury trial in a felony case enters into the consideration.

No case has arisen in this state, or perhaps elsewhere, precisely like the case at bar in its facts. Earlier cases, in which disqualification of a juror has been raised after verdict in criminal causes, are reviewed in People v.

Duncan, 8 Cal. App. 186, 96 P. 414. In that case, one Bernard Sherry appeared at the trial and substituted himself as a juror in place of John H. Sherry, whose name was upon the jury list, and who had been regularly subpœnaed to attend court as a trial juror. Upon the impanelment of the jury, the name of the rightful juror was drawn, and in answer thereto the other Sherry took his place in the box, and after due examination as to his qualifications, was accepted and sworn as a juror and acted throughout the trial of the cause. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. On appeal, it was contended that Bernard Sherry never became a juror because he was not selected and returned as required, and that therefore the verdict was the verdict of but eleven jurors. The court swept aside the contention, saying that it begged the question. The judgment of conviction was affirmed, and the petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied.

We find no merit in defendant's first contention.

Prior to his untimely death, the decedent was engaged in the automobile rental business in the city of Pasadena. In the early part of January, 1928, the defendant was employed by him, and by mutual agreement went to live with the decedent and his wife. The Cooleys became estranged, and separated in September, 1928, whereupon the defendant and decedent took an apartment together. They were apparently on good terms and quite friendly. At about 12:50 a. m. on the morning of April 17, 1929, the defendant telephoned to the Pasadena police station and stated to the officer responding to the call: "This is Jack Howard. There has been a murder committed in my apartment. I have called the ambulance. I wish you would send a couple of the boys over." Upon arriving at the apartment the officers found the decedent sitting on the edge of the bed in a semiconscious condition. The room was in a state of disorder, personal belongings having been upset and scattered about, giving evidence of the perpetration of a robbery. The injured man was removed to the emergency hospital, and from there to the Pasadena hospital, where he was operated on to relieve paralysis resulting from a blow on the skull with a solid instrument. It was the doctor's opinion, given at the trial, that the blow had been struck while the decedent was lying down. The decedent never regained consciousness, and passed away three days later. Shortly after reporting the matter to the police, the defendant stated that he had no definite idea as to the identity of the perpetrator of the crime, but mentioned the name of a person who was supposed to have previously threatened the decedent's life. At that time the defendant also stated that he had driven the decedent home from the garage on the night of the homicide at about 9 p. m., and, as was his usual custom, returned to the garage and there busied himself about the automobiles until the last of the rented cars had been brought in, whereupon, at about 1 a. m. he again returned to the apartment and found the decedent in an unconscious or semiconscious condition, which prompted him to notify the authorities. Substantially the same story was told by the defendant at the coroner's inquest held on April 23, 1929, and again repeated to the police on the same day. Three days later, however, defendant modified his story and told Detective H. M. Thomas that he had driven to the apartment alone on the night of the homicide at about 10:30 p. m. to secure a bottle of whisky; that the decedent was there and upbraided him for absenting himself from the garage; that the decedent grabbed him and a struggle ensued in which he struck the decedent on the head with his mechanic's hammer; that he thought he had killed the decedent, and thereupon disordered the room in order to give the appearance that the homicide had been committed in an attempt to burglarize the apartment; that he then went to the garage and performed his usual duties, returning to the apartment after 12 p. m., when he notified the police. Defendant also stated to the detective that the killing was not premeditated, and expressed his willingness to plead guilty to a charge of manslaughter. After the usual proof as to its voluntary character, the prosecution introduced in evidence, over defendant's objection, a written confession made and signed by the defendant on the same day as the oral statement just above outlined had been made, wherein the defendant admitted striking the decedent with a hammer while struggling with him.

[4, 5] The defendant took the stand in his own behalf and related many of the matters already narrated. He reiterated his original story to the effect that he had found the apartment disordered and the decedent injured when he returned after closing the garage. He did not deny making the confession, but testified that the story therein related was concocted by him, upon suggestion of the police, in order to clear the decedent's estranged wife, whom he claimed was innocent, and still leave himself open to no greater charge than that of manslaughter. Defendant admitted having called on the decedent's estranged wife on the night of the homicide. On cross-examination, defendant stated that prior to the homicide he had given her several Christmas and birthday gifts, but denied that he had ever loved the woman or proposed marriage to her. He also admitted saying to the district attorney subsequent to the confession: "You are trying to ring in an innocent person [meaning decedent's wife].

I done this without anybody's help," but insisted that he said this to divert suspicion from Mrs. Cooley, and to back up his confession. While on the stand, defendant conceded that the confession had not been procured by means of threats or violence, but stated it was the result of promises by the authorities to merely charge him with manslaughter. The evidence upon this issue was conflicting, and the question was one for the jury's determination. Defendant produced several witnesses who testified that his general reputation for peace and quiet was good. Much of defendant's evidence was controverted by the rebuttal evidence of the prosecution. Among other witnesses called by the people in rebuttal was the decedent's estranged wife, who testified that defendant had proposed marriage to her, but that she had told him, in substance, that she would never marry any one as long as Mr. Cooley lived. This was proper rebuttal evidence, for defendant on cross-examination had testified otherwise.

[6-8] The defendant contends that the evidence does not warrant a verdict of first-degree murder because of the asserted absence of a showing of express malice. Murder is defined as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Section 187, Pen. Code. Such malice may be express or implied. It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow-creature, and implied when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. Section 188, Pen. Code. All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem, is murder in the first degree; and all other kinds of murders are of the second degree. Section 189, Pen. Code. To be murder of the first degree, under our statute, the killing must be premeditated, except when done in the perpetration of certain felonies; that is to say, the unlawful killing must be accompanied with a deliberate and clear intent to take life. If the act be preceded by, and be the result of, a concurrence of will, deliberation and intent, the crime of first-degree murder is proved. People v. Bellon, 180 Cal. 706, 182 P. 420. When the killing is proved to have been committed by the defendant, and nothing further is shown, the presumption of law is that it was malicious and an act of murder; but in such a case the verdict should be murder of the second degree, and not murder of the first degree. People v. Knapp, 71 Cal. 1, 6, 11 P. 793; People v. Ford, 85 Cal. App. 258, 263, 258 P. 1111.

[9] In the present case, the prosecution relied principally on the defendant's confession to prove his connection with the offense. If the confession be disregarded, the record is entirely destitute of evidence tending to establish the circumstances and conditions actually existing just prior to and at the time of the striking of the fatal blow. If, as urged by the people, the jury in weighing and considering the evidence might properly reject as untrue that portion of the confession wherein defendant charged the decedent with having been the aggressor in a quarrel which led up to the homicide, there remains no evidence from which it might reasonably be deduced that the killing was the result of a willful, deliberate, and premeditated intent to kill. We do not question the propriety of the jury's action in rejecting any portion of the defendant's evidence or confession which to it was unworthy of belief. However, if it be assumed that this was done in the present case, there is a dearth of evidence tending to show the conditions as they existed at the time of the homicide, and from which it might reasonably be held that the murder was, in fact, willful, premeditated, and intentional. In this regard, the state failed to satisfy the burden of proof. On the other hand, if it be assumed that the jury accepted defendant's confession in toto, the offense would still be that of second-degree murder, for defendant did not satisfactorily establish such provocation as would excuse the homicide or reduce it to manslaughter. The commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution relieves him of this burden. Section 1105, Pen. Code.

Section 1181 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 1037), provides, in part, that, if the evidence in a criminal cause shows the defendant to be not guilty of the degree of the crime of which he was convicted, but guilty of a lesser degree thereof, or of a lesser crime included therein, the trial court or any court to which the cause may be appealed may modify the judgment accordingly without granting or ordering a new trial. This court had occasion to consider the amended section in the case of People v. Kelley, 208 Cal. 387, 391, 281 P. 609. We are of the view that the record now before us establishes murder of the second degree. We entertain a doubt as to its showing murder of the first degree. Our attitude of mind seems to be shared by the prosecution. While contending that the evidence is amply sufficient to support the verdict, the people concede that it is "not as strong as that usually accompanying first degree murder cases." Under no theory, they state in their brief, can it be said that the evidence does not "support a judgment of second degree murder." What has been said under this assignment sufficiently disposes of the defendant's contentions touching asserted errors of the court below in charging the jury upon first-degree murder, and in denying his motions for new trial and reduction of sentence. We have examined the remaining assignments of error, including those having to do with the trial court's rulings on the evidence, and find nothing approximating prejudicial error.

The judgment of the lower court of murder of the first degree is modified. The cause is remanded to the trial court, with directions to enter a judgment against the defendant finding him guilty of murder of the second degree, and to thereupon pronounce judgment upon him as prescribed by law.

RICHARDS, J. (dissenting).

I dissent. It is conceded in the foregoing opinion that the circumstances of this case are not such as to bring it within the purview of section 1089 of the Penal Code, which has reference to the substitution during a criminal trial of alternate jurors. The case stands therefore as though there existed no provision of law permitting substitution of another person in the place and stead of a regularly drawn and impaneled juror. In the absence of such legal warrant the person introduced into the jury in the midst of the trial in this case was nothing more than a mere bystander. It is also practically conceded in the foregoing opinion that the defendant did not expressly consent in open court to the substitution of such bystander in the place and stead of the regular juror during the trial of the cause. This to my mind under authorities hereinafter to be cited amounted to a violation of the constitutional right of the defendant to a trial by jury. The argument that the substituted person was otherwise qualified to act and serve as a juror, that he took the usual oath, and that it must be assumed that he obeyed the same to the extent of joining with the regular jurors in rendering a just and impartial verdict, is utterly sophistical, and, if permitted to pass without protest, would permit any number of bystanders to be introduced in the regular panel during the trial of criminal causes, and would entirely subvert the constitutional guarantee as to trial by jury.

Section 7 of article 1 of our state Constitution provides in part that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate." The value and importance of the right thus guaranteed cannot be overemphasized. It has always been considered as one of the principal bulwarks of liberty under both the English and American systems of government and constitutional law. While the origin of this institution may be uncertain, it has been so long and so deeply rooted in the institutions of the English people that neither conquest nor change of sovereignty ever operated to either abolish it or even to work its material modification. We find in Blackstone, not only the most correct estimate of this institution, but also its greatest encomium, when he states: "The trial by jury has ever been and I trust ever will be looked upon as the glory of the English law. * * * It is the most transcendent privilege which any subject can enjoy, or wish for, that he cannot be affected either in his property, his liberty or his person, but by the unanimous consent of twelve of his neighbors and equals." The learned author refers to a celebrated French writer (Montesquieu, Spirit of Laws, XI, 6), who concludes that those who assert, because Rome, Sparta, and Carthage have lost their liberties, therefore those of England in time must perish, should have recollected that Rome, Sparta, and Carthage, at the time when their liberties were lost, were strangers to the trial by jury. Blackstone (Jones), vol. 2, pp. 1989, 1991. In his great work on "Laws and Jurisprudence of England and America," at page 121, Judge Dillon states: "I consider the trial by jury an essential part of our judicial system. It has a cherished tradition. Its roots strike down deep into the experience, the life, and the nature of the people who have developed and perfected it. It gives an individuality to our legal system. It is a vital part of it.' The fundamental privilege thus developed under English institutions has been secured to every person in our own country charged with crime, by the Constitution of the United States and of each individual state. The language of the Constitution of this state has been in part above quoted, and the courts of this state have uniformly held that the cardinal principle therein enunciated is to be considered as meaning that the essential features of trial by jury as known to the common law must be preserved and its benefits secured to all those who were entitled under the common law to the right of trial by jury. People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 25 P. 481, 11 L. R. A. 75; People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 333, 365, 202 P. 51; People v. Kelly, 203 Cal. 128, 133, 263 P. 226; 15 Cal. Jur., p. 325, § 5. Under the common law there was no provision for alternate jurors, and the rule was well settled that, if during a trial a juror became incapacitated or was for any reason discharged, a new juror either had to be sworn and the trial begun anew, or the jury had to be dismissed and a new jury impaneled. This is still the law in those jurisdictions where there are no alternates or where the alternate jurors have in the course of the trial become regular jurors. It is so stated in section 1123 of our Penal Code, which in part provides that: "If, after all alternate jurors have been made regular jurors, a juror becomes so sick as to be unable to perform his duties and has been discharged by the court, a new juror may be sworn and the trial begun anew, or the jury may be discharged and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled." It has, however, been held that the Legislature has power to provide for alternate jurors, and our state Legislature has so provided from a time as far back as 1895, when section 1089 was added to our Penal Code (Stats. 1895, p. 279), which section provides for the selection of alternate jurors in the discretion of the court, and their substitution in place of the regular jurors in certain situations. This section of the Penal Code was amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1063, § 2) so as to provide that the court may in felony cases direct the calling of not more than two alternates, who may sit as regular jurors under the conditions expressly provided for in the section as thus amended, which, in so far as these are pertinent to the situation before us, reads as follows: "If, before the final submission of the case, a juror die, or becomes ill, so as to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged and draw the name of an alternate, who shall then take his place in the jury box, and be subject to the same rules and regulations as though he had been selected as one of the original jurors." The constitutionality of the foregoing provisions of the Penal Code were fully considered and upheld in the case of People v. Peete, supra, wherein a rehearing was denied by this court, and which desion meets with our full approval, and it may be taken to be settled law, that the Legislature has the power to provide for alternate jurors in a proper case. The Legislature, as we have seen, has so provided in sections 1089 and 1123 of the Penal Code, but in so doing has expressly limited the right of the trial court in any criminal case to substitute alternate jurors for any one or more of the regular jurors to try such cause to cases where, "before the final submission of the case, a juror die, or become ill, so as to be unable to perform his duty." This express limitation upon the power of the trial court to substitute alternate jurors for regular jurors renders the conclusion irresistible that in no other instance than that of the death or serious illness of a regular juror is the court given any power whatever to make such substitution. It would seem to follow as a necessary conclusion that the substituted alternate juror in the instant case, having been called to replace a regular juror who had neither died nor become ill so as to be unable to perform his duty, had no more right to sit or act in the case than any other person who might have been selected under like circumstances by any method not authorized by the express provisions of the foregoing sections of the Penal Code. This conclusion brings us to a consideration of the next question involved in this appeal, which is as to whether under the provisions of our Constitution and laws a defendant can waive his aforesaid constitutional right to trial by a common-law jury.

Prior to the amendment of the state Constitution in 1928 it was well settled by the decisions of this court and of the appellate court of this state that neither the defendant nor his counsel could waive the right to a jury trial in a felony case. People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 602, 26 P. 500; People v. Metropolitan Surety Co., 164 Cal. 174, 128 P. 324, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1181; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 193 P. 92; Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 239 P. 317; Ex parte Bracklis, 52 Cal. App. 274, 198 P. 659; People v. Garcia, 98 Cal. App. 702, 277 P. 747; People v. Spinato, 100 Cal. App. 600, 280 P. 691. In the year 1928, however, section 7 of article 1 of the state Constitution was amended so as to read in part as follows: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel." In the case of People v. Garcia, supra, it was held that under the foregoing provision of the Constitution as thus amended the defendant in felony cases must personally and expressly consent to the waiver of trial by jury, and that the consent of the defendant's counsel, even though expressed in his presence, was not sufficient to constitute such a waiver. In the case of People v. Spinato, supra, the case of People v. Garcia, supra, was cited with approval, in the face of the strenuous insistence on behalf of the people that under the decisions of federal and other state courts an express waiver of this constitutional right by counsel in the presence of the defendant should be held an implied waiver, sufficient to satisfy the constitutional and statutory provisions touching the right of trial by jury. The cases thus cited were analyzed by the appellate court and were held to have no application to the situation in California created by the aforesaid recent amendment to its Constitution, expressly providing that, in order to constitute a waiver of the right to jury trial in felony cases, the "consent of both parties expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel" must concur in order to accomplish such waiver.

The Supreme Court of the United States has had occasion in a recent and very well reasoned decision (Patton v. United States, 281 U. S. 276, 50 S. Ct. 253, 74 L. Ed. 854) to pass upon the right of a defendant to a common-law jury of twelve persons, wherein it was held that this right on the part of a defendant was of such importance that he alone could personally stipulate it away by his express agreement in open court to be tried by less than twelve jurors. It would seem to be axiomatic that, if a defendant may only by his personal and express agreement in open court waive the right to trial by a common-law jury of twelve persons, he cannot, without such express waiver and consent, be put upon his trial before any less number than twelve jurors, since, as was held by the Supreme Court of the United States in Patton v. United States, supra, no distinction can be drawn between the effect of a complete waiver of a jury and consent to be tried by a less number than twelve, but that both forms of waiver amount in substance to the same thing. In the light of the foregoing decisions and of the admitted facts of the instant case, I am constrained to hold that in the absence of an express agreement on the part of the defendant himself, consenting to the substitution of an alternate juror in the place and stead of one of the regular jurors impaneled to try the cause, and who was shown to be neither dead nor ill so as to be unable to proceed with the trial, it was prejudicial error on the part of the trial court to undertake to make such substitution and thereafter to proceed with such trial before eleven regular jurors and one alternate juror, with the result of the defendant's conviction.

It is, however, contended by the prosecution that the foregoing error of the trial court was merely an error in procedure for which the case should not be reversed, under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution, in the absence of a showing that such error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. I am, however, of the opinion that there is no merit in this contention, and that the denial of the right of trial by a common-law jury to a party so entitled amounts in itself to a miscarriage of justice, and that to such a situation section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution can be given no application. People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 458, 249 P. 859, and cases cited; People v. O'Connor, 81 Cal. App. 506, 254 P. 630; People v. Young, 100 Cal. App. 18, 279 P. 824.

FIGONI v. FIGONI.

S. F. 13238.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 12, 1931.

1. Marriage 🔑57.

Terms "annul" and "annulment," as commonly applied to marriage, mean to declare void or render invalid (Civ. Code, § 82).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Annul; Annulment," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Judgment 🔑252(5).

Complaint praying for annulment of incestuous marriage and for general relief held to support judgment declaring marriage void (Civ. Code, §§ 80, 82).

Complaint purported to be filed under Civ. Code, § 82, providing for annulment of marriages. Section 80 provides that either party to incestuous or void marriage may proceed by action in the Superior Court to have the same so declared. Complaint alleged facts showing incestuous marriage, and, in addition to praying for annulment of marriage, also prayed for general relief.

3. Marriage 🔑62, 64.

Court, in action to annul incestuous marriage, held authorized, after declaring marriage void, to adjudicate custody of minor children and division of property thereby avoiding multiplicity of suits (Civ. Code, § 80).

4. Marriage 🔑64, 66.

Custody of minor children on annulment of incestuous marriage is peculiarly for trial court, and its determination will not be disturbed, except for clear abuse of discretion (Civ. Code, § 80).

Action by Maria Figoni against John Figoni. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals.

SHENK, J.

This is an action to have it declared that the marriage between the parties is void, for the custody and support of minor children, and for a division of property acquired during the marriage relation.

The plaintiff is the niece of the defendant; the latter being a brother of the full blood of the plaintiff's father. The parties participated in a ceremony of intermarriage at Redwood City on July 22, 1919. To this union were born two children, a daughter aged seven years and a son aged five years at the time the present action was commenced in February, 1927.

The court found that neither party knew at the time of said purported marriage, nor at any time thereafter until their separation on July 3, 1926, that the marriage was incestuous or in conflict with the laws of the state, that the plaintiff mother is a fit and proper person to have the custody and control of the children, and that the parties, subsequent to said marriage, accumulated by their joint efforts, and while they were living together as husband and wife, certain real property situated in the city of Palo Alto. On conclusions of law from the facts found, the court entered judgment declaring said marriage null and void, awarded the custody of the children to the plaintiff, divided said real property equally between the parties, and reserved the question of the support and maintenance of the children for further consideration upon motion of either party.

[1, 2] On this appeal from the judgment, the defendant contends, first, that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in this, that it purports to have been filed under section 82 of the Civil Code providing for the annulment of marriages when the action should have been brought, so it is claimed, under section 80 of the same Code providing that "either party to an incestuous or void marriage may proceed, by action in the superior court, to have the same so declared." There is no merit in the contention. The complaint alleged the facts, including that of the incestuous marriage, which, if true, called for some action on the part of the court. Although the complaint prayed for an annulment of the marriage, it also prayed for general relief. The court treated the action as one brought under section 80 and "declared the marriage wholly null and void from the beginning." No prejudice whatsoever was suffered by the defendant because of the alleged technical misuse of the terms "annul" and "annulment." In fact, the commonly accepted meaning of those terms is to declare void or render invalid.

[3] It is next contended that, in an action under section 80 of the Civil Code, the court is confined in its judgment to a declaration that the marriage is void and can grant no further relief, such as awarding the custody of children and dividing the property. This would indeed be a narrow view to take of the powers of the court in the premises. The power of the court to declare the marriage void is conceded. The power to provide for the custody of minor children born during the marriage relation must also be conceded. Likewise, the power of the court to divide equally between the parties the property acquired by their joint efforts while living together under a void marriage entered into in good faith is well established. Schneider v. Schneider, 183 Cal. 335, 191 P. 533, 11 A. L. R. 1386; Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 118 P. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844; Macchi v. La Rocca, 54 Cal. App. 98, 201 P. 143. Vested with these powers, and having the parties before it, with the issues tendered and joined, we can see no possible reason why the court should not proceed, as it did in this case, to adjudicate the entire controversy between the parties in the same action, and thus avoid a multiplicity of suits.

[4] Finally, it is contended that the evidence does not support the findings. It is asserted that on the record the custody of the children should have been awarded to the father instead of to the mother. This matter is so peculiarly the province of the trial court that its determination will not be disturbed, except in the face of a clear abuse of discretion, which we do not find here. It is also claimed that the evidence shows without conflict that the real property divided equally between the parties was acquired by the defendant from funds owned by him before the marriage ceremony took place. This contention is not supported by the record. At the trial the defendant attempted so to establish, but the evidence on the subject is not of that conclusive character as to require a reversal. Furthermore, it appears that on July 22, 1926, the defendant sued the plaintiff for a divorce in Santa Clara county. In his verified complaint he alleged that the real property, which was divided between the parties in the present action, was "acquired by him from his earnings since the marriage of said parties." This declaration, when considered with the other evidence on the subject, was sufficient to create a conflict to be resolved by the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

KENNEY v. ANTONETTI et al.

S. F. 14065.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 8, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⚷244(20).

Fact that defendant's horses were unattended on highway at night, and other facts shown, sufficiently established prima facie case for guest injured when automobile collided with horse (St. 1923, p. 565, § 151; Civ. Code, § 1714).

Evidence showed that parties in automobile were driving at reasonable speed at about the hour of midnight along fenced highway where it adjoined branch owned by defendant, and that suddenly two horses unattended on road loomed up ahead of automobile, and that driver slowed down and succeeded in passing between them, but almost immediately thereafter another horse invisible in darkness jumped in front of automobile and collided with it.

2. Automobiles ⚷242(1).

In action by guest in automobile colliding with horse, it was not incumbent on plaintiff to show how horses came to be loose, or who permitted them to enter highway (St. 1923, p. 565, § 151).

3. Negligence ⚷121(2).

Theory of doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" stated.

The theory of doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is that defendant in charge of an instrument which causes injury either knows cause of accident or has the best opportunity of ascertaining it, and plaintiff, having no such knowledge, is compelled to allege negligence in general terms and to rely on proof of happening of accident in order to establish it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action by Agnes Kenney against Joe Antonetti and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

Superseding opinions in 282 P. 1008; 290 P. 617.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, John H. Leonard and Willard D. Paine, both of Santa Cruz (Daniel R. Shoemaker, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for respondents.

PRESTON, J.

The judgment of nonsuit entered herein in favor of defendants is hereby reversed.

Plaintiff, a young woman of twenty-one years, sustained severe and permanent injuries, to wit, facial scars and loss of right eye, as the result of an automobile accident which occurred in substantially the following manner: She was riding in the front seat of said automobile as guest of the owner and driver. With other guests in the rear, the parties were proceeding home from a dance at about the hour of midnight on February 21, 1927, driving at a reasonable speed along a fenced highway near Santa Cruz, where it adjoined a ranch owned and operated by the defendants. Suddenly two horses, unattended on the road, loomed up ahead of the car. The driver slowed down, and succeeded in passing between them, but almost immediately thereafter another horse, invisible in the darkness, jumped in front of the machine and collided with it. The force of the impact turned the car over into a ditch, and the aforesaid injuries to plaintiff resulted.

Plaintiff, by her amended complaint, alleged negligence in general terms, to wit: "That said horse or horses was or were among a number of horses that were, through the negligence and gross carelessness of defendants, permitted to remain on said highway or road unattended by any person;" that "said horses were under the control of and owned by defendants" and said highway was "fenced on both sides by a substantial fence." Defendants answered with a general denial and a charge of contributory negligence. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court granted defendants' motion to strike out the testimony of five witnesses to the effect that they had seen horses, evidently owned by defendants, straying unattended on the highway at the point in question at various times just prior to the accident, and further granted a motion by defendants for nonsuit made upon the ground that there was no proof of the material allegations of the complaint or that said horses were controlled or owned by defendants or by their negligence permitted to remain unattended on the highway, nor was there evidence sufficient to allow the case to go to the jury. Judgment for defendants followed, and plaintiff appealed.

[1-3] It is the contention of appellant that there was sufficient evidence on the question of defendants' negligence to allow the case to go to the jury, and that the court erred in striking out said testimony and in granting a nonsuit. In other words, she pleads applicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and urges that a prima facie case was made by her, proving directly and inferentially every allegation of the complaint. With these claims we must agree.

Defendant Joseph Antonetti testified that the horse that caused the accident was his; he then stated that he himself did not own the horse but it was one of five horses belonging to the ranch company, or partnership, consisting of himself—the boss—and certain of the other defendants, one of whom, defendant Digrazia, had the care and control of the animals. Section 151 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Act 5128, Deering's General Laws 1923, Stats. 1923, pp. 517, 565), in part provides in substance that no person owning or controlling live stock shall voluntarily or negligently permit any of them to stray or remain unaccompanied upon a fenced public highway, and section 1714 of the Civil Code in part provides in substance that everyone is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his property. The fact that defendants' horses were unattended upon the highway at night and the other facts adduced by the evidence, considered in the light of the above provisions and the further general rules of negligence applying at all times, clearly gave rise to an inference of negligence here, and sufficiently established plaintiff's prima facie case. It was not incumbent upon her to prove just how the horses came to be loose or who permitted them to enter the highway, for this was obviously a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants. In the exercise of ordinary care, how would it be possible for horses to stray time and again unattended upon the highway, as plaintiff attempted, by the evidence stricken out, to show it was the custom of defendants' horses to do? The theory of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that a defendant in charge of an instrumentality which causes injury either knows the cause of the accident or has the best opportunity of ascertaining it, and the plaintiff, having no such knowledge, is compelled to allege negligence in general terms and to rely upon proof of the happening of the accident in order to establish it. 19 Cal. Jur., § 127, p. 713.

As said in Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 265 P. 238, 240, 59 A. L. R. 480: "One who seeks to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been incurred by reason of another's negligence must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the latter's negligence has occasioned him loss. However, where the facts are such as to give rise to an inference of negligence from the inherent nature and character of the act causing the injury, or, in other words, to give application to the principle of res ipsa loquitur, the burden of proceeding is shifted to the defendant and if he would escape an adverse finding he must adduce evidence to meet the plaintiff's prima facie case."

An able discussion of the questions here confronting us is found in Breidenbach v. McCormick Co., 20 Cal. App. 184, 128 P. 423, 425, where the court held, upon a showing of injury by a runaway horse, unattended in the streets of a city, that a prima facie case of negligence was made out against the owner. That case cites with approval the rule laid down in Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 556, 40 P. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, as follows: "When a thing which causes the injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use the proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from the want of care." To the same effect see, also, the numerous other cases reviewed in the opinion in Breidenbach v. McCormick Co., supra, and Michener v. Hutton, supra, and cases therein cited; also Roberts v. Griffith Co., 100 Cal. App. 456, 280 P. 199; and Olden v. Babicora Development Co. (Cal. App.) 290 P. 1062.

See, also, Hansen v. Kemmish, 201 Iowa, 1008, 208 N. W. 277, 45 A. L. R. 499, and note, where the court holds that one who is by statute required to restrain his boar is prima facie negligent in permitting it to be at large on a highway, where an automobile collides with it, to the injury of the driver, but he may show in defense that he in fact exercised reasonable and ordinary care in restraining the animal. The case of Doherty v. Sweetser, 82 Hun, 556, 31 N. Y. S. 649, is directly in point to the effect that the fact that a horse is in the street unattended shows negligence; and the burden is on the person in charge of the horse to show that he used all proper means to prevent it from escaping and that he was without fault.

Under any but exceptional circumstances, the exercise of ordinary care will serve to keep unattended animals in their proper inclosures. In these days of rapid automobile transportation, the extreme hazard to drivers and passengers of animals straying unattended on the roads at night cannot be overestimated. The driver is placed in a well-nigh helpless position because of the tendency of an animal to spring out of the darkness in front of a car when blinded or hypnotized by its headlights. Against this contingency, drivers should be protected, by having our roads clear of such obstructions, and every owner of live stock should make an earnest endeavor to so control their movements with due care that the lives of others may not be thereby endangered.

For these and other reasons we must conclude that the court erred in granting defendants' motion for nonsuit, and further discussion becomes unnecessary.

SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. RUDDLE PROPERTIES, Inc., et al.

Sac. 4479.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 9, 1931.

1. Judgment 🔑306.

Where judgment contained clerical error, trial court had authority to make record speak truth.

2. Appeal and error 🔑659(3).

Plaintiff, by motion for diminution of record, could have trial court's order amending judgment nunc pro tunc incorporated in transcript on file in Supreme Court on defendant's appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 953).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, substituted for the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, against J. G. Ruddle Properties, Inc., and others. On plaintiff's motion for diminution of record on appeal by defendant from judgment for plaintiff.

Motion granted.

Robert L. McWilliams, C. M. Peck, James F. Peck, C. F. Rafferty, and C. H. White, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers and Homer I. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, Stephen W. Downey, of Sacramento, and Edward Bickmore, of Merced, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J.

This is a motion by the respondent, upon suggestion of diminution of record, to have inserted in and made a part of the clerk's transcript an order amending the judgment appealed from.

Plaintiff brought the action to foreclose a mortgage given by the appellant J. G. Ruddle Properties, Inc., to secure a bond issue. Several junior incumbrancers were also named as defendants, some of whom answered, but none of whom asked that his lien be foreclosed. In fact, separate actions for the foreclosure of their respective liens had been filed by a few of the junior lienholders. At the commencement of the trial, it appears to have been understood by court and counsel that plaintiff's lien alone was to be foreclosed. and the findings of fact and conclusions of law, constituting the "decision" or judgment of the court (Aspegren & Co. v. Sherwood, Swan & Co., 199 Cal. 532, 537, 250 P. 400), were and are in accord with this understanding. However, the formal judgment thereafter signed by the court and entered by the clerk provided for the foreclosure of three of the junior liens, in addition to the foreclosure of plaintiff's mortgage. This apparent inadvertence was not called to the trial court's attention on the motion for new trial. The first brief filed upon the appeal from the judgment brought the matter to the attention of the respondent, who, in turn, directed the attention of the trial court to the apparent error or inadvertence in the judgment as entered. Declaring that the judgment as entered "does not correctly state the decision and judgment of the court by reason of inadvertence and mistake of the court and by reason of a clerical error and misprision of the clerk," the court made an order amending the judgment nunc pro tunc, to make it conform to the decision as pronounced in the findings of fact and conclusions of law; that is to say, to provide for the foreclosure of respondent's mortgage alone. By the present motion, respondent seeks to have the "Order Amending Judgment Nunc Pro Tunc" incorporated in and made a part of the transcript now on file in this court on the appeal from the judgment.

[1, 2] The trial court acted within its jurisdiction when it made its records speak the truth (Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 677, 209 P. 892; Dutton Dredge Co. v. Goss, 77 Cal. App. 727, 732, 247 P. 594), and we can conceive of no good reason why the order should not be brought up and made a part of the record before us. Section 953 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if "there is any paper or record in the custody of the clerk of the trial court which was before the trial court but which is not included in the record on appeal, and an examination of such paper or record will assist in a determination of the appeal on its merits, the court in which the appeal is pending may, on motion of either party, or on its own motion, require the production of a certified copy of such paper or record, and the same shall thereupon be deemed a part of the record on appeal." Respondent seeks to bring the additional record here in the proper manner.

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Biaggi v. Ramont, supra. If the amendment of the judgment was a proper one, it should be printed and filed as an amendment to the transcript in order that it might be before us when we come to a consideration of the appeal on its merits; if not a proper amendment, that fact may very readily be determined at such time.

It is therefore ordered that the motion be granted without prejudice to the later consideration upon this appeal of the question of the validity and effect of the order purporting to amend the judgment.

Civ. 7845.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 15, 1931.

Prohibition 🔑20.

Prohibition to restrain anticipated contempt proceeding will be denied, where petition did not set forth court records, showing proceeding was contemplated.

Petition by Elizabeth B. Rapken for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to the Superior Court, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. Frank H. Dunne, Judge of the Superior Court and the Juvenile Department thereof, to restrain the hearing of an anticipated contempt proceeding.

Writ denied.

Lucius L. Solomons, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM.

Application for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the trial court from hearing an anticipated contempt proceeding for failure to comply with a court order.

The petition does not set forth any of the court minutes, records, or citations from which it appears that any such proceeding is contemplated. The document set forth on page 5 of the petition is merely a subpœna, in the usual form, to appear as a witness in a proceeding pending before the court. While the petition alleges on page 5 that in pursuance of the subpœna the court proceeded "on the return date, and many times thereafter to hear and try this petition based on said subpœna for contempt," etc., and "has proceeded to try her for contempt as a result of and based solely on said subpœna over the objections of petitioner," etc., the petitioner has not set forth the court minutes, or a transcript of the testimony, or something else of record to show that this has been done. All we have is the conclusion of the petitioner.

The petition is denied.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(35).

In death action arising out of rear-end collision, evidence supported finding of bus driver's negligence in driving at excessive speed in business district.

> Though evidence was somewhat conflicting, there was ample evidence to support implied finding that bus driver who collided with rear of deceased's automobile was guilty of negligence, directly contributing to accident and attendant injuries, in that he drove in business district at speed considerably in excess of 15 miles per hour, and drove his vehicle on public highway at speed greater than was reasonable and proper, having due regard to traffic, surface and width of highway.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Eleanor P. Brooks, as administratrix of the estate of Charles C. Brooks, also known as C. C. Brooks, deceased, against the City and County of San Francisco and another. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Carey & Gorfinkel, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem.

Appellants seek reversal of the judgment rendered in the trial court on a verdict for $15,000 awarded respondent in her representative capacity as damages for the death of her husband, who was injured and died as the result of an automobile collision alleged by respondent to have been caused through appellants' negligence.

As grounds for reversal appellants urge that the negligence of appellants was not proven, that the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the court erred in giving an instruction upon the doctrine of last clear chance.

Briefly the facts are these: On Sunday, November 6, 1927, at about 9:30 a. m., Charles C. Brooks was operating a Dodge coupé in a northerly direction on the easterly portion of the Embarcadero between piers 35 and 37 in the city and county of San Francisco. At the same time appellant J. M. Dunne, an employee of appellant city and county of San Francisco, was operating a seven-ton bus, 30 feet in length, to the rear of the Dodge coupé in the same direction and on the same side of the Embarcadero. The surfaced portion of the Embarcadero at the points involved in this action was then approximately 110 feet wide, having an asphalt surface or pavement on the easterly 30 feet thereof; the remaining 80 feet of said surface being cobbled pavement. The Dodge coupé driven by the said Brooks was first observed by appellant Dunne at a time when the bus driven by him was several hundred feet southerly from said coupé. Traveling at a speed variously estimated at from 15 to 30 miles an hour, the bus overtook the Brooks car, and when about 25 feet from it appellant Dunne steered sharply to the left and applied his brakes, thereby causing the bus to skid and collided with the rear end of the coupé. As a result the coupé was seen to spin around several times and come to a stop against the extreme easterly curb of the Embarcadero at a point estimated by several witnesses to be from 50 to 180 feet from the point of collision. The estimate of 180 feet, however, is substantiated by disinterested witnesses who actually made measurements on the ground.

The collision occurred in what is admittedly a business district of San Francisco, and at a time when the street was very wet and slippery. As a result of the collision the said Brooks sustained injuries from which he subsequently died.

[1, 2] While there is some conflict in the record, there is ample evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that the appellant Dunne was guilty of negligent conduct directly contributing to the accident and attendant injuries, namely, driving a motor vehicle in a business district at a speed considerably in excess of 15 miles per hour, and driving said vehicle on a public highway at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway. This implied finding will not be disturbed upon appeal, since the question of negligence is purely one for the jury. Haines v. Fewkes, 190 Cal. 477, 213 P. 490.

[3] The same rule is likewise applicable to the question of decedent's contributory negligence. As to such negligence the record also discloses a conflict. Appellants attempted to prove in their affirmative defense that decedent just prior to the collision turned his Dodge car directly in front of the on-coming bus without giving the signal required by law. It is true that there is some evidence in the record which might warrant the jury in finding that the decedent did as appellants claim, but there is also evidence, some of which was produced by appellants themselves, to the effect that at a point on the Embarcadero about 180 feet north of the place of impact the easterly line of the street deviates somewhat towards the west; that decedent, whose car was then traveling at a rate of speed of from 4 to 7 miles an hour, had only "commenced to make a little turn to the west," or "turned very slightly to the west"; and that for the last 30 feet that his car traveled prior to the collision and at the time thereof decedent was signaling with his hand his intention to change the direction of his car.

On the whole the record is amply sufficient to justify a jury in concluding that decedent was free from negligence, both at the time of the collision and prior thereto.

[4] As to the propriety of the court giving an instruction upon the doctrine of last clear chance the parties in their briefs have but little to say. No criticism is made of either the form or substance of the instruction. Appellants, content with the assumption that the testimony conclusively shows that decedent immediately before and at the very moment of the impact was guilty of negligence, invoke the rule that where a decedent's negligence is continuous and contemporaneous no instruction upon the last clear chance doctrine should be given. The assumption, however, is a false assumption, and the rule may not be applied. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by the Coast Electric Service, Inc., against J. Jensen. From an order denying his motion to strike from the files plaintiff's memorandum of costs, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Chester E. Ross, of Gilroy, for appellant.

Carl L. Hubbell, of Los Gatos, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J.

Defendant appeals from an order denying his motion to strike from the files plaintiff's memorandum of costs. The judgment in the action was entered and the memorandum of costs was filed on February 13, 1930, but the memorandum was not served within the succeeding five days, as required by section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On February 21, 1930, which was three days after the expiration of the statutory period allowed for such service, the court made an ex parte order, based on affidavit, purporting to grant plaintiff an additional 15 days within which to serve said memorandum; and the same was served within the extended time. Defendant then presented a motion to strike the memorandum from the files, and, upon the failure of plaintiff to appear at the hearing of the motion, it was granted. Later, on plaintiff's motion, the memorandum was restored to the files, and defendant renewed his motion to strike, which was denied.

[1-6] The terms of section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring the memorandum of costs to be served and filed not later than five days after the entry of judgment are mandatory, and failure to comply therewith extinguishes the remedy to recover the costs and operates as a fortfeiture of the right thereto. Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 403. In other words, as said in Griffith v. Welbanks & Co., 26 Cal. App. 477, 147 P. 986, 988, if a "party fails, within the time prescribed, to file and serve his memorandum of costs, then he is to be conclusively deemed to have waived the costs, if any, accruing in his favor" (see, also, Riddell v. Harrell, 71 Cal. 254, 12 P. 67; Holmes v. Anderson, 90 Cal. App. 276, 265 P. 1010); and if the memorandum be served or filed too late it will be stricken from the files on motion (Dow v. Ross, 90 Cal. 562, 27 P. 409). Pursuant to the power granted by section 1054 of said Code the trial court may extend the time prescribed by said section 1033 (Beilby v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 51, 70 P. 1024); but it is well settled that orders of extension granted pursuant to said section 1054 must be made during the period of time within which the act may be done, that is, while the right is still alive; and, if made after the expiration of such period, the orders are void and confer no legal authority for the doing of the act. Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 P. 418; Freese v. Freese, 134 Cal. 48, 66 P. 43; Estate of Clary, 112 Cal. 292, 44 P. 569. It follows, therefore, that, since the order extending time in the present case was granted three days after the expiration of the statutory period in which said memorandum may have been served, it was void.

[7] Counsel for plaintiff claims in his brief that the omission to serve the memorandum within the period of time prescribed by the statute was due to the fact that he was relying upon certain oral stipulations made by counsel for defendant in court to pay the judgment and the costs within a few days, providing execution was not issued; also upon certain letters written and payments made in confirmation of said stipulations. The matters referred to are entirely foreign to the record, however, no mention thereof being made in the bill of exceptions upon which the appeal was taken; consequently they are not the subject of proper consideration in the determination of the appeal. It is also claimed that it was discretionary with the trial court, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to relieve plaintiff from its default in failing to serve said memorandum within the statutory period. Conceding this to be true, the record before us fails to show that any such relief was ever applied for or granted.

[8] It appears from the terms of the order extending time that it was based upon the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney, which affidavit has not been made a part of the bill of exceptions; and plaintiff argues, therefore, that it must be assumed that sufficient facts were set forth therein to justify the court in granting the order. But, as will be observed, under the authorities hereinabove cited, the court loses jurisdiction to extend time upon the expiration of the statutory period within which the act may have been done. Therefore, it was beyond the power of the court to grant the extension, regardless of the contents of the affidavit.

Neither was the affidavit upon which plaintiff's motion for restoration of the memorandum was based set forth in the bill of exceptions, and plaintiff contends therefore that the order made in that behalf is presumed to have been properly granted. This may be conceded also: but that proceeding had no bearing whatever upon the matter of plaintiff's default in failing to serve said memorandum within five days after the entry of the judgment. As shown by the contents of the notice of motion, the purpose of that proceeding was simply to nullify the previous order striking the memorandum from the files, upon the ground that it was granted during the excusable absence of counsel for plaintiff.

For the reasons above stated, it is our opinion that defendant's motion to strike plaintiff's memorandum of costs from the files should have been granted. The order denying the same is therefore reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth H. Briggs against Walter Cameron. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

John A. Deweese and Josiah Coombs, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a judgment which was rendered against the plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile casualty.

The defendant is a brother of the plaintiff. They lived in separate homes in Culver City. They were on friendly terms with each other. The defendant owned a Cadillac touring car. December 23, 1926, he handed his chauffeur, Jock Gironda, $40, directing him to take the plaintiff in the automobile to the home of Mrs. Dunn at Santa Monica and purchase a Christmas turkey for himself and another for Mrs. Briggs. Gironda did so. Dewey street, in the vicinity of the home of Mrs. Dunn, had been recently paved. A broken water main had washed out a great hole beneath the paved surface of the street. This damage was apparently not visible. The chauffeur proceeded to return along Dewey street. As the Cadillac car was driven over this excavated space, the concrete gave way and precipitated the machine into the hole. The plaintiff was slightly injured. She brought suit for damages against her brother. The chauffeur was not made a party to the action. The cause was tried before the court without a jury. At the close of the evidence, both parties submitted the cause on its merits. The court found that neither the defendant nor his agent, Gironda, was guilty of negligence. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the defendant.

The appellant contends the judgment is not supported by the evidence. The plaintiff called both the defendant and his chauffeur as her witnesses. They were not examined under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure as adverse witnesses. Both of these witnesses indicated an entire willingness to testify to every circumstance favorable to the plaintiff. The court might have been warranted in assuming the parties to the litigation were in collusion to establish a liability on the part of the defendant, which they expected the surety company to pay. The defendant testified to the ownership of the machine, the agency of the chauffeur, the invitation to his sister to ride in the car, the fact that she was residing with him at his home since the accident occurred, and that his Cadillac car was insured against accidents. Gironda, the chauffeur, with the evident purpose of trying to show his knowledge of the danger, so as to impute negligence, testified that Mrs. Dunn told him just before he drove onto Dewey street that "that road is very dangerous; the water is rushing terrible, * * * I wouldn't go over it if I was you." In response to the inquiry, "Q. Was the danger apparent?" he replied, "Yes, there was water rushing along the gutter and across the street into the lot. * * * Did you say to Mrs. Briggs, 'I am sorry I tried this. I knew I couldn't make it and I should not have tried it?' A. Yes sir. * * * I says, 'I was a fool to try to make this.' * * * Q. You saw something * * * that gave some indication that there was something wrong with the road, did you? A. Yes." On cross-examination for the purpose of impeachment, this witness was shown a written statement which he admitted having signed the day following the accident, in which he said: "The street was not covered with water on top, although there was some water in the gutter. Any ordinary prudent person would never have any reason to believe that the concrete would give way as it did, for it all looked to be in perfect condition to all of us in the car until we struck it." Mrs. Dunn contradicted Gironda's statement that she had warned him not to go by way of Dewey street because it was dangerous. She testified, "I didn't tell him the road was dangerous." There was no other evidence that the occupants of the machine had any previous knowledge of the dangerous condition of Dewey street. Mrs. Briggs testified: "As far as I could tell, it (the street) looked all right."

[1-3] From the foregoing conflict in Gironda's evidence respecting his knowledge of the dangerous condition of the street and the consequent negligence on his part, together with the contradiction of Mrs. Dunn that she told him of the danger, the court was warranted in rejecting his evidence upon that subject as unworthy of belief. Except for his testimony, there was no evidence of his negligence in driving along Dewey street. In determining the credibility of a witness, the court has a right to consider all the facts and circumstances of the transaction and reject the evidence if it appears to be improbable. 10 Cal. Jur. 1145, § 363. Even though there is no conflict in the evidence, if, from the surrounding circumstances of the case, together with such reasonable inferences as may be drawn therefrom, reasonable minds may differ as to the presence of negligence, the finding of the court in that regard will not be disturbed on appeal. 19 Cal. Jur. 725, § 135; 2 Cal. Jur. 934, § 549; Whitmeyer v. Southern Pac. Co., 102 Cal. App. 199, 282 P. 1005; Wise v. Maxwell Hardware Co., 94 Cal. App. 765, 271 P. 918. Even though the evidence of the chauffeur in the present case were uncontradicted by his own testimony or that of other witnesses, the court might still be justified from other circumstances of the case in rejecting it as unworthy of credit.

[4, 5] While it is a general rule that the uncontradicted testimony of a witness to a particular fact may not be discredited, but should be accepted by the court as proof of the fact, this rule has its exceptions. The most positive testimony may be contradicted by the circumstances in evidence so as to satisfy the court of its falsity. Hufstetler v. Ind. Acc. Com. (Cal. App.) 290 P. 922; Caldwell v. Weiner, 203 Cal. 543, 546, 264 P. 1100; Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 612, 265 P. 238, 59 A. L. R. 480.

The circumstances of this case will not warrant this court in disturbing the judgment of the trial court.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis P. Russill, Judge.

Action by B. W. MacLaren against Grace Gilbert. From a judgment for plaintiff for part of demand only, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Willebrandt & Horowitz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Horace H. Appel and Albert Weiner, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

The judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff covers the amount due on two promissory notes, which were set out in the first two counts of the complaint. About these items there is no controversy. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment because the court refused to allow the demand contained in the third count of the complaint; the amount thereof being $1,543.09.

The action was commenced on September 8, 1927. Count 3 of the complaint alleged that within four years last past the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff in said sum upon an account for certain goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered to the defendant, and for money advanced to the defendant at her special instance and request. By amendment the plaintiff was allowed to file a fourth cause of action upon an account stated, dated July 21, 1926, covering all the demands of the original complaint. The court found that during the month of June, 1924, the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff in said sum $1,543.09, for certain work and labor and moneys furnished by plaintiff to defendant, no part of which has been paid; but also found that there never was any account between the parties and that more than two years had elapsed since the obligation became due; also that on July 31, 1926, the plaintiff presented to the defendant an account but that the defendant objected to the same as incorrect, and that the defendant never accepted said account or agreed to its correctness or agreed to pay the same as presented. The court also found upon the third cause of action that the debt was barred by the provisions of section 339, subdivision 1, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] From the evidence it is apparent, and it seems to be conceded, that the original indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff with respect to the matters included in count 3 of the complaint, whatever the actual amount thereof may be, was incurred more than two years before the commencement of this action. As an ordinary indebtedness incurred for materials furnished or for labor or for money advanced for the benefit of the defendant and at her request an action to recover thereon would be barred at the end of two years. However, it is contended by appellant that the items of this demand were contained in a book account and not upon an ordinary obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument in writing, and that therefore the period of limitation is four years, as provided by section 337, Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] We have examined the evidence, and we are satisfied that it is not sufficient to establish any book account, within the meaning of the statute or at all. By oral agreement, somewhat indefinitely arranged in conversations between the parties, the plaintiff undertook to cause some improvements to be made upon real property of the defendant, and the defendant was to reimburse the plaintiff for the moneys so expended. The plaintiff ordered lumber and other materials, the bills for which were made out as against the defendant but were delivered to the plaintiff, who paid the same. These bills rendered by the materialmen constitute a large part of what the plaintiff seeks to use as his book of account. The only other evidence relied upon, of this nature, is found in the plaintiff's statement that the items were noted in the stubs of his check book, none of which were produced in evidence. He also claimed that he kept the record upon pieces of shingle and loose pieces of paper; but these upon further explanation appear to have been only memoranda used for the purpose of ordering materials when needed. These various supposed writings were never assembled and added together so as to constitute a statement of account or so as to show any definite sum due.

[3-5] It is also provided by section 337, Code of Civil Procedure, that an action may be commenced within four years upon an account stated. The plaintiff by his amendment to the complaint alleged that on July 31, 1926, an account was stated between himself and the defendant, the amount whereof the defendant agreed to pay. The court found against the plaintiff on this issue. It is admitted that in July, 1926, the plaintiff presented an account. The court found that this occurred, but further found that the defendant objected to the account on presentation, as being incorrect; that defendant never accepted the account and never agreed to the account as contained in said statement. We think that the court's finding is in accordance with the facts, or at least is fully justified by the evidence. This finding was in accordance with the testimony of the defendant, who admitted that certain bills and checks were presented to her by the plaintiff on July 31, 1926, and that she told him that the bill was not correct and that she did not know what she was going to do about it. It further appears that she kept the papers for further examination and did not at any time admit that the account was correct or agree to pay the same. There is no merit in the claim of appellant that by a telegram such promise was made. On this point it appears that the plaintiff sent to defendant a telegram in which he asked her to advise him, "if you have been able to make any definite arrangement on our affairs." To this inquiry defendant authorized the plaintiff's mother to send a reply as follows: "I am sorry there is no immediate way of an adjustment of our affairs and you may depend upon me at the first opportunity." In this language there is no modification or retraction of defendant's previous refusal to admit the correctness of the items claimed. Where there is an admission that something is due without specifying how much, there is no account stated. The amount due must be specified or there must be a reference to something by which the amount due can be definitely and certainly ascertained. American, etc., Co. v. Chicago-Los Angeles Building Corp., 88 Cal. App. 300, 263 P. 297; Ough v. Ansonia Oil Co., 99 Cal. App. 769, 773, 279 P. 481.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, Feb. 28, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 19, 1931.

Mines and minerals ⚷6.

Where mineral permit covering land described in application not embraced in riparian proprietor's preferential permit was canceled for violation of its conditions, that riparian proprietor failed to exercise permit did not entitle applicant to permit covering preferential lands on original application (St. 1921, pp. 405, 409, §§ 4, 11).

St. 1921, pp. 405, 409, §§ 4 and 11, authorizing Surveyor General to grant to any person permits to prospect in submerged tidelands, provide that in case of application for permit by any one other than riparian proprietor, the riparian proprietor has six months within which to file application for permit, and that if the riparian proprietor fails to comply with requirements of the act his preferential rights cease.

Application by John M. Keller for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Lyman M. King, Director of Finance, Department of Finance, and another, requiring issuance of permit or amendment of permit to prospect for mineral in submerged tidelands.

Writ denied.

Faries & Williamson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

CRAIG, J.

The petitioner, a person other than the littoral or riparian proprietor, filed an applicatiion for a permit to prospect for oil and gas upon a submerged area along the Pacific Coast in Santa Barbara county. Thereafter, and within a period of six months, the Standard Oil Company of California filed an application as littoral or riparian proprietor for a permit to prospect upon a portion of the same lands. The latter application was granted and the petitioner herein also received a permit a drill upon that portion of the lands described in his application not embraced in the permit to the littoral or riparian proprietor. Neither of the parties complied with the terms of said permits by commencing operations within the time prescribed by law, and their permits were forfeited and canceled by the state. Petitioner subsequently sought permission to drill upon the remainder of the area described in his application, which was refused, and he prays a writ of mandamus requiring the issuance either of "an amended permit or a new permit to prospect for oil and gas upon the lands described in said application and not included in the original state oil and gas prospecting permit issued to him."

Chapter 303 of the Statutes of 1921, pp. 405, 409, provides that:

"Sec. 4. The surveyor general is hereby authorized * * * to grant to any person * * * a prospecting permit * * * to prospect for oil or gas * * * upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit * * *; provided, however, that in case of prospecting permits and leases to river beds, lake beds, overflowed, tide and submerged lands, the width or length of the prospecting permit or lease along the shore line, measured on an east and west or north and south line, shall not exceed one-quarter mile * * *; provided, further, however, that in case of an application for a permit or a lease covering tide, overflowed or submerged land by anyone other than the littoral or riparian proprietor, said littoral or riparian proprietor shall have six months within which to file an application for a permit or lease, but if said littoral or riparian proprietor fails to comply with the requirements of this act and its rules and regulations made in pursuance hereof, his preferential rights shall thereupon cease and forever be terminated, and the original applicant shall be permitted to proceed with his application. * * *

"Sec. 11. The surveyor general shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit or lease upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence and care in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit or lease and shall insert in every such permit or lease issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him."

It is contended by the petitioner that upon the issuance of a permit to the Standard Oil company embracing a portion of the area described in his application, his right to a permit covering the same was simply held in abeyance for a period of six months, pending action of the littoral proprietor, and that upon its failure to comply with the terms or conditions stated in its permit he was entitled to proceed with his application. But petitioner having received under his application all that the then existing conditions allowed, and having failed to exercise due diligence as defined by his permit, it was lost by cancellation. It must be remembered that petitioner is asking for this writ under his original and only application. This having been granted to its full legal extent, its function has been performed. That permit having been canceled for a violation of its terms and conditions, it has ceased to be and is no longer subject to amendment. Reduced to its last analysis, the construction placed by petitioner upon these provisions is that a failure to drill within the prescribed period of time constitutes a violation of the act itself, as well as the rules and regulations, and the permit; that in this instance the paramount permittee lost its rights, not because of noncompliance with the requirements of the permit alone that it drill within a specified time, but "in view of the fact that the same act complained of was a violation of all three requirements, and in view of the pleadings on the subject."

We have found no authority to compel the surveyor general to again act upon an application which has not been held in abeyance awaiting the exercise of due diligence and care in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit of a littoral or riparian proprietor.

The demurrer is sustained. The peremptory writ of mandamus is denied.

Action by W. L. Atkinson against F. H. Boynton. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

TYLER, P. J.

This action was one originally brought by plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, against defendant to have a trust declared in his favor in a certain promissory note and deed of trust to the extent of $5,000; said note and deed of trust being in the name of defendant.

Before the case came to trial the note and deed of trust ceased to exist by reason of its payment by the maker before maturity. The fact of payment was set forth in an amended and supplemental complaint and a money judgment was prayed for. Judgment went for plaintiff. An appeal was taken from such judgment, which was reversed by reason of a certain error in the rejection of evidence. Atkinson v. Boynton, 97 Cal. App. 759, 276 P. 356. The facts leading up to the controversy may be summarized as follows: Appellant and one Arkelian entered into a written agreement through the agency of plaintiff and respondent to exchange certain real property belonging to them respectively. The property was to be exchanged without lien or incumbrance upon either parcel. Respondent was employed as agent of both parties and specially undertook as a condition precedent to his right to a commission to negotiate a loan for Arkelian on one of the parcels to be conveyed, said loan being necessary to provide Arkelian with funds to clear the property he was to convey to appellant and without which loan the exchange could not be accomplished under the terms of the written agreement. The agreement provided that each of the parties to the exchange should pay to respondent a commission of 5 per cent. The different parcels were each valued in the sum of $100,000. It subsequently developed that the transaction could not be carried out in all respects upon the terms provided for in the written agreement for the reason that Arkelian could not procure a loan. After negotiations between the parties, the contract was changed by oral agreement; the essential modification so far as the issues involved being that plaintiff agreed to accept a commission of $3,000 from each of the parties and further agreed that instead of receiving payment at the time the transaction was closed, he would accept $1,000 cash as part of the sum due from Boynton, the balance of $2,000 and the $3,000 due from Arkelian to be included in a note to be executed by Arkelian to Boynton, which plaintiff agreed to attempt to negotiate. Boynton then agreed to assume a mortgage of $25,000 on the property which he was obtaining from Arkelian and he further agreed to advance to Arkelian the sum of $17,000. Included in this latter amount was the balance of commission due plaintiff from Boynton and the balance of $3,000 commission due from Arkelian.

[1-3] The present trial was had by jury, and the main question presented was whether or not the parol modification of the written agreement provided that plaintiff's commissions were dependent upon his selling the note received by Boynton from Arkelian within a limited period. It was defendant's contention at the trial that plaintiff had agreed that he was to receive no commission other than the sum of $1,000 paid to him by Boynton unless he sold the note and deed of trust executed by Arkelian within a year after the transaction took place. Plaintiff, on the other hand, while admitting that defendant had prepared a written agreement to that effect, positively denied that he had agreed to any such arrangement. He testified that he refused to sign the same; he also testified that after such refusal on his part defendant had definitely agreed that there should be no limitation as to time, and promised to execute an agreement to that effect which he failed to do. It further appeared in evidence that plaintiff did within a year of the closing of the transaction present a buyer who was ready, willing, and able to purchase the note, but defendant refused to have any dealings with him and informed plaintiff that he had no interest in the note. There is therefore ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion that plaintiff earned his commission pursuant to an orally executed modification of the written agreement. Something is said in the brief of appellant concerning the sufficiency of the oral agreement under the provisions of the Statute of Frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973). A fully executed parol contract cannot be affected by the statute of frauds, and cannot be assailed by either party on the ground that it is not in writing. This same point was passed upon on the former appeal. Atkison v. Boynton, supra. See also Moore v. Borgfeldt, 96 Cal. App. 306, 273 P. 1114. Appellant next complains of the action of the court in permitting the amendment of the complaint. He further contends that the trial judge was guilty of misconduct in commenting upon the weight of the evidence and uttering prejudicial remarks during the course of the trial. We have considered these objections and they are without merit. Moreover, no assignment of misconduct was made with respect to anything that was done or said by the trial judge. Objections of this character cannot be made for the first time on appeal. And, finally, complaint is made concerning the instructions given by the court to the jury. We have examined the instructions and we find no merit in this objection.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TOLEDO.

Cr. 112.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 19, 1931.

1. Criminal law 🔑274.

Defendant's mere belief that he would receive punishment lighter than that actually imposed is not sufficient ground for granting motion to set aside plea of guilty.

2. Criminal law 🔑274, 1149.

Motion to set aside plea of guilty on ground of duress is within trial court's sound discretion, and its determination will not be disturbed unless discretion was abused.

3. Criminal law 🔑274.

Trial court's refusal to set aside plea of guilty, under amended information charging forgery and two prior convictions of burglary, on ground of duress, held not abuse of discretion under evidence.

4. Criminal law 🔑274.

Statement of defendant at penitentiary after sentence on plea of guilty, taken down in shorthand and transcribed but not sworn to, held admissible to contradict assertions in affidavit supporting motion to set aside plea of guilty.

5. Criminal law 🔑274.

On motion to set aside plea of guilty and judgment entered thereon, trial judge should be allowed wide latitude in determining real facts to ascertain whether injustice has been done.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Criminal prosecution by the People against Tony Toledo under an amended information charging the crime of forgery with two prior convictions of burglary. From the judgment rendered on a plea of guilty and from an order denying defendant's motion to set aside the judgment and for permission to withdraw plea of guilty, defendant appeals.

Judgment and order affirmed.

J. M. Lopes, of Tulare, and J. A. Chase, of Visalia, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

The defendant was charged, in an amended information filed by the district attorney of Tulare county, with the crime of forgery and with two prior convictions of burglary. He entered a plea of guilty, admitted the priors, waived the time for pronouncing judgment, and was sentenced on September 22, 1930, to imprisonment in the state penitentiary at Folsom. On October 1, 1930, he moved to set aside the judgment, and for permission to withdraw his plea of guilty and enter one of not guilty. After a hearing, the court denied the motion, and this appeal is taken from this order, and also from the judgment originally rendered.

Appellant first contends that the evidence presented at the hearing does not support the order denying his motion for permission to change his plea. It is his position that, in any view of the case, certain statements made to him by the deputy district attorney prior to his plea of guilty constitute such a threat as to conclusively show that the plea of guilty was made, not freely and voluntarily, but under duress and as a result of fear. In his own affidavit, which appellant introduced in support of this motion, the principal statement complained of is thus set forth: "It is lucky for you that you got here now, for I was just about to file three other charges against you and one charge against your brother, Domingos Toledo, charging him with compounding a felony for offering to pay off those checks." The affidavit further sets forth that the deputy district attorney also stated that in case the other charges were filed against appellant, the term of his sentence would be 48 years, and that, if he entered a plea of guilty upon the single charge alone, sentence would only be 12 years; that affiant was informed by his own attorney that, if he entered a plea of guilty, his sentence would be 12 years, which could be reduced by credits for good behavior; that he entered his plea of guilty for the purpose of protecting his brother, for the additional reason that he believed his sentence would be but 12 years, and that he did not learn until after his plea was entered that the sentence would be for life. Appellant also introduced the affidavit of the attorney who represented him at the time he pleaded guilty, being a different attorney from those conducting this appeal, in which the attorney states that immediately after he arrived in the courtroom, prior to the plea of guilty, the deputy district attorney announced that it was a good thing he had gotten there, as he was about to get a warrant for appellant's brother and three more warrants for the appellant himself; that, during a conversation which followed, the deputy district attorney stated, in a rather impatient and threatening manner, that he had a witness to the effect that appellant's brother offered to and tried to buy one of the checks involved in one of the three additional charges; that he intended prosecuting all parties that had anything to do with these checks; that the sentence would be for 12 years; and that affiant believed 12 years to be the maximum sentence.

[1] The mere belief on the part of a defendant that he will receive a punishment lighter than the one actually imposed is not a sufficient ground for granting such a motion as we are considering. People v. Manriquez, 188 Cal. 602, 206 P. 63, 20 A. L. R. 1441; People v. Junod, 85 Cal. App. 194, 259 P. 101. Furthermore, in the instant case, not only would appellant's attorney be presumed to know the penalty provided by law for such a case, but the record shows that the trial court had before it the testimony of the deputy district attorney that, on the occasion in question, he told the appellant and his attorney, that the offenses charged in the information brought appellant under a life sentence, but that he would be eligible to parole in 12 years, and that he supposed he would probably be paroled at the end of that time. We might well say here, as was said by the court in People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. at page 266, 98 P. 870, 871: "The court was not bound to accept as true the statements of appellant in his petition, but it was its duty to ascertain the facts and act accordingly."

In reference to the claim of duress, it appears that, when the case was called in court, appellant's attorney was not present. The district attorney testified that at that time the appellant called him over to him, and the following conversation occurred: "He says 'Tell me what this new paper is,' and then I explained to him it was the amended Freitas check charge, with the addition of the two priors for burglary, and he said, 'Well, I admit them.' He says 'he is right,' and then I told him, I says 'Tony, we have got two more checks' and he says, 'What are those,' then I explained to him how we had located two checks, one in Tipton and one here in Visalia, and I told him at that time that we were filing complaints against him on those two charges, and he said 'What is the best thing for me to do now?' He says 'Can I plead guilty to the charge without the priors,' and I explained to him there that the law compelled me to file the priors, and after I once filed them, it would be impossible for me to dismiss them, and he says, 'Well, I will plead guilty to all of them,' and I says, When do you want to do it, and we had some discussion. * * *" He further testified that the appellant wanted to plead then, but was told to wait until his attorney came. Thereupon the district attorney left the courtroom. After his attorney arrived, a conversation occurred between appellant, his attorney, and the deputy district attorney, the appellant's version of which is set forth in the affidavits above mentioned. The deputy district attorney's version is that he told them the following: "Furthermore, the district attorney's office is pretty hot about the attempted interference with witnesses in this case, and we don't like that, and it makes us pretty hot to have it happen, and we are contemplating filing a complaint against Domingues Toledo for attempting to interfere with witnesses."

He also admitted telling them that he intended to prosecute on the other charges on which he had evidence. At the hearing upon this motion, over the objection of appellant, the court admitted evidence as to the contents of a statement made by appellant after he had been taken to the penitentiary, which was taken down in shorthand and transcribed, but not sworn to. Nowhere in this statement does appellant claim that any promise was made to him that he would receive a lighter punishment if he pleaded guilty. The statement is far from convincing as to appellant's present contentions. He states therein that, after he talked with the district attorney in the courtroom, as above referred to, he understood it was all right with the district attorney if he pleaded guilty to the charges contained in the information, and that he later talked with the deputy district, attorney, but could not remember what he said except that "he said best thing to plead guilty." He then added, "I know he made a statement there he would be satisfied if I got 12 years." He further stated that he changed his mind when he saw the law book, and that the only quarrel he had with anybody was as to the penalty. It seems quite apparent from the record that this last statement is correct.

[2-5] Such a motion as this is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and, unless this discretion is abused, its action will not be disturbed. People v. Lee, 17 Cal. 76; People v. Bostic, 167 Cal. 754, 141 P. 380; People v. Murphy, 62 Cal. App. 709, 217 P. 810; People v. Smink (Cal. App.) 288 P. 873. The order denying appellant's motion is amply sustained by the record. Not only have we serious doubt as to whether a statement by a district attorney that he contemplates doing his duty may ever be considered as duress, within the meaning of such a motion as this, but the record here shows no abuse of the discretion vested in the trial court. The only other point raised is, that it was error for the court to receive at this hearing evidence of the statement of appellant above referred to, which was taken down in shorthand, but not sworn to. What appellant said on that occasion was admissible for the purpose of contradicting assertions made by him in his affidavit. In any event, the same rules do not apply to a proceeding of this character, as govern the admission of evidence in the trial of a case. Where the foundations of a judgment already entered by a court are thus questioned, the trial judge should have a wide latitude in getting at the real facts and in ascertaining whether or not an injustice has been done to a defendant. An informal statement, made by the person seeking to set aside the judgment, may be even more illuminating than a more formal affidavit. This particular statement, as may be imagined from the objection, is not favorable to appellant's contentions, and further confirms the correctness of the order from which this appeal is taken.

The order and judgment are affirmed.

*Hearing granted 2 P.2d 383.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action by Rosalind Bates against Kemper Campbell. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with direction.

Rosalind Bates, in pro. per.

W. Joseph Ford, Meserve, Mumper, Hughes & Robertson and Anderson & Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Mr. Justice pro tem. JAMISON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action for damages for alleged libel. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and thereupon judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff has appealed.

The question to be determined upon this appeal is whether or not the complaint states a cause of action against the defendant.

In substance, the amended complaint sets forth that defendant is president of the California Bar Association; that plaintiff is a widow engaged in business as a publicity agent, and, prior to the facts therein alleged, had built up a lucrative business as such publicity agent; that on or about October 31, 1927, defendant wrote and published a letter to others as follows:

"Referring to certain letter appearing in a morning paper of this date. Without taking the time to comment upon the entire letter of Mr. McNitt, I desire to correct one or two of the misstatements therein contained. These misstatements were perhaps due to the stress under which Mr. McNitt is apparently laboring in his campaign for election to the Board of Governors of the State Bar. I did not as stated by Mr. McNitt, nor did my office send 'to the metropolitan dailies publicity containing statements which were erroneous'. No publicity whatever was sent out from my office or by me concerning the election, which fact Mr. McNitt could have ascertained by the slightest inquiry.

"I did not ask Mr. McNitt to withdraw although I did consider it my duty as a long time acquaintance and as a member of the State Bar Commission to ask him whether he had considered the fact that as a member of the Board, if elected, it would be his duty to establish standards for admission which might conflict with the policy of the law school with which he is connected, this being a duty which cannot be delegated to a committee. In the course of the conversation, he stated he did not like to be in the position of running against leaders of the Bar, such as Mr. Hunsaker and Mr. James and he thought he would withdraw. Later on he informed me that he had been importuned by his friends to stay in the race.

"As to the principal subject of controversy to which the letters of Judge Hollzer, Miss Bates, Mr. McNitt, and Mr. Hunter, are directed, I think this could have been avoided, had there not been confusion with respect to the fact and date of termination of employment of Miss Bates by the Los Angeles Bar Association. This confusion is apparently cleared up by the publication of these letters. It would probably serve no useful purpose to recite the circumstances leading to the request for Miss Bates' resignation which in pursuance to such request, was received and accepted by the Board of Trustees on or about July 7, 1927. The confusion, however, is easily understood in view of the fact that Miss Bates without permission or consent continued to use Bar Association stationery and failed to notify the metropolitan papers of her change of status and in using her articles it was assumed that she still represented the bar association. In fact, not only Judge Hollzer, but a number of other judges and lawyers who signed certain petitions and letters at the request of Miss Bates have stated that they would not have done so had they known she was not employed by the Bar Association and had they known that certain other candidates were in the field. October 13, 1927. Kemper Campbell."

That by said article defendant intended it to be understood, and the article was understood by the readers of said publication to mean that plaintiff was discharged by the board of trustees of the Los Angeles Bar Association for the reason that she was not a fit person to occupy such position; that she appropriated to her own use, and used property of the Los Angeles Bar Association, and that she induced divers persons to sign petitions by the use of false pretenses; that it is not true that plaintiff was discharged by the board of trustees or at all; that it is not true that the resignation of plaintiff was requested by the board of trustees of the Los Angeles Bar Association; and it is not true that plaintiff appropriated to her own use and used property of the Los Angeles Bar Association, and it is not true that she induced divers persons to sign petitions by the use of false pretenses; that at all times, and at the time of writing said article, defendant well knew that said statements were false, defamatory, and untrue; that said article was false, libelous, defamatory, untrue, and unprivileged, and was written and published maliciously and with the evil intent to injure and defame plaintiff and destroy the business of plaintiff, and to prevent plaintiff from earning a livelihood for herself and her minor children; that said false and defamatory article greatly injured the reputation of plaintiff in the city of Los Angeles and the county of Los Angeles, and has exposed her to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, and obloquy and injured her in her said profession; that by reason of the premises plaintiff has been damaged, etc.

[1] Libel is defined by the Civil Code, § 45, as being "a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." "This definition is very broad," as was said by the Supreme Court in the case of Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 P. 290, 291, "and includes almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation either generally or with respect to his occupation." To the same effect are the later decisions of the Supreme Court. Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 214 P. 968; Layne v. Kirby, 208 Cal. 694, 284 P. 441; Maher v. Devlin, 203 Cal. 270, 263 P. 812, 815. Where there is a statutory definition, language which is fairly included in such definition is libel per se. Schomberg v. Walker, supra; Stevens v. Snow, supra.

[2] Is the language used in the publication fairly included in this definition of libel? The publication, after stating that it would serve no useful purpose to recite the circumstances leading to the request for plaintiff's resignation, then proceeded to charge that plaintiff, without the permission or consent of the association, continued to use its stationery, that she failed to notify the metropolitan papers of her change of status, and in using her articles it was assumed that she still represented the association, that she secured the signature of Judge Hollzer and other judges and lawyers to petitions and letters which they would not have signed had they known that she was no longer in the employment of the association.

In effect, this publication charges plaintiff with sequestrating stationery of the association, and by means thereof, and by concealing the fact that she was no longer in the employment of the association, she induced the metropolitan papers to publish articles and Judge Hollzer and other judges and lawyers to sign letters and petitions under the belief that she was still in the employment of the association, and which they would not have done had they known the truth.

We are of the opinion that, taking the publication as a whole, the average person of intelligence reading it could not avoid the conclusion that it imputed to plaintiff crooked work, dishonest practices, and fraudulent and reprehensible conduct, calculated to bring her into general contempt and which would have a tendency to injure her reputation and to injure her with respect to her occupation, and, therefore, the complaint states a cause of action without the necessity of an averment of special damage.

"It has never been the law that a publication, to be libelous, must accuse a person of having committed a crime or otherwise violated some law." Maher v. Devlin, supra.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, granting defendant a reasonable time to answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leonard Wilson, Judge.

Action by Bertha Strasburger against Robert L. Prescott and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Charles S. Conner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action to recover for personal injuries. The respondents have filed no brief. According to the evidence presented by the appellant in her brief she was standing on the sidewalk at the northeasterly corner of Sixth and Alvarado streets in Los Angeles at about 12 o'clock noon on June 12, 1927. The intersection is provided with signals. She waited for the traffic going north and south on Alvarado street until she heard the first bell, when she started to cross Alvarado street. She had taken two or three steps, when the automobile driven by the respondent Elaine L. Schuck attempted to turn to the right from Sixth street into Alvarado street, ran into her from the rear, and struck her down. There is evidence to indicate that the respondent Schuck was confused in the signals. According to the testimony of appellant, the former said that she thought she could make it before the second bell rang. There was testimony to the effect that respondent Schuck for some time prior to June 12 had been living with her sister and brother-in-law, the other respondents; that the automobile belonged to her sister, Marie Prescott, who on the day of the accident was in San Francisco, but who had let respondent Schuck have the key to the car; that she asked her brother-in-law about using the car, but he said "no." She took it anyway. Miss Schuck also testified that all three of them operated the same car.

[1-4] The judgment must be reversed. In the absence of proof of the ordinance relating to the signals established at the intersection, we must consider the case simply as one where the automobile overtook and ran down the appellant from the rear. The rules of law applicable in such a case are: First, the pedestrian "is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, because of a failure to look behind him and discover an approaching car which may heedlessly run him down" (Burk v. Extrafine Bread Bakery, 208 Cal. 105, 280 P. 522, 524, and cases cited); second, the operator of an automobile is bound to anticipate that he may meet persons on the street and he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, "keep a proper lookout for them and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person using proper care and caution, and if the situation requires he must slow up and stop" (Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125, 127; Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066); third, the driver of a motor vehicle must before turning see that such movement can be made in safety, and, if it cannot be made in safety, must wait until it can be so made (California Vehicle Act, § 130, Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, p. 1891, Act 5128). Applying these rules to the instant cause, it is patent that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the respondent Schuck that the court should under proper instructions have left the cause to the jury, at least so far as the respondent Schuck is concerned.

[5] Concerning the respondent Marie Prescott, who it was testified was the owner of the automobile, the law is established that an inference of agency arises between the owner of a motor vehicle and the driver from the fact of ownership, and is sufficient to make out a prima facie case. Perry v. Paladini, 89 Cal. App. 275, 264 P. 580; Hathaway v. Mathews, 85 Cal. App. 31, 258 P. 712. The nonsuit was therefore improperly granted as to the respondent Marie Prescott.

[6, 7] However, the husband is not liable for the torts of his wife, and there was no evidence to establish an agency between him and his sister-in-law. In fact, the only evidence upon this phase of the question was to the effect that he told her she could not take the car. The motion was properly granted as to him.

Judgment affirmed as to respondent Robert L. Prescott and reversed as to respondents Elaine L. Schuck and Marie Prescott.

Action by R. J. Kennedy and another, copartners, doing business under the fictitious name and style of the Wilshire Plumbing Company, against the National Surety Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals.

Bailie, Turner & Lake and Allen T. Lynch, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John J. Craig, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the defendant National Surety Company from a judgment for $4,117.09 in favor of plaintiffs and against all defendants.

The action was brought by R. J. Kennedy and J. F. Alexander, partners under the fictitious firm name of Wilshire Plumbing Company, to recover a balance due them for labor and material furnished by them under a subcontract to Whiting, Boynton & Potts, appellant's codefendants in the case, who had the contract for the erection of an apartment building on a lot owned by one Gussie Starling. Subsequent to the making of the general contract the contractors applied to the National Surety Company for a labor and material bond under section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and were advised by the representative of such company that because of the insufficient financing of the project the company could not write a bond unless they had a release or waiver to cover the difference between the cost of the building and the amount of the first mortgage thereon. The general contractors secured a waiver from plaintiffs in the following language:

"January 7, 1926.

"To: National Surety Company, Guaranty Mortgage Company.

"Gentlemen: I (we) hereby agree to furnish building materials and supplies to the value of $10,000.00 to Whiting, Boynton & Potts, as contractor, and Miss Gussie Starling as owner, for use in the construction of a building on lot 24, of Foreman's Subdivision of the west 20 acres of lot 8, block 36, Hancock's Survey, as described in book 21, page 20, miscl. records of Los Angeles county, and do hereby waive my (our) right of lien in respect thereof against the property above described and also my (our) rights against the National Surety Co. as sureties for the above described building.

"Wilshire Plumbing Company
"By R. J. Kennedy."

Such waiver was delivered to the surety company, and thereafter, on the 8th day of January, 1926, the latter executed the bond upon which suit was brought, and judgment entered against them. The trial court found that respondents executed the waiver above set forth, that it was not signed as part consideration for the subcontract of respondents but was signed after such subcontract had been executed, and that there was no consideration for it. No finding was made by the court on the second separate defense of defendants' first amended answer, which pleads the waiver as an estoppel; and as to the third defense, which alleges in substance that the claim of plaintiffs was waived, the court found adversely.

[1] There does not seem to be any conflict in the evidence except as hereinafter noted. Mr. Kennedy of the respondent firm admitted signing the waiver, and testified that when his company was awarded the subcontract the general contractor stated to him that in order to bond the job it would be necessary for them to furnish certain releases to the bonding company, and that that is why the waiver was given. Mr. Marcy of the surety company testified that he told Mr. Kennedy that he would have to have a certain amount of releases or he could not execute the bond, and that after receiving the waiver he "verified this over the telephone with Mr. Kennedy that he had signed it" and then issued the bond; that he had two conversations with Mr. Kennedy, the first on the day before the bond was executed and the second on the day of its execution. Mr. Boynton of the firm of general contractors testified that before the subcontract was let to respondents he told Mr. Kennedy that for the job to go ahead it was "necessary to obtain certain releases against the building company," and that, if he was to receive the subcontract, "it would be necessary that we have a release from him, in the amount we then agreed upon as $10,000." We find nothing in the evidence conflicting with the foregoing, except the following question and answer relative to the waiver: "Q. By Mr. Craig: Did you get any consideration at all for this, Mr. Kennedy? A. No, sir." Such a statement, in the face of the detailed statement, not only of Mr. Kennedy, but of the other witness, could be nothing except a bare conclusion and could not create a conflict in the evidence. Under the evidence, then, it clearly appears that, not only was the awarding of the subcontract conditioned on the giving of the waiver, but that the entire job depended on the execution of the bond, which was refused unless and until such waiver was obtained.

[2] It also clearly appears without conflict that the bond was executed in reliance upon the waiver, and it was the thing that induced appellant to execute the bond. There would seem to be no question but that respondents could waive the rights that would otherwise pertain to them under the bond. Fraters Glass & Paint Co. v. Southwestern Construction Co., 200 Cal. 688, 254 P. 1097. It is true that in the case cited the right to a lien against the property on which the building was constructed was waived, but on principle we see no difference between such a waiver and the one given here.

[3] The defense of estoppel set up in appellant's second and separate defense raised a material issue upon which the trial court should have made a finding. Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 81, 218 P. 756, 51 A. L. R. 1074.

[4] Inasmuch as a jury was expressly waived in this case and as it is inconceivable that there could be any change in the evidence presented on a new trial, the evidence being so clearly and indisputably in favor of appellant, we feel compelled in the interest of justice to make findings on the evidence before us contrary and in addition to those of the trial court. Section 956a, Code Civ. Proc.; Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 507, 261 P. 994.

Contrary to finding II of the trial court, we find that all of the allegations of the defendant National Surety Company's third separate and further defense, as set forth in its first amended answer, are true. Contrary to finding IV of the trial court we find that the release, or waiver, mentioned and described therein was executed prior to and as part consideration for the execution of the plumbing contract set out and described in paragraph V of plaintiffs' complaint, as part consideration for the awarding of said contract to plaintiff by defendants Whiting, Boynton & Potts and as part consideration for the giving by the defendant National Surety Company of the bond described in plaintiffs' complaint, and that there was a sufficient consideration for the execution thereof. And in addition to the foregoing contrary findings we further find that all of the allegations contained in defendant National Surety Company's second separate and further defense are true.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court directed to enter a judgment in accordance herewith.

BROWNING v. BROWNING.

Civ. 7290.

Where court, after granting divorce, allowed retrial on other issues, and different judge rendered substantially identical judgment, no harm resulted, although divorce issue was also retried.

It appeared that child was not in good health, and that trial court, by judgment in question, desired to prevent either party, so far as practicable, from doing anything injurious to child's well-being, and to that end authorized physician to supervise child's welfare and "to prescribe when and when not the child is in physical condition to change custody," and when father should be permitted to visit child during sickness.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J.

Originally, the action upon which this appeal is predicated was brought by the appellant herein for a divorce from the respondent. Incidental thereto were the major questions which are involved in this appeal and which relate to the validity of each of two provisions contained in the judgment, which respectively affect the custody of the minor child of the parties to the litigation and the approval by the trial court of a property settlement entered into between such parties prior to the institution of the action.

[1] In effect, the issues presented by the pleadings were twice tried. By the terms of the judgment rendered on the first trial plaintiff was granted a divorce from defendant; the custody of the minor child was provided for; and the property settlement theretofore entered into between the parties was approved. On motion of plaintiff, limited to the issues which related to the mentioned last two provisions of the judgment, a new trial was ordered generally. On retrial before a different judge, findings of fact were made and judgment rendered substantially identical with the findings made and judgment renered on the first trial, from which it would follow that, even assuming that on the second trial the only issues triable were those which related to the custody of the minor child of the parties and the fairness of the property settlement theretofore entered into between them, the plaintiff suffered no injury from the fact that on the second trial the case was tried as to all issues originally involved in the action.

That part of the order of the trial court with reference to the custody and care of the minor child of the parties to the action which is the subject of objection by appellant was as follows:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that until further order of this court, the plaintiff shall have the custody of Thurlough Browning, the minor child of the parties hereto, with the following exceptions, to-wit: (Then follow particular directions as to when and under what circumstances the father of the child should be accorded the privilege of visiting the child, or of having its temporary custody.)

"Donald Fricke, M. D., physician and child specialist, is hereby appointed to supervise and take care of the physical wellbeing and welfare of said child, and to recommend and prescribe the treatment to be given said child, and to prescribe the treatment and care to be given said child as to diet, hours of sleep, periods of rest, exercise, recreation, work, and all other activities bearing upon said child's physical condition, and to prescribe when and when not the child shall remain in the house or in bed, and to prescribe when and when not the child is in physical condition to change custody, and to prescribe when and when not the defendant should be permitted to visit said child when said child is sick.

"Dr. George H. Kress, oculist, is hereby appointed to prescribe and give treatments for said child's eyes.

"The child specialist and the oculist so appointed shall serve until further order of this court. * * *"

The particular criticism of appellant of such order is that, although it provides that the custody of the minor child shall be in the mother, the care of such child is placed in a third person—a physician. With reference thereto, the evidence adduced on the trial showed that the child was not in the enjoyment of good health. From a reading of the order of which complaint is made it becomes apparent that, as far as was practicable, the intention of the trial court was to insure the welfare of the child, and to that end, to prevent either of the parties to the divorce action from doing anything which would or might materially injure the health and well-being of the child. Except on stated occasions and at fixed periods, when the father was permitted its temporary custody, the permanent custody of the child was awarded to the mother. The only limitation on such arrangement related solely to medical care and treatment of the child, which was to be under the recommendation of a physician—with the additional proviso that he should "prescribe when and when not the child is in physical condition to change custody, and to prescribe when and when not the defendant should be permitted to visit said child when said child is sick."

[2, 3] It will be noted that no right of custody of the child is given to the physician. His authority in the premises is limited to prescribing, recommending, and advising with reference to the physical care and treatment which the child should receive. The decisions emanating from the appellate tribunals of this state are unanimous in the declaration of the law that in divorce actions, in dealing with the welfare of the children of the parties thereto, a very expansive discretion is conferred upon the trial court. Simmons v. Simmons, 22 Cal. App. 448, 134 P. 791; Black v. Black, 149 Cal. 224, 86 P. 505; Jones v. Jones, 49 Cal. App. 165, 192 P. 867; Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 352, 173 P. 582. Nor in the order to which reference has been had is this court able to perceive any violation by the trial court of the power conferred upon it by the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code.

In effect, the findings and judgment of the trial court are that, from a legal standpoint, the settlement agreement between the parties to the action was fair, just, and equitable. In connection therewith, appellant complains that each of several specified findings of fact made by the trial court does not find support in the evidence. A statement herein of each of such findings, together with a résumé of the evidence applicable thereto, would require no inconsiderable industry on the part of this court, which in the end would be of no material benefit either to the parties directly interested or to any other person. Therefore it is deemed sufficient to state that, after an examination of the record herein, this court is of the opinion that, with one exception, as to each of such criticized findings the direct evidence relating thereto fairly justified the conclusions on matters of fact as announced by the trial court. As to the one finding not properly within such inclusion, and which related to the ownership by plaintiff of 500 shares of Seaboard National Bank stock, it appears that, although the direct evidence adduced on the trial did not support such finding, nevertheless the inferences deducible from the entire evidence in the case were such that the trial judge was warranted in finding the issue in accordance with such inferences, rather than with the direct evidence received in relation thereto. But, in any event, whether the disputed facts were found either the one way or the other, it is clear that, considering the other findings made by the trial court, the questioned finding was not controlling in the premises.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment be, and it is, affirmed.

1. Joint adventures ⚿5(2).

Evidence supported findings that defendant was liable to plaintiff for one-half profits obtained in negotiating options on oil lands, under joint enterprise agreement.

The evidence disclosed that the plaintiff and defendant were working under a joint enterprise agreement whereby plaintiff was to obtain options on oil-bearing land, and defendant was to negotiate the options, the profits to be split between them, that plaintiff obtained options which defendant negotiated, and that defendant refused to account for the profits.

Action by F. L. Beverley against F. C. Noel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

YORK, J.

Action for an accounting. The complaint alleged that the parties engaged in a partnership in September, 1920, whereby the plaintiff was to obtain options on oil-bearing lands, and the defendant was to negotiate the same, the profits realized therefrom to be divided equally between the parties. The answer denied these allegations, but admitted payment to respondent of certain sums of money for services rendered. The court found that the relation established was that of a joint enterprise, rather than a partnership, and this conclusion is not now a subject of dispute.

At the trial there was a sharp conflict in the testimony as to what was the agreement between the parties. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff to the effect that the parties had engaged in a joint enterprise; that a profit was made; that there had been an accounting as to all business transacted between them, with the exception of four options—those known as the Carter, Harvey, Ralph, and Wagner options and leases. As to these transactions, a reference was ordered, the court reserving to itself, for settlement and determination, the propriety of all expenditures made in connection therewith. After the report of the referee had been made and approved, the court made its findings in favor of the plaintiff as to these four matters, setting forth the amount of gross profits derived therefrom, and the expenses properly deducible. Neither the referee's report nor the evidence taken by him can be found in the transcript.

From the judgment entered pursuant thereto, the defendant appeals, and makes the following specifications of error:

(1) That portion of finding of fact No. V, to the effect that the Mrs. Wagner option, which was executed on November 14, 1921, was negotiated by appellant, that the respondent was entitled to a division of the net profits, and that the net profits amounted to $1,180, is contrary to the evidence.

(2) Finding of fact No. VII, to the effect that on June 23, 1923, appellant was indebted to respondent in the amount of $2,531.60 as one-half of the net profits on the said Carter, Ralph, Harvey, and Wagner options, is contrary to the evidence.

(3) Finding of fact No. VIII, to the effect that the appellant, for the joint benefit of appellant and respondent, made a profit which has been unaccounted for, of $8,793.74, of which $4,396.87, less $1,865.27 paid respondent on account, was due respondent, is contrary to the evidence.

Appellant admits that there is no controversy at all as to the fact that the Carter, Harvey, and Ralph leases came directly through the plaintiff, Beverley, but contends that the Wagner option was an "entirely new matter."

Appellant also admits that certain of the findings of fact (Nos. III, IV, and V) correctly state the gross commissions received by him for negotiating the various leases in controversy, but maintains that the court overlooked certain items of commission paid out by him to third parties in negotiating the said leases, and which, if taken into consideration, would disclose an overpayment to respondent rather than an underpayment. Appellant in this connection contends that there is no evidence in the record that, even by implication, contradicts or questions his testimony as to the payment of these commissions.

[1] An examination of the record convinces us that there was sufficient evidence before the court to sustain each finding made. With reference to the Wagner lease, Mrs. Wagner testified that her option was obtained from her by plaintiff, and that she never had any dealings with any of the third parties mentioned, or with any one other than said plaintiff until defendant presented to her the lease which she executed.

[2] It is true that the defendant, while on the witness stand, testified as to various amounts paid out by him to third parties, but there is nothing in the bill of exceptions or record to show that these expenditures were either reasonable or necessary to the consummation of the four leases in controversy. The testimony of defendant discloses that these third parties took little or no part in the matter of negotiating the options or in securing the leases. For instance, defendant testified that he paid one Mr. Shell the sum of $1,226.45 for introducing him to Mr. Harvey and to a Mr. Bromley of the Barnsdale-Foster Company, an oil concern which leased one of the properties here involved. We do not know whether the evidence before the referee showed that these expenditures were necessary or unnecessary. The "report ad interim" of the referee, which we obtained from the Superior Court upon order, is incomplete, and we can find in it no statement of any such evidence, or any final report of the referee. In fact, the statement in the bill of exceptions is not the usual one as to the bill containing all of the evidence, or all of the evidence relating to the matters included in the appeal, but is in the following phraseology: "The foregoing bill of exceptions contains all the evidence offered or taken and all exceptions and proceedings taken at the trial of said action, upon which defendant relies."

The case of Fischer v. Martin, a New Jersey case decided in 1929, reported in (Err. & App.) 147 A. at page 492, involves an arrangement similar to the one involved in the case at bar. There the defendant claimed allowance as a proper expenditure against the joint enterprise the sum of $2,000 paid out by him to a third party for services rendered in connection with the transaction. It was there held that, while payments reasonably necessary made by either of the parties should be properly deducted from the total balance of the commissions and the balance divided equally, nevertheless, in the absence of proof that the payment made was requisite and necessary in order to bring about a successful closing of the transaction, such expenditure could not be allowed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 6322.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 23, 1931.

1. Sales 🔑477(1).

Conditional seller, by failing to rescind contract for buyer's alleged fraud, ratified contract and was required to seek remedy under terms thereof.

2. Sales 🔑479(2).

Conditional seller must have reasonable ground for retaking property under contract provision authorizing repossession if seller deems buyer's financial condition such as to endanger security.

3. Sales 🔑479(2).

Where there has been no change in financial condition of conditional buyer between date of contract and date of repossession by seller, such repossession is unlawful.

4. Sales 🔑479(2).

Facts held not to show that conditional buyer had abused automobile so as to justify seller's repossession.

> The facts disclosed that the automobile was in good running order up to and including the day preceding the one on which the seller seized the automobile, and that an automobile spring had been broken only the preceding night.

5. Sales 🔑479(2).

Conditional seller's repossession of automobile held not justified under facts and terms of contract.

> Under the terms of the conditional sales contract, the seller had the right to repossess the automobile if he deemed the financial condition of the buyer such as to endanger his security, or if the buyer misused the automobile or defaulted in payments. The facts disclosed that there was no change in the buyer's financial status between the day the sale was made and the day on which the automobile was seized; that the buyer had not misused the automobile; and that buyer's alleged misrepresentation regarding the amount of his indebtedness had not tended to lessen or endanger the seller's security.

$545.50 damages for conversion of automobile held justified by evidence.

> The evidence disclosed that the conditional seller had repossessed automobile without proper cause; that at the time the automobile was wrongfully repossessed, it was worth between $850 and $900; and that at such time there was due the seller from the buyer the sum of $304.50.

Action by Rene H. Rochon against the Pacific Coast Mortgage Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant in the sum of $545.50, as damages for the conversion of an automobile.

The trial court found that on November 25, 1927, the defendant loaned plaintiff the sum of $304.50, taking title to the latter's automobile as security, giving back to him a sales contract, whereby the defendant sold said automobile to him for the sum of $417.36, payable in twelve equal monthly installments beginning December 29, 1927, and that on December 17, 1927, the defendant repossessed said automobile and refused to return the same to the plaintiff unless he paid to it the full amount owing upon said contract.

The defendant does not dispute the correctness of any of the foregoing findings.

In addition, the lower court found that no condition existed which gave the defendant the right to repossess said automobile and also that plaintiff had performed all of the covenants on his part to be performed, and had not breached any of the terms or conditions of said agreement nor committed any act justifying such repossession, and that he had been damaged by defendant's act in the sum of $545.50. As a conclusion of law, the court held that the defendant's act was wrongful and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment in said amount.

The defendant challenges the findings and conclusion of law mentioned in the preceding paragraph, and contends that said findings are not supported by the evidence, also that said conclusion of law is erroneous, and that the damages allowed to the plaintiff are excessive.

That the defendant took the plaintiff's automobile prior to the maturity of any installment payable under the contract and also disposed of said car is not disputed.

The defendant, however, seeks to justify its action in repossessing said automobile and disposing of the same, under two certain paragraphs of said contract.

One of these—omitting all portions not relevant to the present case—provides that should the seller (defendant) deem the financial condition of the purchaser (plaintiff) such as to endanger the rights or security of seller under said contract, or should said purchaser misuse or abuse the car, then the seller shall have the right to declare immediately due and payable the entire amount of principal and interest.

The other clause under consideration provides that if the purchaser shall be in default or fail to perform any of the conditions or covenants of the agreement, or misuse or abuse the car, then in any such case, the seller shall immediately have the right, without notice to the purchaser, to take possession of such car and proceed to sell the same.

Relying upon the foregoing provisions, defendant contends that after making said loan, it discovered that plaintiff had misrepresented his financial status in his application for the loan, in that by said application he had informed the defendant that he did not owe any past due debts, whereas, at the time of making said representation, he owed various debts totaling approximately $268, all of which were then past due.

Accordingly, it is urged that, upon discovering the existence of such indebtedness, the defendant concluded that the same endangered its rights and security under the contract, and thereupon declared the entire amount payable thereunder to be immediately due, took possession of said car and sold the same.

At the trial plaintiff admitted that he signed a written application for said loan, wherein he stated that he did not then owe any past due debts, and also admitted that he was in fact indebted at that time in the amount of $268, all of which was past due. On the other hand, plaintiff further testified that, at the time of making said application, he was interrogated on the question of his indebtedness by a representative of the defendant, on which occasion, he informed said representative that he owed a couple of hundred dollars, to which the defendant's agent responded, in substance, that everybody owed that amount.

[1] Assuming, however, for the purposes of this appeal, that the plaintiff had been guilty of the misrepresentation charged against him, such alleged fraud would only have entitled the defendant either to rescind the transaction or to affirm the contract. Having failed to rescind, the defendant must be deemed to have ratified the contract, and must seek for its remedy under the terms thereof.

It is conceded that the plaintiff had not failed to pay an installment owing under the contract. It is likewise undisputed that there had been no change in the plaintiff's financial status between the time he applied for the loan and the date on which the defendant seized his car.

Likewise, there is nothing in the record to show that plaintiff's alleged misrepresentation tended to lessen or endanger, or could have lessened or endangered, the defendant's rights or security under the contract.

We conclude, therefore, that nothing had occurred which, under the terms of the contract, justified the seizure of the car.

Hence, unless the plaintiff had violated some other covenant of the agreement, the act of defendant in repossessing the automobile and in refusing to return the same, except upon the condition that plaintiff pay the full amount owing under the contract, was arbitrary and unjustifiable, and constituted a conversion of the car.

[2, 3] The seller of property under a conditional sales contract, which authorizes the latter to repossess the property if he deems the financial condition of the purchaser such as to endanger the rights or security of the seller under the contract, may not act arbitrarily, but must have reasonable ground for retaking the property. In such case, where there has been no change in the financial condition of the purchaser between the date of making the contract and the time when the property is retaken, such repossession is arbitrary and unlawful.

[4, 5] Defendant makes the further contention that plaintiff had abused the car, in that at the time it undertook to repossess the same, the defendant found that a spring was broken, the battery was run down, and that the car was without gas and oil. Because of such condition of the car, it is argued that the seizure thereof was justified under the terms of the contract.

There is no merit in this point. Perhaps a sufficient answer to this contention would be to call attention to the fact that, at the time defendant repossessed the car, no such reason was assigned for taking the same. In addition, it should be noted that the plaintiff testified that the car was in good running order up to and including the day preceding the one on which the defendant seized it, and that the spring referred to had been broken only the preceding night.

It follows, therefore, that the trial court was warranted in finding that no condition existed which gave the defendant the right to repossess said automobile, and that plaintiff had not breached any of the terms of the contract, nor committed any act justifying the defendant repossessing the car.

[6] Upon the question of damages, it is sufficient to point out that the plaintiff testified that said automobile, at the time it was seized by the defendant, was worth between $850 and $900. Taking the minimum figure as the value of the car, and deducting therefrom the amount of the loan, to wit, $304.50, would leave $545.50 as the net worth of the car, and hence the damage to the plaintiff. This coincides with the sum which the lower court fixed as the amount of plaintiff's damage.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. G. CAVAGLIERI MORTGAGE CO.

Civ. 4234.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 16, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1931.

1. Usury 🔑137.

In determining whether transaction constitutes usurious loan, justifying statutory penalty, court will consider substance rather than form (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3757, § 3).

> Under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3757, § 3, borrower, who, in return for loan, has paid or delivered usurious amount or value, may recover three times amount paid as usurious interest or profit.

2. Usury 🔑142(1).

Submitting to jury question of usurious intent, which clearly appears from undisputed evidence, is error (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3757, § 3).

3. Usury 🔑137.

Delivery of note, secured by trust deed and subject to discount or bonus, held to constitute usurious loan, rather than purchase of note, within statute imposing penalty (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3757, § 3).

> Evidence showed that lender drew all instruments involved in transaction, and knew that maker of note, desiring to procure loan to finance purchase of land and construction of apartment building, made note payable to contractor, who thereupon assigned note to lender; that contractor agreed to accept less than face value of note, the difference representing a bonus for lender; that money was to be advanced to maker as well as contractor; and that lender's ledgers showed entire transaction was carried in name of maker.

4. Usury 🔑137.

Lender's exaction of bonus, represented by note for amount greater than amount of loan, although usurious, is not "payment" of usurious interest, which under statute, is prerequisite to penalty (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act. 3757, § 3).

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

This action was begun and prosecuted by the plaintiffs to recover as a penalty under the Usury Act three times the amount of interest alleged to have been paid by them to the defendant by reason of the transactions hereinafter referred to. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiffs appeal.

Two questions are presented to us in this action for our consideration: First, was the transaction involved a loan of money or the sale of a promissory note? Second, has there been any payment of usurious interest?

The trial court found that the transaction constituted a sale of a negotiable instrument, and not a loan, and also that no payment had been made.

The following facts are disclosed by the record: On and prior to the 17th day of June, 1925, the Edwin R. Rockwell Company, a corporation, was the owner of a contract for the purchase of certain lots in the city of Los Angeles, upon which there remained an unpaid balance of the purchase price of $20,000. The corporation desired to erect an apartment house upon the premises, and also to raise sufficient money to complete the purchase price of the lots. Tentative plans and specifications for such an apartment house had already been prepared and preliminary arrangements made with Malcolm Smith and the Malcolm Smith Company to construct an apartment house in accordance with the plans and specifications, upon a cost-plus basis. With these facts in view the Edwin R. Rockwell Company, by its president, set about to secure a loan sufficient to enable the company to proceed with the erection of the proposed apartment house. According to the testimony of Edwin R. Rockwell he called upon the defendant in the early part of June, 1925, in relation to procuring a loan. This testimony is disputed by the president of the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company. However, it does appear undisputed that Malcolm Smith called upon the defendant company and had an interview with the president thereof relative to securing a loan of $110,000 to be secured by a first lien upon the property, out of which it would be necessary to pay $20,000 to complete the purchase. It appears that the total expenditure of completing the purchase of the lots upon which the apartment house was to be built, and to complete the erection of the building, would entail an expenditure of about $160,000. After one or two interviews Mr. Cavaglieri agreed to advance the money, but stated, to use his own language, that "he would purchase the note for $110,000 at a discount of $5,000," but that he would not be able to handle the other portion of the loan. Thereupon it was arranged that the Cavaglieri Company should prepare the notes and the trust deeds, the note being executed by the Rockwell Company to Malcolm Smith, and by Malcolm Smith assigned to the defendant. In pursuance of this arrangement a note in the principal sum of $110,000 from the Rockwell Company to Malcolm Smith was prepared and a trust deed securing the payment thereof drawn to be executed by the Rockwell Company. Also, notes and a second trust deed covering the remainder of the money were drawn in the office of the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company. Only the $110,000 note is involved in this action. Following the drafting of these instruments the Rockwell Company executed the $110,000 note in favor of Malcolm Smith, and a trust deed to secure the same. The note and trust deed were dated June 17, 1925, and thereafter assigned by Malcolm Smith and his wife to the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company. No money was advanced, however, by the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company until the plans and specifications for the erection of the proposed apartment house were submitted to the Cavaglieri Company and approved by the company.

As a part of the same transaction, and bearing the same date, the following agreement was entered into relative to the payments to be made by the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company to the appellants in this action. This instrument, so far as necessary to be set forth, reads as follows:

"This agreement made this 17th day of June, 1925, by and between G. Cavaglieri Mortgage Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the party of the first part, and Malcolm Smith, hereinafter referred to as the party of the second part:

"Witnesseth: That the party of the first part undertakes to loan to the party of the second part the sum of One Hundred Five Thousand no/100 ($105,000.00) Dollars, evidenced by a promissory note in the sum of One Hundred Ten Thousand and no/100 ($110,000.00) Dollars executed by Edwin R. Rockwell Co., a corporation, in favor of Malcolm Smith, dated June 17, 1925, due on or before six (6) months after date, with interest at eight (8) per cent per annum, payable at maturity, and at the rate of one (1) per cent per month thereafter until paid, secured by a trust deed which shall be a first lien upon the property hereinafter described." (Then follows a description of lots 4 and 5 in tract No. 5542, city of Los Angeles, etc.)

The agreement then provides for disbursing the sum of $105,000 in installment payments, first, of $20,000; second, of $10,000; third, of $15,000; fourth, of $10,000; fifth, of $25,000; sixth, of $25,000; less accrued interest on note and miscellaneous expenses thirty-five days after notice of completion of the building has been filed, etc. Various provisions are then set forth in the contract relative to the rights of the respective parties, and, among others, the following paragraph appears: "The sum of $105,000.00 is payment in full for the assignment of said trust deed to G. Cavaglieri Mortgage Company, a corporation." The agreement further provided that all checks evidencing the installment payments should be made payable jointly to Edwin R. Rockwell Company and Malcolm Smith.

The testimony shows beyond contradiction that the difference between the face of the note for $110,000 and the $105,000 to be advanced was a bonus in the sum of $5,000, as commission or profit for loaning the money, or, as termed by the defendant, "a discount on the purchase price of the note." It is left somewhat uncertain as to whether the agreement which we have just set forth relative to making the instalment payments was executed on the same day that the $110,000 note and trust deed were executed, but the circumstances show that it was all a part of one transaction, and the instruments were all dated as of the same day. There is no dispute that the papers were all drawn in the office of the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company, nor is there any dispute of the fact that no consideration was ever paid or rendered by Malcolm Smith to the Edwin R. Rockwell Company for the execution of the note and mortgage, other than his promise to erect the apartment house. Nor is there any dispute of the fact that the $105,000 to be advanced by the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company was to be applied in the payment of the expenses of completing the apartment house, and that the checks were to be drawn in favor of the Edwin R. Rockwell Company as well as in favor of Malcolm Smith.

The testimony of G. Cavaglieri shows that he knew that no consideration for the execution of the note and mortgage had passed from the Edwin R. Rockwell Company to Malcolm Smith, other than his agreement to erect the apartment house according to the plans and specifications approved by the Cavaglieri Company. The only testimony in the record as to the compensation of Malcolm Smith is to the effect that the apartment house was to be erected upon a "cost-plus" basis. The agreement itself evidences the fact that the first payment of $20,000 was to be applied in clearing the title to the lots. The ledger sheets of the G. Cavaglieri Mortgage Company, introduced in evidence, shows that the entire transaction, relative to advancing the money and the amounts paid, was carried in the name of Edwin R. Rockwell. The name of Malcolm Smith does not appear thereon.

[1] We do not need to cite authorities in support of the statement that the court will look at the transaction and consider its substance rather than its form. In this particular many authorities have been cited by counsel relative to accommodation notes, and the right to sell negotiable paper. In 39 Cyc. page 931, we find the rule relative to sale of negotiable paper, which is supported by practically all of the authorities, to wit: "After a negotiable instrument has once been validly negotiated by a transfer upon valuable consideration, it becomes an article of commerce and can be bought and sold as freely as any other property, the rate of discount being governed by the market value of each instrument. Such transactions are not within the letter or spirit of the usury laws." And on page 935 of the same volume, the following statement, which is likewise supported by the vast weight of authority: "But when the chose discounted is obtained directly from the maker or before it has acquired validity by a transfer for value, it can be nothing more than the maker's promise to pay, and the purchase of such a promise at a discount exceeding the lawful rate of interest is merely making a loan at a usurious rate. The rule applies when the lender takes the note under such circumstances from one known to be the agent of the maker." See, also, 27 R. C. L. 216. See, also, Rice v. Dunlap, 205 Cal. 133, 270 P. 196, as to charging bonus where one is known to be an agent.

The evidence in this case shows conclusively that the Cavaglieri Company knew that Malcolm Smith was acting in behalf of the Rockwell Company to secure a loan; that he was advancing nothing to secure the money; that he had simply agreed, and, so far as the record shows, it appears that it was an oral agreement at that time, to erect an apartment house. The Cavaglieri Company knew that Malcolm Smith, at the time the note and trust deed were transferred, could maintain no action upon either note or trust deed. This is not a case of failure of consideration after a bona fide sale and assignment of a promissory note. In this particular the respondent calls our attention to the case of Flood v. Petry, 165 Cal. 309, 132 P. 256, 258, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861, and quotes therefrom, italicized, as follows: "It has long been the law in California that a failure of consideration in whole or in part after a bona fide assignment of a promissory note is no defense to a suit by the assignee against the maker, notwithstanding the former's full knowledge of the original consideration for which the note was given." Following this is an extended quotation from the opinion in that case. The circumstances are so radically different in the case at bar from the Petry Case that nothing said therein can be considered as controlling here. We have no dispute with the statement that, where a person has acquired a note in good faith for value before maturity, knowing that the consideration was an executory agreement on the part of the payee which might be broken, it constitutes no defense to the note, but here, the Cavaglieri Company is shown by the record to have arranged the entire transaction and drawn all the papers involved, and was not even paying the whole consideration to the payee of the note from whom it claims to be the purchaser.

[2, 3] Again, our attention is called to the language found in 39 Cyc. page 1057, as follows: "When a transaction honest in form is alleged to be a mere cloak to cover usury, the existence of the corrupt usurious intent behind the device is a question for the jury. If, however, a usurious intent clearly appears from undisputed evidence it is error to submit the question of intent to the jury. But if the transaction is apparently honest, and no evidence has been given tending to show an intent to evade the usury law, it is equally erroneous to submit the question of intent to the jury. It is for the jury to determine whether a usurious purpose lurks behind what purports to be a sale of property, or a note legal on its face but given for a larger sum than was actually advanced upon it, or commissions purporting to be paid to the lender or his agent for services rendered or expenses incurred in connection with the loan, or to factors and commission merchants for advances, or a loan of depreciated currency received at par, or an exorbitant charge for exchange upon the sale of a draft." Here, again, the facts disclosed by the record show that the foregoing statement of the law is not controlling here, save and except in so far as it is therein stated: "If a usurious intent clearly appears from undisputed evidence, it is error to submit the question of intent to the jury." There is no dispute in the evidence that the Cavaglieri Company drew all the instruments; knew where the money was going; knew that Malcolm Smith was acting in behalf of Edwin R. Rockwell Company to finance the undertaking; that a portion of the money was going to pay off the balance of the purchasing price of the lots; that the checks were to be drawn in favor of the Rockwell Company as well as in the name of Malcolm Smith; and that the ledger sheets of the Cavaglieri Company show that the whole transaction was carried in the name of Edwin R. Rockwell. Not to call such a transaction a loan is to erase from the statutes all the provisions relative to the exacting of usury and to endorse a transparent scheme to exact a bonus of $5,000 for making the loan in addition to collecting 8 per cent. for the first six months and 1 per cent. interest per month thereafter, and can only be classed as one of the devices to conceal usury, fittingly referred to and characterized in 27 Ruling Case Law, page 211, section 12. The mere fact that G. Cavaglieri called it a "purchase" or "discount" of the note can be given no weight as testimony, in view of the record disclosing that his company drew all the papers, passed upon the plans and specifications, carried the transaction in the name of Rockwell, advanced the money to Rockwell, paid off the purchase price, and knew that the entire transaction was an arrangement or scheme to finance the raising of money to erect an apartment house; that Malcolm Smith had done nothing or given nothing, other than his promise to build the apartment house, which was dependent upon the securing of a loan of money to pay the expenses thereof. It is a case where the name signified nothing. The transaction speaks for itself, and speaks only in one way—the name of Malcolm Smith appears upon the papers only to enable the Cavaglieri Company to obtain a bonus in addition to interest, and thus circumvent the usury law.

[4] The fact, however, that the finding of the court that the transaction was a purchase, and not a loan, has no substantial support in the testimony, does not lead to a reversal. In order that a penalty may be enforced and damages obtained on account of the exaction of usurious interest either as interest or by way of a bonus, it must be made to appear that the usurious interest has actually been paid, or that the bonus, which, taken together with the interest, stamps the transaction as usurious, must be shown to have been paid.

The complaint in this action was filed on the 6th day of July, 1926, at which date nothing had been paid to the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company on account of the principal due on the $110,000 note, nor any part of the $5,000 bonus hereinbefore mentioned. The record does show that on January 13, 1926, there was a debit charge entered against the account carried in the name of Edwin R. Rockwell of $4,400 interest on the trust deed referred to up to and including December 17, 1925. Notwithstanding this entry, however, the record shows advances made by the Cavaglieri Mortgage Company which necessarily cancels this charge. However this may be, and whatever effect may be given to the debit charge of $4,400 as provided for in the contract or agreement for installment payments heretofore set forth, it does not follow therefrom that any usurious money has been collected or was thereby collected by the mortgage company from the plaintiffs in this action. It may also be stated that exhibits, appearing in the record and introduced in evidence, of statements and claims made by the Cavaglieri Company a number of months after the institution of this action, indicate that the defendant intended to collect the full face value of the $110,000 note; and it does also appear in the record by exhibits and testimony admitted, over the objection of the defendant, that some company or concern paid the demands of the mortgage company, but it does not appear that any payments were made by or on behalf of the appellants in this action. The occurrences to which we are referring all took place some months after the beginning of this suit, and are not within the issues made by the pleading, and not tendered by way of a supplemental complaint, or otherwise. We may further state that, while these matters were introduced in evidence over the objection of the defendant, it does not appear that the appellants base any claim thereon. The charge of usury and the demand for treble damages, so far as this action is concerned, is based upon the debit charges found in the account books of the mortgage company. No claim is made that any part of the bonus exacted for the loan had been paid to the mortgage company by any of the appellants.

Under the provisions of section 3 of the act defining "usury" (Act 3757, Deering's General Laws 1923), the interest or bonus or the interest and bonus, if it is necessary to take both together to constitute usury, must have been actually paid. In Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725, it is specifically held as follows (quoting from the syllabus): "A sum deducted from the amount of a loan as commission for granting it is not subject to the provisions of a statute authorizing the borrower to recover double the amount of usurious interest paid, and cannot be regarded as part of the principal of the loan for the purpose of computing the amount due and the overpayments of interest. The penalty prescribed for violation of the usury statute cannot be inflicted as to amounts not paid." In the case at bar the bonus is only a matter of a promise, to wit, as evidenced by the $110,000 note and the agreement to accept as the full amount of the loan $105,000. There is nothing in the record to show that the appellants ever tendered or paid either the $105,000 or the $110,000. In the Haines Case the amount of commissions or bonus was the sum of $1,020 which was deducted from the principal sum of the note when the loan was made. No part of this had been repaid by the borrower. The court included this sum in rendering judgment for treble damages, adding first this bonus to the interest that had been paid. This portion of the judgment of the trial court was reversed.

In Coulter v. Collins, 71 Cal. App. 381, 235 P. 465, the court held as follows (quoting from the syllabus): "Assuming that the exaction of a bonus for a loan (which bonus was added to the amount of the loan in making up the principal amount of a promissory note given by the borrower) was in the nature of an interest demand, in excess of the interest rate allowed by the usury law, nevertheless, in the absence of any payment made by the borrower, the right to treble damages given by the usury law when money is paid or value is delivered in violation of such law did not accrue; and a deed of trust, given as security for said note, did not constitute a 'thing of value' paid or delivered, within the terms and intention of the statute providing for such damages."

In 39 Cyc., page 1034, in dealing with conditions precedent to the right of recovery where usurious interest is involved, the rule is thus stated: "No cause of action to recover back usurious interest accrues until such interest has been paid. However, in order to be entitled to recover back usury paid it is not necessary that the usurious payment shall be made in money; it is sufficient if it is made in property or by the delivery of notes of third persons, accepted as payment. The debt is regarded as paid by the debtor if it is paid by a third person in accordance with an agreement between such third person and the debtor, but the mere charging of interest in a running account or the giving of a new note including usurious interest due, is not such a payment as will allow the debtor to maintain an action and recover usury paid." And as further amplifying the rule relative to maintaining such actions we find the following on page 1091 of the same volume, to wit: "A mere contract to pay usurious interest is not sufficient to ground such an action." In 27 Ruling Case Law, page 275, section 78, the requirement as to payment is thus stated: "Statutory provisions, akin to that in the national banking act, permitting the recovery of the interest paid under a usurious contract or a multiple thereof, require the actual payment of the interest before the liability for the penalty attaches. Moreover, the law will not construe that to be a payment of illegal interest which is not such in fact, in order to subject the lender to the penalty denounced for the illegal receiving of interest, when he is guilty of an illegal bargain only, and has subjected himself only to the forfeiture imposed by law for that violation. Thus it has been held that the requirement of actual payment is not satisfied by the circumstance that when the evidence of the debt was executed and the loan made a usurious discount was reserved. A reservation of that character constitutes a charging but cannot be called a payment."

In the case of McCarthy v. First National Bank of Rapid City, 23 S. D. 269, 121 N. W. 853, 855, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 437, a large number of cases are cited supporting the following statement: "The courts also uniformly hold that the including of interest in a renewal note is not a payment of such interest so as to entitle maker to sue for the penalty provided for payment. Neither is the deduction of a discount from the amount of the note, taken at the time of giving the note, a payment of such discount so as to authorize a suit for the penalty providing the amount of the discount is usurious." (Here follows a long list of citations.) The court then says: "These cases are based upon the theory that the mere reserving of a discount or the including of accrued usurious interest in a renewal note, while it may be the 'reserving or charging' of usury, it is not the 'paying' of same." To the same effect is the case of Citizens' National Bank of Danville v. Froman's Assignee, 111 Ky. 206, 63 S. W. 454, 757, 56 L. R. A. 673, which case is fully annotated, where it is held as follows (quoting from the syllabus): "The deducting of interest at an unlawful rate, by a national bank, from the amount placed to the credit of one for whom a note is discounted, is not a payment of unlawful interest which will sustain an action to recover double its amount."

While the charging of a bonus or the giving of a note for an amount greater than the principal sum loaned may subject the lender to a loss of interest in an action brought to enforce the collection of the note, it does not amount to a payment of usury interest sufficient to uphold a judgment for a penalty. Thus, in this case, if the difference between the face of the note and the amount of the money agreed to be loaned, as shown by the agreement set forth herein, cannot be included in ascertaining and fixing usurious interest paid, it does not matter what the legal effect of the bookkeeping entry relative to the $4,400 interest charge may be held to be. There is no showing of the payment of usurious interest sufficient to support a judgment for the collection of the penalties specified in the usury law; $4,400 as interest for six months was not usurious.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Housing Corporation against J. A. Crowley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

W. O. Wanzer, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Mark F. Jones, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The complaint contains two counts, the first of which alleges, in substance, that between December 30, 1924, and February 16, 1926, the plaintiff loaned and advanced to defendant on open book account the sum of $6,886.81 upon his promise to pay the same to plaintiff, then, after setting out an itemized statement of the dates and amounts so advanced and loaned, it is alleged that no part of said sum so loaned and advanced had been repaid plaintiff, although the same is long past due.

The second count sets forth an account stated between plaintiff and defendant for the money claimed to have been loaned and advanced as alleged in the first count.

The defendant answered the first count by denying that between December 30, 1924, and February 16, 1926, upon his promise to repay the same, plaintiff loaned and advanced on open book account to defendant the sum of $6,886.81, or any other sum, as alleged in the complaint and denied that said sum, or any other sum, was long past due, and denied each of the allegations contained in the second count of the complaint.

The case was set for trial November 3, 1927, but was continued from time to time until February 16, 1928, at which time the court proceeded with the trial and thereupon the defendant moved the court to permit him to file an amended answer. The motion was denied, and, the plaintiff having produced evidence in support of the matters set forth in the complaint, the court refused to hear any evidence offered by defendant and rendered judgment for plaintiff. This appeal was brought up on the judgment roll alone.

[1, 2] The denial in the answer that between December 30, 1924, and February 16, 1926, upon his promise to repay same, plaintiff loaned and advanced to defendant the sum named in the complaint, or any other sum, as alleged in the complaint, constitutes a negative pregnant and is an admission that plaintiff did loan to defendant said sum.

Denial that the act was done on the day named admits that the act was done. Bates, Pleading, Practice & Forms, 340; Motor Investment Co. v. Breslauer, 64 Cal. App. 230, 221 P. 700. And the denial that the sum named in the complaint is long past due does not negative the allegation of the complaint that it is due.

[3-6] The refusal of the court to allow the defendant to amend his answer cannot be considered upon his appeal from the judgment where the request therefor and the ruling of the court thereon are not incorporated in a bill of exceptions or other appropriate method. 2 Cal. Jur. 521; Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 P. 113. When an appeal is to be determined upon the judgment roll alone, all intendments will be made in support of the judgment and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to be regularly taken. If the error relied on to destroy such presumption consists in matters dehors the record, such matters must be brought to this court by bill of exceptions or other appropriate method. Caruthers v. Hensley, 90 Cal. 559, 27 P. 411.

We find no error of the trial court in the record before us, and the judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 7177.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 16, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 16, 1931.

Automobiles ⚷242(2).

Where injury to automobile guest arose through collision between approaching automobiles, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Benjamin Edwards and wife against C. M. Gullick and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Leo J. McEnerney, of San Francisco, and Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, for appellant Gullick.

Bohnett, Hill & Campbell and L. H. Schellbach, all of San Jose, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Action for personal injuries.

Plaintiff Huldah T. Edwards was riding as a guest of defendant C. M. Gullick in Gullick's automobile when a collision occurred and she received the injuries of which she complains. The car was being driven at or near the intersection of Berryessa road and the Oakland highway just outside the city of San Jose. Gullick, who was operating the car, was alone in the driver's seat. Plaintiff, her daughter, and Mrs. Gullick were riding in the rear seat. The Gullick car was proceeding in a southerly direction along the Oakland-San Jose highway, and before it reached the point of collision an automobile was observed turning into the highway from the Berryessa road, proceeding in a northerly direction directly in the path of the Gullick car. This automobile was driven by defendant Murotsune. Believing that a head-on collision was imminent, Gullick applied his brakes and swung to the left. Murotsune proceeding northerly collided with the Gullick car, striking it at or about the center. The accident occurred on the night of April 1, 1927, at about 8:30 o'clock. It was dark and the highway was wet and slippery from rain. Plaintiff alleged, and throughout the trial contended, that both Gullick and Murotsune were negligent in the operation of their machines. Evidence was offered to prove that Gullick was negligent in not having his car under control by reason of the speed he was traveling over a wet and slippery road and in turning to the left; that Murotsune was negligent in making too wide a turn into the road.

At the conclusion of the trial the jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Gullick in the sum of $6,000. It further found in favor of defendant Murotsune.

Defendant Gullick appeals. The main ground relied upon for a reversal of the judgment is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur had application to the facts of the case. Upon this subject and at the request of plaintiff, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that while it is true as a general rule that mere proof of the occurrence of an accident raises no presumption of negligence, yet there it a class of cases where this principle does not govern—cases where the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things would not have happened if proper care had been used. In such cases the maxim res ipsa loquitur is held to apply, and it is presumed in the absence of explanation by the defendant that the accident arose from want of reasonable care.

"You are instructed that if you find from a preponderance of all of the evidence that the plaintiff, Huldah T. Edwards, without any contributory negligence on her part, was injured while she was a guest of, and riding in, the automobile operated and controlled exclusively by the defendant Gullick, and that the plaintiff, Huldah T. Edwards, was injured in an accident on account of the manner in which such automobile was operated, and the accident was such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those having the operation and management of such automobile use proper care, then the law presumes that in so far as the defendant Gullick is concerned, he has been guilty of negligence. The plaintiffs have then made out a prima facie case against the defendant Gullick.

"The burden of proceeding is then shifted to the defendant Gullick, and if he would escape an adverse finding, he must adduce evidence to meet plaintiffs' prima facie case. The legal presumption resulting from such accident and injury as I have just stated, if you find such facts to be the case, constitutes evidence of negligence against the defendant Gullick, which cannot be ignored by the jury unless satisfactorily rebutted."

It is claimed by appellant that the giving of this instruction under the facts of the case violates every principle of law. It is his contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur never applies to a case where the injury arose through a collision between approaching vehicles in an action brought by a gratuitous passenger in one of the automobiles, against the operators of both vehicles, and in which plaintiff pleads and proves the reason of the accident, that is to say, the manner of the collision; that under such circumstances nothing is left for inference, and therefore there is no occasion for indulging in presumption.

It is further claimed that the rule precludes its application where, as here, plaintiff introduces evidence showing that any one of two instrumentalities in the hands of different persons could have caused the injury. It is pointed out that under the evidence the jury could have found that the injury was proximately caused through the negligence of defendant Murotsune by reason of his making too wide a curve at the time he turned into the road, or it could, as it did, find that the collision was caused solely through the negligence of Gullick, or as claimed by plaintiff, that it was caused by the concurrent negligence on the part of both defendants.

Numerous authorities have been cited to us illustrating the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as applied to different situations, but we need not be at pains to review these cases as the precise question here involved has been considered and passed upon in the very recent case of Keller v. Cushman (Cal. App.) 285 P. 399, where the authorities are extensively reviewed. It is there held that in a collision between two moving automobiles where either one of two defendants, wholly independent of each other, may be responsible for the injury complained of, the rule of res ipsa loquitur cannot be applied, for the reason that it is just as reasonable to infer that one was wholly responsible for the collision as to infer that the other was. See, also, Diamond v. Weyerhaeuser, 178 Cal. 540, 174 P. 38. To apply the presumption under such circumstances would be mere surmise or guesswork. The error in giving the instruction compels a reversal of the judgment. This conclusion renders unnecessary a discussion of other alleged errors.

The judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant Gullick is therefore reversed.

WRIGHT et al. v. SCHAAF et al.

Civ. 6282.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 13, 1931.

1. Parties ⚷7(2).

Trustees of express trust, transacting business as finance company, held proper parties plaintiff, with legal capacity to sue on automobile dealer's guaranty.

> By terms of trust involved, trustees, in addition to legal title, had unconditional power and discretion, as if absolute owners, in acquiring, managing, and disposing of trust estate, including power to sell beneficial shares, and also to determine what, if any, dividends were to be paid; such power being subject only to obligation to render annual account to beneficiaries.

2. Partnership ⚷64.

Trustees of express trust, transacting business as finance company under fictitious name, held not copartnership or unincorporated association within statute requiring publication of certificate (Civ. Code, § 2466).

> It appeared that trustees filed declaration of trust with county recorder, and filed certificate with county clerk stating they were transacting business under fictitious name, and giving name and residence of each trustee, as contemplated by Civ. Code, § 2466. They also complied with further requirement that such certificate be published.

3. Guaranty ⚷66.

Automobile dealer, who guaranteed payment under conditional sales contract, held not discharged by finance company's alleged negligence.

Dealer agreed, when guaranteeing payment, that his obligation should not be that of surety or guarantor, but should be absolute and unconditional and enforceable against him, even though finance company's right to enforce contract against buyer be impaired. Evidence showed that buyer disappeared with automobile; that company filed claim under embezzlement insurance policy; that insurer found automobile, but company declined to accept it; and that company did not notify dealer that automobile had been located.

4. Guaranty ⚷91.

That finance company failed to minimize damages by refusing to inform dealer guarantying payment of whereabouts of embezzled automobile held not sustained by evidence.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem.

In 1923 the plaintiffs, trustees of an express trust, filed in the office of the county recorder of Santa Barbara county, being the county in which they were transacting business, the declaration of trust under which they were operating. At the same time they filed in the office of the county clerk of said county a certificate, duly acknowledged, to the effect that as trustees of said trust they were transacting business under the fictitious name of County Finance Company. Said certificate set forth the name of each of the plaintiffs, also their respective residences, and was published once a week for four successive weeks during 1923 in a newspaper of general circulation published in said county. An affidavit of said publication was likewise filed in the office of said county clerk. By the terms of said declaration of trust plaintiffs as trustees were given, not only the legal title to, but also unconditional power, control, and discretion as if absolute owners, in acquiring, operating, and disposing of the trust estate, including the power to sell beneficial shares, and also to determine what, if any, dividends were to be paid; the power of the trustees being subject only to the obligation to render an annual account to the beneficiaries.

At all times mentioned herein defendant Schaaf was engaged in business under the name Hitchcock Motor Company. On April 4, 1925, defendant entered into a conditional sales contract with one Weber, pursuant to which the latter agreed to purchase an automobile for $1,107.75, payable in certain installments. On the same day defendant assigned this contract to plaintiffs by an instrument in writing, under which the defendant guaranteed payment of all moneys owing upon said contract, including reasonable attorney's fees, also waived presentment for payment, demand, protest, and nonpayment, also agreed that, in case of nonpayment, suit might be brought against defendant without joining the purchaser of the automobile, and further agreed that the defendant's rights and privileges should not be those of a surety or guarantor or an indemnifier, but that his obligation to the plaintiffs should be deemed absolute and unconditional, and should be enforceable even though the plaintiff's right to enforce said contract against the purchaser be suspended or impaired.

On October 4, 1925, Weber defaulted, leaving a balance of $453.75 due and unpaid. Shortly thereafter plaintiffs notified the defendant of such default and demanded payment of said balance, but nothing has been paid thereon.

Weber having disappeared with the automobile, the plaintiffs, who had insured the same against loss through embezzlement, made a claim against the insurance company for the balance owing to them. The insurance company refused to pay the same, claiming that no embezzlement had been committed.

However, in May, 1926, the insurance company secured possession of the automobile and offered to deliver the same to the plaintiffs, but the latter refused to accept it. The plaintiffs at no time informed the defendant that the insurance company had located the automobile, nor did the defendant inquire of the plaintiffs as to the whereabouts of the car. About a year after the insurance company had located the car, defendant ascertained its whereabouts, at which time the automobile had depreciated in value to the extent of about $400.

The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the balance owing on Weber's contract, plus interest and attorney fees in the additional sum of $100. On this appeal the defendant contends:

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] "1. That plaintiffs had no legal capacity to sue and were not the proper parties plaintiff.

[2] "2. That the trust agreement was in effect a copartnership between the trustees and the shareholders, and there was not a compliance with section 2466 of the Civil Code as to the filing and publication of the certificate of fictitious name.

"3. That if said association did not constitute a copartnership it was an unincorporated association of individuals doing business under a fictitious name without having filed and published a certificate as required by section 2466 of the Civil Code.

[3] "4. That the defendant, as guarantor under the contract with plaintiff, was discharged by the negligence of the plaintiffs.

[4] "5. That plaintiffs by their laches and negligence failed to minimize the damages by refusing to notify defendant of the whereabouts of the automobile."

We have considered the various contentions advanced by appellants, and find there is no merit in any of them. The judgment, accordingly, is affirmed.

CANTWELL v. GAGE (GAGE, Intervener).

Civ. 7649.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 19, 1931.

1. Insurance ⚷188(2).

Evidence showed that, under note or contract sued on, life insurance premium was payable only on condition that well then being drilled would produce oil, which failed to occur, precluding recovery.

Note or contract in question provided for payment of premium at designated times "after the first well comes in," with provision that, if well should come in for less than stated quantity of barrels, amount of policy should be reduced, and evidence disclosed that, although maker of note or contract was ultimately successful in finding oil after he drilled a third well, he did not intend, when promising to take out life insurance, to drill more than one well.

TYLER, P. J.

Action to recover a premium on a life insurance policy.

The basis of the action is an instrument in writing denominated by the parties as a promissory note. The instrument called the note reads as follows:

"$3277.50 December 20, 1922

"As endorsed hereon after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of myself Three Thousand Two Hundred Seventy-seven 50/100 Dollars with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from date until paid."

On the back thereof appears the following indorsement:

"Payable 25% on the first day of the month on the succeeding thirty days after the first well comes in on the Howland and Hopkins Strip at Santa Fe Springs Oil Field. Payable in cash 75% on the succeeding 60 days thereafter. If however the well should come in for less than 1000 barrels settled after thirty days, policy to be reduced to $50,000.00 and first $50,000.00 to be cancelled out on monthly term rate of company.

"[Signed] Arthur G. Gage."

As indicated from the foregoing, Gage was engaged in the business of drilling for oil. Plaintiff was an insurance agent. The agreement was given in payment of a full year's premium upon a life insurance policy. This policy insured appellant's life for the sum of $100,000 in favor of his wife, and was issued on November 29, 1922. The agreement sued upon was made in favor of respondent, agent, for the reason he had paid the insurance company the net amount of the premium, less his commission. Nothing having been paid by Gage upon the contract, action was brought by plaintiff to recover the full amount due thereon. Judgment went in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

[1] It was appellant's contention at the trial that the instrument sued on was payable upon the condition that the first well which was being drilled upon the property at the time the contract was made should produce oil. The trial court found in substance that it was not true that payment depended upon the happening of this condition. There is no evidence whatever in the record to sustain this conclusion. The evidence shows that defendant, Gage, had an interest in the lands mentioned in the instrument sued upon. He contemplated drilling a well on the property, and had confidence that it would be a good producer. The property is situated in the Santa Fé Springs district. Plaintiff on many occasions had attempted to sell defendant life insurance, but had met with no success. Finally, unbeknown to defendant, and upon his own initiative, plaintiff caused the insurance company he represented to issue defendant a policy subject to his approval. Upon the policy being issued, plaintiff called upon defendant, and again solicited him to procure insurance, and at the same time informed him of the arrangement he had made with the company. Defendant then told plaintiff that he knew it would be a good thing for his family, and, if the well he was drilling came in, as he believed it would, he would be very glad to take the policy. He informed plaintiff that the well he was drilling ought to be completed in about three months. Plaintiff, according to his own testimony, replied: "All right; three months is not so far ahead, and I will take a chance with you on that basis." Thereupon the instrument sued on was prepared by plaintiff and signed by defendant. Defendant proceeded with his drilling operations upon the well, but it produced no oil, and was subsequently abandoned, and plaintiff was so notified. Some time thereafter, defendant made arrangements to and did drill a second well, with the same result. A third well was then sunk, and this well has been producing about one hundred barrels a day since the latter part of 1923.

The finding of the trial court that it was not true that the instrument sued upon was payable upon the happening of the condition that the first well then drilling on the property should come in is indefinite. The record, however, discloses that the trial court was of the opinion that there was no ambiguity in the instrument, and that the language referred to any well that might be first brought in. It also appears that the court was of the further opinion that, if no well was ever brought in, nevertheless defendant would be responsible for payment within a reasonable time. Either conclusion finds no support in the record. The instrument itself and all the evidence and surrounding circumstances negative any such determination. There is no evidence in the record to show that, at the time the agreement was entered into, defendant ever contemplated the digging of any other well. He had great confidence that the first well would come in and be a large producer. He was also of the opinion that it would be brought in in about three months, and the parties contracted for payment accordingly.

[2] The evidence also shows that, if the well which was being drilled when the contract was made failed to come in, defendant would be unable to take the policy; that plaintiff understood this condition, and agreed, in such event, that it was to be canceled. All of the evidence and the surrounding circumstances show conclusively that the contract was payable only upon the condition that the well which was being drilled at the time the agreement was made should come in, and that such contingency never happened. The bringing in of this particular well was a condition precedent to the right of plaintiff to recover. As he expressed it, he took his chance. Having done so, he should be made to abide the result. It is elementary that, where a promise is conditional, it is incumbent on a plaintiff to allege and prove that the condition has been complied with before he can recover. Van Buskirk v. Kuhns, 164 Cal. 472, 129 P. 587, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 932. Here plaintiff has utterly failed to make such proof.

The judgment is reversed.

TYLER, P. J.

This appeal is prosecuted by the intervener, Marie B. Gage, from a judgment denying her any relief against an attachment on real property standing in her name, which was levied during the course of a suit against her husband, Arthur Gage, the defendant herein.

In the latter suit the intervener filed a complaint in intervention, claiming ownership of the attached property. Her complaint in intervention, which followed an unsuccessful motion to dissolve the attachment, prayed for a dissolution of the attachment, being in effect an attempt to quiet title against the attachment. The complaint in intervention set up the attachment in the original action levied upon property alleged to be that of the intervener. In reply to the complaint in intervention, plaintiff denied generally and specifically all the allegations of the complaint, and set up three affirmative defenses. All of these defenses are based upon the theory of a fraudulent conveyance of the attached property to intervener by her husband.

The court gave its judgment in favor of plaintiff and respondent; the judgment being that the intervener take nothing by her complaint in intervention. Several grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment. It appears from the record that the conveyance of the property in question was made by defendant to his wife some seven years prior to the creation of plaintiff's indebtedness. It is claimed by appellant that the evidence shows at that time defendant was solvent, and there is no evidence of a fraudulent intent on the part of defendant in making the transfer. It is further claimed that there is no finding by the court upon this question, which, it is urged, is necessary to support the theory of fraudulent conveyance. The additional claim is made that plaintiff was not an existing creditor at the time of the conveyance, for which reason he cannot be heard to complain. Relief was denied the intervener upon the ground that she did not come into court with clean hands. This theory was based upon the conclusion of the trial court, so it is claimed, that the intervener had so conducted the property as to justify the imposition upon her of a constructive trust. We do not think we are called upon to discuss or decide the various questions presented upon this appeal, for the reason that they have become moot. The only purpose of respondent in this proceeding is to keep in force the attachment until the final determination of the status of the basic action in which the attachment issued. We have this day decided (295 P. 375) that defendant was not liable upon the instrument sued upon. This being so, any question concerning the validity of the attachment becomes unimportant.

The judgment, therefore, has no longer any force or effect, and should therefore be reversed. It is so ordered.

Louis Greenbaum, of Los Angeles, and A. L. Stein, for appellants.

C. A. Reynolds, of Seattle, Wash., and Ivan Kelso and Clifford P. Grua, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

The actions above named were consolidated and tried as one. Both actions were prosecuted to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered in an automobile collision. The complaint in both cases alleged the negligence of the defendant. The defendant in both cases set out, among other matters, inevitable accident as one of the grounds for her defense.

The record shows that the appellants were driving northerly on a public highway in the county of Ventura. At the same time, respondent was driving southerly. As the respective parties approached a turn in the road, the automobiles collided. The jury found in favor of the defendant in both actions. The defense of inevitable accident was based upon the alleged locking of the steering mechanism of the car driven by the respondent. According to the testimony of the respondent, at the time of the collision the steering mechanism became locked so that it was impossible to turn the automobile to the right in rounding a curve, in order to avoid the collision.

[1] The first point made by the appellants for reversal is directed against the pleadings, it being alleged that the defense of inevitable accident or casualty does not specifically set forth the basis of such inevitable accident or casualty, in order to constitute a defense. The record shows, however, that no demurrer was interposed on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity, and no attempt made to require the respondent to set forth more specifically the alleged grounds of defense. Having gone to trial without raising any question as to the sufficiency of the pleadings or of the answer interposed in each cause, we think it is now too late to raise questions which only could have been raised by demurring specially. While practically admitting a conflict in the evidence, it is urged on the part of the appellants that the testimony is such that a new trial should be ordered.

[2, 3] In order to sustain the defense of inevitable accident or casualty, the defendant must show that reasonable diligence has been exercised, and that the occurrence was such as could not have been reasonably anticipated. In volume 1, page 260, Cyc. of Automobile Law of Blashfield, we find the following which we think applicable to this case: "As a corollary of the above rule (referring to rules relating to liability), for determining legal responsibility for negligence, if a motorist or other traveler has exercised ordinary care as required by common law, or the highest degree of care, as required by some statutes, and has nevertheless been the occasion of inflicting injury on another, the accident is said to be inevitable, for which no liability attaches." Citing a number of authorities and giving instances of such accidents.

In 45 C. J. 635, § 10, the rule is thus stated: "The first element of actionable negligence is lack of care. No person is an absolute insurer of his acts, or of the safety of others or their property, and if one is injured in person or property, as a result of some act or omission of another, but such act or omission does not involve any lack of duty or proper care, no cause of action arises, but the injury suffered is damnum absque injuria." And, as stated in Long v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 128 Ky. 26, 107 S. W. 203, 205, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 673: "The rule that a man must use his own property so as not to injure his neighbor has never been understood to make one an insurer in the lawful use of his property. If, in the lawful use of his property, a man accidentally does an injury to his neighbor which ordinary prudence would not have anticipated to result from his act, it is damnum absque injuria."

In Guile v. Snyder, 165 Ark. 221, 263 S. W. 403, 404, the Supreme Court of Arkansas used the following language in relation to the question which we have under consideration: "The foundation of liability, then, is knowledge—or, what is deemed in law to be the same thing, opportunity by the exercise of reasonable diligence to acquire knowledge—of the peril which subsequently results in injury. In a word, negligence or contributory negligence is lack of foresight or forethought." Citing a number of authorities.

[4] In the case at bar the testimony shows that the respondent was driving her automobile from Seattle to southern California; that the automobile was overhauled and placed in condition before leaving Seattle; was again overhauled, greased, etc., at Redding, Cal.; was again reexamined, reoiled, and regreased at Alameda, Cal. The testimony further shows that the respondent was driving a Buick car; that the steering mechanism in other cars of the same model had been known to become locked so as to render the car unmanageable, but of this fact the respondent had no knowledge. After the collision it was found that the steering mechanism of the driving gear was locked. Two questions of fact were presented to the jury: One, as to whether there was a defect in the mechanism which caused it to become locked, a defect of such a character as not to be reasonably anticipated as causing trouble, by the driving of the car; second, as to whether the respondent had used due care in having the car oiled and greased and looked after as she was on her way from Seattle to southern California. These questions of fact were resolved in favor of the respondent by the jury. Without setting forth the evidence, which would only add unnecessarily to the length of this opinion, we think the testimony of the defendant, if accepted by the jury as correct, sufficient to sustain the verdict. Her testimony shows that she had the car oiled and greased, as often as a reasonable person would deem the same necessary, and used the same precautions in having the car oiled and greased as an ordinarily prudent person would do. This, we think, is all that the law requires, and as the facts were found in favor of the respondent, we have no recourse but to affirm the judgments, and it is so ordered.

All concur.

FEDERAL MUT. LIABILITY INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (two cases).

Civ. 7569, 7570.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 21, 1931.

2. Master and servant 🔑403.

3. Master and servant 🔑405(4).

Evidence held not to establish liability of employer at time employee sustained fractured leg for expenses for bone graft made after refracture.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by George Engelbert for compensation for fracture of leg which was originally sustained while claimant was an employee of the Celite Company, against which the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company, insurer, filed objections. The Signal Oil & Gas Company, the employer at the time the refracture was sustained, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, insurer of such employer, were made parties to the proceedings. On separate applications of the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company for certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation. The two proceedings were consolidated for hearing and determination.

Award annulled.

Willis I. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

WORKS, P. J.

These two proceedings for the writ of review are directed at a single award made by the Industrial Accident Commission. Accordingly, they have been consolidated for hearing and determination.

On July 30, 1926, respondent Engelbert, then an employee of a corporation known as the Celite Company, was injured by a fracture of the tibia of his left leg. Petitioner in the two proceedings above entitled was the insurance carrier of the Celite Company. Engelbert made claim for his injury before the Industrial Accident Commission with the result that an award of compensation was made in his favor and against the Celite Company. This award has long since been paid in full.

Because of a certain casualty which occurred on February 27, 1930, which involved the fracture above mentioned and out of which arose a second controversy before the Industrial Accident Commission, it becomes necessary to particularize the condition of Engelbert's leg at various periods between July 30, 1926, and February 27, 1930, as well as to set forth a statement of the activities of the injured man during the same interval of time.

On November 21, 1928, Dr. Karshner, who had taken X-ray photographs of Engelbert's injured leg, reported to Dr. Stewart, who was acting as an expert for the Industrial Accident Commission, that "a.p. and lateral roentgenograms of the left leg show a healed fracture through the shaft of the tibia in its upper third. It is believed that there is a bony union at the present time although the fracture line is quite plainly visible in the lateral view. The alignment of the fragments is good in the lateral view. In the a.p. view there is a considerable outward bowing and slight torsion and the joint surfaces of the knee and ankle are, of course, parallel." This is the complete report of Dr. Karshner as it appears in the record.

Dr. Stewart made an examination of Engelbert's injured member on November 13, 1928, and on the 21st he thus reported to the commission, in part: "Mr. Engelbert gives a history of an injury to his left leg about 2½ years ago. * * * The injury was in the nature of a compound fracture of the leg near the knee joint and minor bruises. * * *

He was in the hospital about 8 months. He was then placed in a leg brace which he wore for 6–7 months, and he was then told to leave off the brace to strengthen the bone. The wound on his leg has been healed about 1½ years, and since the time of his rating he has been working at light duty in the oil fields. He states that while in the hospital Dr. Gaulden removed some infected bone. At the present time Mr. Engelbert is complaining of the leg being weak requiring him to wear his brace at all times, this weakness he blames on the deformity. An examination of the patient shows a very adherent scar in the upper third of his left leg. Near the center of the scar the bone is very prominent. * * * There seems to be some spring in the fracture. X-rays taken by Dr. Karshner * * * demonstrate apparently solid union although the fracture line is still apparent. * * * It is my opinion that Mr. Engelbert has a real and true disability that is permanent in character without surgical measures are instituted to alleviate it. It is my opinion further that in a man of his years and health that one would be justified in doing a tubular skin graft from the thigh to replace the dense scar over the crest of the tibia and that when this has taken to proceed with an osteotomy of the tibia and putting the leg up in traction or cast as circumstances would indicate in order to correct the present malalignment."

Dr. Gaulden made to petitioner, on January 9, 1930, a report which reads, in full: "Mr. Engelbert reported to our office today for check-up examination to determine whether or not it will be necessary to do a bone graft operation on his fractured tibia. On examination today I find apparent firm union in patient's injured leg. X-rays made of the leg show that the fracture line is still in evidence but there has been some bridging across by callous formation. This patient at the present time is working and has been working since Sept. 30, 1929. He still wears his brace as a support to his leg. He was instructed to report back at the end of three or four months at which time further X-rays will be made and patient will be examined. Inasmuch as he is apparently getting firm union at the fracture seat I do not believe at this time it will be necessary to perform an open operation on his leg."

On March 7, 1930, Dr. Gaulden made a report to the State Compensation Insurance Fund in which he said, in part: "Mr. Engelbert has been under my care for an old compound fracture of his left leg since July 30, 1926. He was last seen by me on Jan. 9, 1930, at which time his leg was X-rayed. These films showed the fracture line was still in evidence tho there was apparently some callous formation. On physical examination union was apparently firm."

Dr. Cade, under date March 19, 1930, made a report to the State Compensation Insurance Fund. In this paper the doctor first analyzes the showing made to him by an inspection of the four X-ray films of Engelbert's leg, taken by Dr. Gaulden. As to one of these, after stating certain particulars shown by it, Dr. Cade says: "Solid bony union does not appear to be complete in this particular X-ray film." As to a second, he remarks that, "although a great deal of the bony tissue has been replaced with callous formation, however solid bony union of the fracture is far from complete." As to the remaining two, the third and the fourth, which he treats together, the doctor observes that they "show the condition to be practically the same as revealed in the" second film.

This is a complete statement of the evidence respecting the condition of Engelbert's injured leg from July 30, 1926, to February 27, 1930, so far as it is pertinent here, and we now set down an account of Engelbert's activities during the same period. The injured man was under no employment between July 30, 1926, the day upon which he suffered his initial injury, and August 9, 1927, upon which latter date he again took up an employment with the Celite Company, this time at office work, although he was still compelled to wear a brace for the support of the injured leg. His earlier position with the company was as operator of a gasoline locomotive. Up to December 1, 1927, his compensation in this second employment was $100 per month, but on that date it was increased to $125 per month and so remained until August 4, 1928, at which time he voluntarily left the employment with the company. From that date to October 1, 1928, his leg bothered him and required some treatment, and he was consequently out of employment. On the last-mentioned day, however, he commenced work as a fireman with C. C. Julian at the oilfields at Santa Fé Springs, at a compensation of $125 per month, and retained the employment at that salary until July, 1929, when he underwent a skin graft operation for the purpose of relieving a scar over the site of the fracture of the tibia, an operation which had nothing to do with the fracture itself. From the disability occasioned by this operation he was recovered by September 29, 1929, when he entered the employ of respondent Signal Oil & Gas Company as a watchman, at a compensation of $42 per week of seven days. He retained this position, at the wage named, until February 27, 1930, the date of the second casualty involving the fractured tibia.

After the injury of 1930 Engelbert applied to the Industrial Accident Commission for an award of compensation therefor, and such proceedings were had thereupon that an award was entered against the Celite Company. Petitioner here, the insurance carrier of that company, now contends that the award should be annulled, insisting that any award in the proceeding should have gone against the Signal Oil & Gas Company. The State Compensation and Insurance Fund is before us for the reason that it was the carrier for the last-named company.

The manner in which Engelbert was injured while in the employ of the Signal Oil & Gas Company is shown by his testimony alone. The claimant said that he was walking down hill and "slipped and fell in a sitting position, my leg under me, injured leg under me," and "right away I felt a severe pain where the old fracture was. * * * I tried to stand and I couldn't. I whistled and called" the boss and the superintendent of the employer. These two men helped Engelbert up and carried him to a machine, by means of which he was taken to a hospital. On cross-examination Engelbert testified that when his leg doubled under him his "foot turned back", that when he came down on the leg he had "severe pain at site of old fracture", that "prior to that time" he had "not any more" pain in the leg "than just usually uncomfortable from wearing the brace." The record then shows:

"Q. When you came down on the leg * * * did you come down hard or easy or how, do you know? A. Well, just I slipped I guess down the hill, I would say four or five feet."

We pause for a moment to consider this state of the testimony. It is quite evident from the entire record that the witness said that he "slipped on the grass" and not "slipped I guess." This is made apparent from the fact that counsel, in later questions, as hereafter will be shown, without comment or objection from the witness, from other counsel or from the referee, used the expression "on the grass" in alluding to Engelbert's slipping. Moreover, it is not likely that the witness would have said "slipped I guess," as he had previously stated positively that he slipped, and he must have remembered positively whether he slipped as great a distance as four or five feet before he went down. These views are quite material to the case. If Engelbert slipped on grass, the possibility of his having fallen because of a "buckling" or giving way of his leg is set at naught, when we remember how natural it is for persons with sound legs to lose their footing on a grassy slope. It will be observed, also, that Engelbert has already said that he slipped and fell in a sitting position with his injured leg under him, and that "right away" he felt "a severe pain where the old fracture was." If his leg had buckled or given way the pain would first have been felt at the commencement of his slipping and not after he had fallen to the ground. From a consideration of the entire record, more of which is quoted below, we conclude that Engelbert fell because of a casualty—an "accident," to lapse into ordinary parlance—which might reasonably have happened to one of sound limb, and that the old fracture had nothing to do with his slipping or his falling. We think the record shows no conflict upon this point, but that it is established without dispute.

We resume our statement of Engelbert's testimony.

"Q. You were still on your feet (italics ours) during the four or five feet you were sliding, is that true? A. Yes.

"Q. Then you couldn't regain— A. Overbalanced and went down."

In explanation of what now follows it is to be remarked that Dr. Gaulden performed a bone graft operation on Engelbert's leg after the casualty of 1930. The question with which the following quotation opens has reference to the operation:

"Q. That was approximately a week after you slipped on the grass (italics ours), is that correct? A. Yes sir.

"Q. Now at the time the bone graft operation was performed so far as you could determine was the leg in approximately the same condition as it was before you had slipped on the grass (italics ours)? * * *" The answer is not material to our purpose.

We have above quoted from the reports of several experts, the extracts there set forth having a bearing upon the condition of Engelbert's leg between July 30, 1926, and February 27, 1930. Two of these reports also contain matter referring to his condition after the injury of the last-mentioned date. The following appears in Dr. Gaulden's report of March 7, 1930: "This patient was again admitted to my service at the Angelus Hospital on Feb. 27, 1930. He stated that he had slipped and fallen that same morning and refractured his left leg. He was working for the Signal Oil & Gas Company when this accident happened. Examination shows abnormal mobility in patient's left leg and X-rays taken of the leg show very little difference from the condition seen in the X-rays that were taken when patient was last seen by me in January, with the exception that there is apparently a fracture line through the small amount of callous that has formed. I had been contemplating doing a bone graft on this patient for some time but when I saw him in January as union was apparently taken [sic] place such an operation had been postponed. Yesterday morning under anesthetic a bone graft operation was performed on this patient." Dr. Cade says, in his report dated March 19, 1930, that he is "unable to see any difference as regards the bony condition existing" as between the first and second films examined by him, on the one hand, and the third and fourth, on the other, the latter two having been taken immediately following the casualty of February 27, 1930. From this state of affairs the doctor concludes that the injury which Engelbert incurred in 1930 "did not cause any aggravation or change in the preexisting condition."

We think there is no conflict in the evidence which lies before us. Much time is taken in the briefs in a discussion of the question as to whether or to what extent there was a bony union, on February 27, 1930, at the line of the fracture which Engelbert suffered in 1926. The only discordant note in the evidence on that subject is to be found in the report of Dr. Cade, which was made from an examination of X-ray photographs alone, while both Dr. Gaulden and Dr. Stewart report that on physical examination of the patient union at the line of fracture was apparently firm, and that note is not opposed alone by the concord in the evidence found in the reports of the other experts. It seems to us that the point is practically determined by the history of Engelbert's activities from the date of his re-entrance into the employ of the Celite Company in August, 1927, to the time of the casualty of 1930. For much the greater portion of the period, about sixteen months out of twenty, his leg was firm enough to allow him to be at work and to earn a considerable compensation. The injured leg stood the test imposed during the period by the ordinary course of his employments. This we are bound to conclude from the fact that his salary was increased by one employer and was not lessened by the others, that no employment was terminated except upon his volition, and that no evidence was introduced for the purpose of showing that his labors were inefficient or that he was handicapped by the condition of his leg in the performance in due and ordinary course of the duties of any position which he held. His employment with the Signal Oil & Gas Company appears to have been the most strenuous in which he engaged. He was in this post from September 29, 1929, to February 27, 1930, a period of five calendar months, less two days, and there is evidence in the record from which it must be inferred that the job was not a sedentary one. It was stipulated at the hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission that the casualty of 1930 arose out of and in the course of Engelbert's employment as a watchman. When he was injured he was therefore where he had a right to be. When he was hurt he whistled and called to two higher-up employees of the company. He therefore must have been on the premises of his employer, on a grassy slope, too, and in the discharge of his daily duties when he was injured. We are driven to state these conclusions, just and proper as they are, because, unfortunately, there is no specific evidence in the record to show what was Engelbert's line of duty as a watchman. Certainly, as we have already said, he worked under successive employments for nearly two years in an evidently satisfactory discharge of his ordinary duties. At last, by means of an accident which might have befallen the most sturdy, his ability to hold an employment was for the time being destroyed. If we add to these reflections, based upon the story of Engelbert's employments, considerations arising from the fact that the evidence of all the experts except Dr. Cade is opposed to his, we may safely conclude that Dr. Cade's report creates no substantial conflict in the evidence. Be it plainly understood, however, that we proceed upon the theory that all the evidence of the experts pales into insignificance beside the history of Engelbert's activities for so long a time.

[1] This all means that Engelbert's injured leg did not cause the accident which befell him. As a result of the casualty, however, the member was refractured at the old site of difficulty. Here is a distinction which must always be kept in mind. Does the mere fact that the leg was injured at the place of the initial fracture show that Engelbert was entitled to compensation from the Celite Company? We think not. The law is to the contrary. Engelbert's condition at the time of the casualty of 1930 may be likened to that of an employee who has a heart trouble which in no way affects his ability to discharge the ordinary duties of his employment, but whose physical difficulty is enhanced by undue strain or excitement. The Supreme Court has several times passed upon such cases. "If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration. * * * It can hardly be doubted under this rule that if decedent's incapacity to drive his truck was caused by a heart attack brought on by exertion or sudden shock or excitement incident to his employment on the highway, recovery could be had." George L. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17, 20; Knock v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 200 Cal. 456, 253 P. 712.

Respondent relies upon Head Drilling Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 194, 170 P. 157, and Newton v. Industrial Accident Commission, 204 Cal. 185, 267 P. 542, 60 A. L. R. 1279, but we think neither of these cases is applicable in the present instance.

[2, 3] Respondent commission makes the point that it was proper to render award against petitioner for the expenses of the bone graft operation performed by Dr. Gaulden. There is no evidence in the record that this operation was necessary before the casualty of 1930, or that a performance of it was contemplated. The only showing on the question appears in the reports of Drs. Gaulden and

Stewart. The former said in his statement of January 9, 1930, that "I do not believe at this time it will be necessary to perform an open operation" on Engelbert's leg. This was for the reason, as stated by the doctor, that the patient was "apparently getting firm union at the fracture seat." This was but six weeks before the event of February 27, 1930. Dr. Stewart had said, only, with our italics, "that one would be justified in doing a tubular skin graft from the thigh to replace the dense scar over the crest of the tibia and that when this has taken to proceed with an osteotomy of the tibia and putting the leg up in traction or cast as circumstances would indicate in order to correct the present malalignment." In addition to the fact that it is said merely that this procedure would be justifiable, it is to be observed that it was for Engelbert to say whether he desired the malalignment of his leg thus to be corrected. Dr. Stewart made his report on November 13, 1928. A year and two months later Dr. Gaulden, Engelbert's private attendant, said for him that from the evidence then at hand it was unnecessary to perform the operation. The burden was upon Engelbert to show that he was entitled to compensation from the Celite Company for the expenses of the operation which was actually performed after the casualty of 1930, and we think the record is barren of any evidence to support a finding to that effect. Certainly, as it appears to us, the mere fact that the operation was performed when it was, and under the conditions then existing would not justify such a finding.

Other points are discussed in the briefs, but we find it unnecessary to decide them.

Award annulled.

PEOPLE v. HEROD.

Civ. 4239.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 20, 1931.

1. Judgment 🔑279.

Prior to statutory amendment, affidavit for service of summons by publication constituted no part of judgment roll (Code Civ. Proc. § 670, as amended by St. 1895, p. 45).

2. Judgment 🔑99.

Record in action begun in July, 1890, for foreclosure of certificate of purchase, wherein judgment was entered in December, 1890, held not to disclose want of jurisdiction to enter default judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 670, as amended by St. 1895, p. 45).

> The judgment roll showed the complaint, issuance of summons, order for publication of summons, and judgment by default, followed by a decree of foreclosure; that decree of foreclosure recited that defendant had been regularly served with summons, and had failed to appear and answer complaint; that time for answering had expired; and that defendant's default had been entered according to law.

3. Judgment 🔑518.

Motion to vacate default judgment for want of service of summons is "collateral attack."

> [Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Collateral Attack," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Judgment 🔑495(1).

Where default judgment is collaterally attacked, every act necessary to be taken to obtain jurisdiction will be presumed to have been taken.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by the People against James Herod. From an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment foreclosing a certificate of purchase, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

T. R. Claflin, C. L. Claflin, and H. E. Schmidt, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

F. E. Borton, of Bakersfield, amicus curiæ.

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment foreclosing a certificate of purchase.

The record shows that on or about January 11, 1887, James Herod became the holder of a certificate of purchase for section 16, township 28 south, range 29 east, M. D. B. & M. No payments were made as required, and on the 23d day of July, 1890, a complaint in foreclosure of the certificate of purchase was filed. On December 1, 1890, a decree of foreclosure was granted in said cause in favor of the plaintiff. On January 30, 1928, a little over thirty years after the judgment was entered, the appellant served a notice of motion to set aside the judgment on two grounds: First, that no service of summons, either personally or by publication, was ever made or had upon the defendant; and, second, that no legal service of summons, either personally or by publication, was ever made, or had upon the defendant.

The judgment roll shows a complaint, the issuance of summons, order for publication of summons, and judgment by default, followed by decree of foreclosure. The judgment or decree of foreclosure recites that the defendant had been regularly served with process, and had failed to appear and answer the complaint, that the time for answering had expired, and that the defendant's default had been entered according to law. The judgment and decree then proceeds to recite the purchase of the certificate by the appellant, failure to make payment as required by law, following which, judgment of foreclosure was entered in favor of the respondent.

The appellant relies principally upon the alleged insufficiency of the affidavit for publication of summons. The contention is made that the affidavit contains no probative facts and consists only of a statement of ultimate facts and conclusions.

[1] The judgment to which we have referred recites that the appellant was regularly served with summons, and, unless there is something in the record, which we can consider, that shows that this statement in the judgment is not well founded, the assertion that the judgment is void upon its face is without merit. We have reference to the appellant's contention concerning the affidavit for publication of summons. Whatever may be contained therein is entirely of no moment here. Prior to the amendment of section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 45), the affidavit for service of summons by publication constituted no part of the judgment roll. As we have stated, this action was begun in July, 1890, and judgment entered in December, 1890, some five years preceding the time when the affidavit for publication was, by the Legislature, made a part of the judgment roll.

[2] Disregarding the affidavit for publication, there is nothing in the record in this case disclosing want of jurisdiction to enter the judgment complained of. The cases of People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 P. 348, People v. Pearson, 76 Cal. 400, 18 P. 424, and People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 P. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448, are not controlling upon the questions here presented. In People v. Mullan it appears that the motion was based upon section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, while the cases of People v. Pearson and People v. Greene went off on the theory that the affidavit of publication of summons was a part of the judgment roll at the time that the decisions were rendered in those cases. Such, however, was not the case, and the later decisions practically overrule the Pearson and Greene Cases. The case of Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 P. 216, 70 P. 732, cited by appellant, went off on the theory that the judgment was void upon its face. The appellant overlooks three cases which are decisive of every question here presented.

In People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 77 P. 651, dealing with a motion like that in the case at bar, the court said: "It is well settled that a court has no power to set aside or vacate, on motion, a judgment not void upon its face, unless the motion is made within a reasonable time; and it is definitely determined that such time will not extend beyond the limit fixed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which in no case exceeds one year. It is also settled law that a judgment is not void upon its face, unless its invalidity is apparent from an inspection of the judgment roll. * * * The effect of these well-settled rules is that, unless the invalidity of a judgment is apparent from an inspection of the judgment roll, the court rendering it has no power, in the absence of application made within the time specified in section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to make any order vacating or setting aside such judgment, and the sole remedy of the aggrieved party, who may not, in fact, have been served, is to be found in a new action on the equity side of the court." It is further held in that case that under the provisions of section 670, Code of Civil Procedure, as it stood prior to 1895, neither the affidavits for publication of summons, nor the order for publication of summons constituted any part of the judgment roll under the law then in force, and cannot therefore be considered, notwithstanding the fact that they had been placed in the bill of exceptions. That case also holds that there is no merit in the contention that the record does not show the issuance of an alias summons for the purposes of publication.

[3, 4] The cases of Lake v. Superior Court, 165 Cal. 182, 131 P. 371, and People v. Norris, 144 Cal. 422, 77 P. 998, show that proceedings such as we have here are collateral attacks. Being a collateral attack, nothing appearing to the contrary, every act necessary to be taken by the trial court in order to obtain jurisdiction will be presumed to have been taken. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742.

In Fletcher v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 79 Cal. App. 468, 250 P. 195, this court had occasion to review practically all the California cases having to do with presumptions in favor of a judgment. A complete answer to every contention made by the appellant will be found in the cases of Hahn v. Kelly, supra, and Fletcher v. Superior Court, supra.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SIBERELL v. SIBERELL.*

Civ. 7514.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 12, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 12, 1931.

1. Husband and wife 🔑14(3), 119(1), 249.

Deed to husband and wife "as joint tenants," vested property in spouses as joint tenants, interest conveyed to wife being her separate property, interest conveyed to husband retaining quality of community property (Civ. Code, §§ 161, 164).

> Civ. Code § 164, provides that, where property is conveyed to a married woman by a written instrument, the title is presumed to thereby vest in her as her separate property, and, where the conveyance is to a married woman and her husband, the presumption is that she takes the part conveyed to her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument. Civ. Code § 161, declares that a husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property.

2. Husband and wife 🔑49½(8).

That deed was in form to husband and wife was evidence of husband's intention to make gift to wife of interest conveyed to her.

3. Husband and wife 🔑264.

Evidence sustained finding that deed of property by husband to wife was not intended to change community character of property.

> The husband testified that he made the deed to avoid inconvenience from potential judgments in suits pending against him, but also testified that he did not by his deed intend to make a gift of the property to his wife.

4. Divorce 🔑252.

Divorce decree giving party guilty of extreme cruelty all, or nearly all, community property, held improper (Civ. Code, § 146).

HOUSER, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

Action for divorce by Minnie V. Siberell against Harvey P. Siberell. From certain parts of an interlocutory judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Barker & Keithly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

Appellant obtained an interlocutory judgment, whereby it was determined that she is entitled to a divorce from her husband. Her appeal is from only those parts of the judgment (entered on the 27th day of September, 1928) whereby it was determined that the defendant is entitled to an interest in certain described land, and whereby it was determined that, as between the parties to this action, a certain mortgage indebtedness constitutes a lien, charge, or incumbrance upon said land, or that as between the parties hereto such indebtedness or any part thereof is chargeable against or should be paid other than by defendant out of his separate property and funds.

In October, 1913, the real property, hereby designated as lots 29 and 30, was conveyed to appellant and respondent as joint tenants. The lots, as well as improvements later made thereon by these parties, were paid for with community funds. Afterwards, on January 19, 1918, respondent executed to appellant a grant deed of said lots and of other property. This deed recites a consideration of $10 paid by the grantee, but, in fact, nothing was paid.

The divorce was granted upon grounds of extreme cruelty. The court found that lots 29 and 30 are community property, and that there is no other community property except about $600 held by defendant, and certain tools, machinery, etc., which were awarded to the defendant, and the household furnishings and furniture, which were awarded to the plaintiff. The court found that lots 29 and 30 are of the value of about $40,000, and that this property is subject to a mortgage to secure an indebtedness in the principal sum of $6,000, for a loan, the proceeds whereof were received by the defendant. By its decree the court gave to the plaintiff an undivided one-half of lots 29 and 30, and gave to the defendant an undivided one-half of said lots, subject to the mortgage, and provided that said mortgage as between plaintiff and defendant shall be a lien only as against defendant's interest in the property. The defendant was required to pay to the plaintiff $50 per month for the support of plaintiff and one child (a son) given into the custody of the plaintiff, and the other three children (daughters) were left in the custody of the defendant. Plaintiff was given the right to continue to occupy said real property, without rent, so long as the allowance for support of plaintiff and said son does not "exceed the sum hereby awarded."

The court found that said land, lots 29 and 30, at the time it was acquired by plaintiff and defendant, was their community property, and ever since has continued so to be. This finding rests upon the more specific findings that the land was purchased and paid for with community funds; that the deed of October, 1913, conveyed the property to plaintiff and defendants as joint tenants; that the title remained as vested under the deed of October, 1913, until January 19, 1918; that the deed made by the defendant to the plaintiff on January 19, 1918, was made without consideration, and solely for the convenience of the parties, and not with the purpose or intent that its community character should be changed so as to make it the separate property of the plaintiff.

In the bill of exceptions, the specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, in so far as the two deeds are concerned, relate entirely to appellant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's findings above mentioned concerning the purpose and effect of the deed of January 19, 1918.

Appellant now contends, in the first place, that by the 1913 joint tenancy deed she acquired as her separate estate an equal interest with her husband as joint tenant; that only the remaining half interest could have constituted community property; and that by the deed of 1918 her husband gave to her complete title to the entire property as her separate estate. (This deed, however, did not in terms declare that the property was conveyed to her as her separate property.)

[1, 2] There is no evidence in the record as to the circumstances under which the 1913 deed was made, other than the deed itself as proved by stipulation that prior to the 19th day of January, 1918, record title to the lots "stood in the names of plaintiff and defendant as joint tenants," and the fact that the property was paid for with community funds. But this last fact alone is not sufficient to change the legal effect of the deed. According to section 164 of the Civil Code as in force at date of the deed of October, 1913, it was provided that "* * * whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And in case the conveyance be to such married woman and her husband, or to her and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her, as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument. * * *" Section 161, Civil Code, declares that a husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property. In the light of these Code sections, it is certain that, if the deed of October, 1913, had conveyed the property to the husband and wife without specifying a joint tenancy, the presumption would have been that they became tenants in common, and that the wife would have held her part as separate property, and that the husband would have held his part as community property. Estate of Regnart, 102 Cal. App. 643, 283 P. 860. We think it is also very clear that, where the deed is to the husband and wife "as joint tenants," the presumptions above stated fully apply, except only that the incidents of joint tenancy take the place of the usual tenancy in common. Moreover, the fact that the deed was in form to both husband and wife was in itself evidence of his intention to make a gift to his wife of the interest conveyed to her. Estate of Regnart, supra.

We conclude, therefore, that under the first deed appellant owned an undivided one-half of lots 29 and 30 as joint tenant and as her separate property; and that the other one-half interest, vested in respondent as joint tenant, retained the quality of community property.

[3] From the foregoing conclusion, it follows that the deed of January 19, 1918, if it constituted a gift to appellant, was a gift of only the undivided interest of the grantor, and was effective only to the extent that it gave to appellant as her separate property that interest theretofore held by the grantor as community property. If, on the other hand, said deed was not a gift, then that undivided interest, although conveyed into the name of the wife, retained its status as community property. The court found that said deed was not made by respondent with the purpose or intent that its community character should be changed so as to make it the separate property of the plaintiff. This finding was in accord with testimony of respondent to the same effect. We are of the opinion that this testimony of respondent is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding. The testimony of respondent that he made this deed to avoid inconveniences which might result from his possible, but not yet certain, liability to pay damages on account of two automobile accidents, does not necessarily overcome the effect of his testimony that he did not by his deed intend to make a gift of the property to his wife. The conflict in the evidence left the question open to determination by the trial court, and its decision thereon will here be accepted as final.

[4] The court, having erroneously determined that the entire ownership of lots 29 and 30 was community property, made its decree accordingly, and gave to respondent an undivided one-half thereof, subject to the conditions stated, relating to possession, and relating to the mortgage. But, since only one-half interest was community property, the effect of the decree would be to give to respondent (the party guilty of extreme cruelty by reason of which the divorce is granted) all, or nearly all, of the community property. This is contrary to law. Civ. Code, § 146; Quagelli v. Quagelli, 99 Cal. App. 172, 277 P.

That part of the judgment is reversed wherein and whereby there was awarded to the defendant an undivided one-half interest in and to said lots 29 and 30, and wherein and whereby it was provided that, as between the parties to this action, said undivided one-half interest is subject to the existing mortgage thereon to secure an obligation of $6,000 or any renewal or extension thereof, as stated in the decree.

It is directed that the findings of fact be amended by striking out therefrom the statement "that said land at the time it was acquired by plaintiff and defendant was their community property and ever since has continued so to be," and by substituting therefor the following: "That said land at the time it was acquired by plaintiff and defendant became and was as to an undivided one-half thereof the separate property of the plaintiff and as to the other undivided one-half thereof was their community property and ever since has continued so to be."

It is further directed that the trial court, taking into consideration the evidence now in the record and any additional evidence deemed necessary to enable the court to provide for an equitable distribution of the community property of the parties, amend its decree in terms which shall award to the plaintiff a portion to be fixed by the court, but which shall be not less than one-half of the community property, and shall award to the defendant that part of the community property, if any there be, not awarded to the plaintiff. The decree as amended shall further provide that said mortgage as between plaintiff and defendant shall be a lien only against that part or interest in the property, if any there be, awarded to the defendant.

I concur: YORK, J.

HOUSER, J.

I dissent. Without seriously questioning the basic statement of the law contained in the prevailing opinion herein, in substance that ordinarily a conveyance of property by a joint tenancy deed to a husband and wife has the presumptive effect of vesting a separate estate in the wife, nevertheless, from a consideration not only of the circumstances which apparently surrounded the immediate transaction, but as well those which followed the delivery of the joint tenancy deed in question, I am led to a conclusion differing from that expressed by my associates.

The greatest effect that may be accorded the joint tenancy deed is that on its execution it created a disputable presumption that title to an undivided one-half interest in the property therein described was thereby vested in the wife as her separate property. Concededly, such presumption may be overcome, not only by direct evidence to the contrary, but also by such inferences as may be deducible from the entire evidence in the case. A decision of the questioned fact depends primarily upon a determination of the question of what was the intention of the grantees at the time the deed was executed. And, as has been frequently decided, in determining an issue of fact, the power of the trial judge to rest his conclusion upon inferences, in opposition to a presumption, is unquestioned. If, then, the evidence adduced on the trial of the action presents such facts as from them an inference fairly may be deduced, which in its effect contradicts the presumption that, at the time the joint tenancy deed was executed, it was the intention of the husband and wife that the wife should take her moiety of the conveyed property as her separate estate, it would follow that the finding made by the trial court "that said land at the time it was acquired by plaintiff and defendant was their community property and ever since has continued so to be" was supported by the evidence, and cannot be disturbed by this court.

Ordinary experience of men indicates that the purpose of a husband and wife in having real property conveyed to them by a joint tenancy deed is that, in the event of the death of either of them, the survivor may succeed to the title to such property without the commencement and the carrying to termination of proceedings in the probate court which, after such institution, and after much inconvenience, expense, and delay, may eventuate in the identical result which may be accomplished by the original execution of the joint tenancy deed. In the absence of any direct evidence to the contrary, taking into consideration the fact that had the husband and the wife really intended that any interest in the real property should be presently vested in the wife, a simple grant deed, or a bargain and sale deed, might have been employed, which easily might have included the direct declaration that the wife should take a present one-half interest as her "separate property"—at least it may be surmised that the purpose of the joint tenancy deed, far from vesting any present estate in the wife, was merely to insure the future vesting of the entire title to the property in the survivor of the husband and the wife. In addition thereto, from the evidence adduced on the trial of the action it may be noted that the property was entirely paid for with community funds; that at the time the joint tenancy deed was executed the wife had no knowledge of the fact that any separate estate was either created or attempted to be conveyed to her, nor even became aware of the assumed fact until several years thereafter, when she was so informed by a banker from whom the husband was negotiating a loan which was proposed to be secured by a mortgage on, or a trust deed of, the property; that the property was occupied by the husband, the wife, and their family as a home, and that during such occupancy the wife never asserted nor exerted any dominion or control over the property; that with reference to the property the wife "always signed everything he (the husband) asked her to sign"; that, when the so-called gift deed of 1918 was executed by the husband, it included the entire estate, rather than an undivided one-half of it, which would have been all that would have been necessary if by the joint tenancy deed the creation of an estate in the wife had been intended; and finally, with reference to the so-called gift deed, the testimony of the husband is that "this property was in my name at the time, and I didn't know just what would happen about this and I wanted to protect the family in case anything came up on this matter and he (his attorney) advised me that I had better do that. It was deeded to her as a matter of protection so that the property would not be involved, but I never deeded the property with the intention of it being her own individual property; I had no intention of any shape or form or manner of that kind. It was no gift nor anything else; the fact is, that I didn't want to have that involved and that was the reason for the transfer."

Furthermore, as having some bearing upon the question of intent of the husband and the wife as grantees of the joint tenancy deed, it should also be noted that neither in the pleadings, during the course of the trial, nor in the proceedings on the motion for new trial, was the question directly raised by the plaintiff relative to the effect of such deed. The case was tried entirely on the theory that plaintiff's separate estate, if any, in the property described in the complaint, was created, not by virtue of the joint tenancy deed, but that it inured to plaintiff by reason of the so-called gift deed of 1918, which was executed by defendant to plaintiff several years after the joint tenancy deed was executed. The pertinent allegations of plaintiff's complaint which reflect her claim of an interest in the property in question are "that said real property is the separate property of plaintiff, having been conveyed to her by defendant after an automobile accident * * * (which accident, or the fear by defendant of a judgment against him by reason thereof, was the inducing cause of the execution of the so-called gift deed of 1918); * * * that plaintiff has no real or personal property other than as hereinbefore set forth."

From such considerations it appears to my mind that, in opposition to the presumption created by the statute of separate property in the wife, a proper legal inference might have been indulged by the trial court which would overcome and overthrow such presumption, and result in a finding of fact "that said land at the time it was acquired by plaintiff and defendant was their community property and ever since has continued so to be." As hereinbefore indicated, if the evidence before the trial court was legally sufficient to justify such an inference, this court is powerless to disturb the ensuing judgment.

EQUITABLE BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N v. WOLFANGLE et ux.

Civ. 4232.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 15, 1931.

1. Party walls 🔑8(2).

Subsequent ordinance respecting required width of brick walls did not become part of party wall agreement providing for extension or alterations uniform in material and dimensions with original wall (Civ. Code, §§ 1655, 1656).

> Since party wall agreement providing for sharing expense of extensions, alterations, or additions specifically provided that extensions should be uniform in material and dimensions with original wall, incorporation therein of subsequent ordinance providing for wall of different width would amount to creation of a new and different contract by mere operation of law, and would result in impairing obligations of contract.

2. Party walls 🔑8(3).

Property owners were not liable for any cost of party wall extension built over written protest and in violation of contract.

> Original party wall agreement provided for sharing expense of extensions, alteration, and additions which should be uniform in material and dimensions with original wall, while extension actually built over written protest of owners was a different width than wall as originally built and was for purpose of enlarging store building of adjoining owner for its sole benefit.

3. Contracts 🔑167.

Applicable laws in existence when agreement is made necessarily become part thereof.

4. Contracts 🔑167.

Rule to effect that applicable laws in existence become part of agreement applies with respect to city ordinance.

5. Contracts 🔑167.

Statutes and ordinances enacted subsequent to execution of contract, which add burdens or impair obligations, do not become part of agreement unless language clearly indicates such intention.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the Equitable Building & Loan Association against L. R. Wolfangle and wife, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

J. G. Rossiter, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Raymond G. Thompson, of Pasadena, for respondent.

Mr. Justice R. L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a judgment which was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for one-half of the cost of extending a party wall pursuant to contract. It was also against the defendants on their cross-complaint for damages on account of performing the work in violation of the terms of the agreement. The judgment was rendered on the theory that a city ordinance specifying the required thickness of brick walls, which ordinance was enacted subsequent to the execution of the contract, became a necessary part thereof.

E. F. Lancaster and the defendants owned adjoining lots in the city of Pasadena. Upon these lots the respective parties each constructed one-story brick buildings. The intervening wall of these buildings was built along the dividing line of the adjoining properties as a party wall. This wall was built twelve inches thick, to conform to the city ordinance which was then in effect. An agreement was executed by the respective parties reserving to each of them and their grantees or heirs the perpetual use and enjoyment of this party wall and prohibiting either party from defacing, weakening, or destroying the wall without first obtaining the written consent of the other party therefor. This contract also contained the following clause:

"It is further agreed that if at any time either of said parties are desirous of extending said wall beyond its present limitations or to in any manner erect, construct or extend said wall for any reasonable height or depth or length, that the same shall be done at the expense of both parties hereto, share and share alike, and that said extension, alteration, addition thereto, or repair thereof shall be uniform in material and dimensions with the original wall."

Thereafter Lancaster sold and conveyed his said property to the plaintiff. In March, 1926, the plaintiff, over the written protest of the defendants, built an extension to said party wall at a total cost of $1,940. This addition to the party wall was of no benefit to the defendants. Demand was made upon the defendants to contribute one-half of this expense, which they refused to do. This suit was thereupon brought. The complaint alleges the execution of the contract and the construction of the extension to the wall at the reasonable cost of $1,940. The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint.

In a cross-complaint the defendants affirmatively allege that the addition to the wall was built without the consent and over the written protest of the defendants and in violation of the terms of the contract; that in making such addition the plaintiff did "extend said wall and add to the height and increase the depth of said wall and did alter and repair said wall; * * * that without leave or consent * * * plaintiff increased the thickness of said wall by from 4 inches to 8 inches," thereby encroaching upon defendants' premises to that extent, to their damage in the sum of $5,000.

The cause was tried with a jury. A verdict was rendered upon the contract in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $960. A separate verdict was rendered against the defendants upon their cross-complaint. A judgment was accordingly entered in behalf of the plaintiff for the sum of $960 and to the effect that the defendants take nothing by reason of their cross-complaint. From this judgment an appeal has been perfected.

The evidence is uncontradicted to the effect that the extension to the wall was constructed as "a two-brick wall, in other words, about 16 inches (in width) up to the top of the required height for the Equitable Building and Loan Association Building."

This was in conflict with the unambiguous terms of the contract, which provides that any "extension, alteration, addition thereto or repair thereof shall be uniform in material and dimensions with the original wall." The original wall was but twelve inches in width, while the extension was at least sixteen inches thick. This fact is conceded. The respondent justifies this increased breadth of the wall by the fact that, subsequent to the execution of the agreement in question, the city of Pasadena adopted an ordinance requiring all brick walls of buildings in that district to be constructed at least sixteen inches in width. It was stipulated this ordinance was so enacted and that it was in force at the time the wall was extended.

[1] The sole question presented by means of this appeal is whether the change of the ordinance with respect to the required width of brick walls became a necessary provision of the agreement which was previously executed. The respondent argues that "not only did the ordinances in effect at the time this agreement was made in 1905 enter into it and form a part of it as fully as if they were expressly referred to and incorporated in its terms, but all reasonable amendments and modifications of such ordinance also entered into and became a part of such agreement." In support of the judgment, the respondent relies upon sections 1655 and 1656 of the Civil Code. These provisions are not applicable. Section 1655 provides that, "stipulations which are necessary to make a contract reasonable, or conformable to usage, are implied, in respect to matters concerning which the contract manifests no contrary intention."

But in the present case the contract does manifest a contrary intention. It specifically provides the extension "shall be uniform in material and dimensions with the original wall." To affirm the judgment in this case, it would be necessary to hold that substantial changes in statutes or ordinances subsequently adopted, which increase the obligations of a contracting party, may be imposed in violation of the very terms of the agreement. In effect this would amount to the creation of a new and different contract by mere operation of law. It would result in impairing the obligations of the contract. This is neither law nor justice.

[2] In the present case the plaintiff has constructed a two-story brick wall some 65 feet in length as an extension to a former party wall. The addition was for the purpose of enlarging the store building of the plaintiff for its sole benefit. It appears to be of no benefit to the defendants. It was built in violation of the terms of the contract. If the defendants may be held to contribute to this wall, it is solely because of the obligation imposed by the terms of the contract. Since the extension to the wall was built over the written protest of the defendants and in violation of the express terms of the contract, we are of the opinion the defendants are not liable for any part of the cost therefor.

[3-5] It is true that "all applicable laws in existence when an agreement is made, necessarily enter it and become a part of it as fully as if they were expressly referred to and incorporated in its terms." 6 Cal. Jur. 311, § 186. The same rule applies with respect to city ordinances. 13 C. J. 561, § 523; Wright v. Computing Scale Co., 47 Wash. 107, 91 P. 571. But statutes and ordinances enacted subsequent to the execution of a contract, which add burdens or impair the obligations of the contract may not be deemed to be a part of the agreement unless its language clearly indicates this to have been the intention of the parties. The rule in this regard is clearly stated in the case of Fuller v. Kane, 110 Mich. 549, 68 N. W. 267, 34 L. R. A. 308, 64 Am. St. Rep. 362, as follows: "Every contract (which does not expressly provide the contrary) must be considered as made with reference to the existing state of the law, and if, by the intervention of the legislature, a change is made in the law which in any degree affects the contract, such contract, made without some clear and distinct reference to the prospect or possibility of a change, does not hold with reference to the state of things as altered by the new law." 6 R. C. L. 856, § 243.

It may not reasonably be said that the increasing of the breadth of a brick wall from twelve to sixteen inches in width is not a material and substantial change in the dimensions thereof.

In the present case, far from an evident intention on the part of the contracting parties to adopt future legislation as a part of the agreement, it is apparent from the express language employed that they intended to limit the liability for any extension, alteration, or repair of the existing party wall to such changes as "shall be uniform in materials and dimensions with the original wall." The extension of the party wall was constructed in violation of the contract, and the defendants are therefore not liable thereunder. If the defendants were permitted to make use of this extension of the wall for their own benefit, they would be required to pay plaintiffs the reasonable value of such use. Under the circumstances of this case, the defendants are, however, not liable upon the contract.

The judgment is reversed.

112 Cal. App. (Supp.) 773

COWAN OIL & REFINING CO. v. MILEY PETROLEUM CORPORATION, Limited.

No. CA–276.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.
Jan. 28, 1931.

1. Jury 🔑31(7).

Statute providing for summary judgment held not to invade defendant's constitutional right to trial by jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 831d, as amended by St. 1929, p. 857; Const. art. 1, § 7).

2. Constitutional law 🔑315.
Judgment 🔑179.

Statute authorizing summary judgment held not to deny defendant due process (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1005, 1010, and § 831d as amended by St. 1929, p. 857; Const. art. 1, § 13).

3. Constitutional law 🔑309(1).

Essentials of "due process of law" are that party proceeded against shall have reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard in orderly manner (Const. art. 1, § 13).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Due Process of Law," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Judgment 🔑181.

Under statute authorizing summary judgments, answer may be stricken out, although perfect defense is stated therein, unless defendant by affidavits shows facts to substantiate defense (Code Civ. Proc. § 831d, as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

5. Judgment 🔑181.

Presence of counterclaim in answer is no bar to motion for summary judgment, where counterclaim is unsupported by statements of fact in affidavit tending to show that it is meritorious (Code Civ. Proc. § 437, and § 831d as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

6. Pleading 🔑354(2).

In action for gas delivered to defendant under contract, defendant's counterclaim for plaintiff's use of unreasonable amount of gas held "counterclaim" within statute and not cross-complaint; as regards motion to strike (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437, 438, and § 831d as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

> The facts disclosed that the defendant operated certain oil wells and the plaintiff operated a plant for extraction of gasoline from natural gas; that under contract defendant delivered oil to plaintiff for extraction of gas; that plaintiff's action was based on claim for dry gas claimed to have been delivered to defendant, and that defendant's counterclaim was based on a clause in the contract authorizing the plaintiff to use a reasonable amount of gas received from defendant.

7. Judgment 🔑185.

Defendant's affidavit in response to motion for summary judgment in action for gas held insufficient as conclusion (Code Civ. Proc. § 831d, as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

> The defendant's affidavit stated that the plaintiff, instead of using defendant's dry gas in reasonable quantities, as permitted by the contract, fraudulently converted and appropriated to its own use and benefit large quantities of dry gas in excess of any reasonable quantity necessary to operate plaintiff's gasoline plant.

8. Judgment ⚿185.

Neither conclusions of law nor conclusions of fact set forth in affidavit in response to motion for summary judgment are sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 831d, as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

9. Judgment ⚿186.

Evidentiary facts set forth in defendant's affidavit in response to motion for summary judgment must be accepted as true for purpose of motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 831d, as amended by St. 1929, p. 857).

Appeal from Municipal Court of Los Angeles; Joseph F. Chambers, Judge.

Action by the Cowan Oil & Refining Company against the Miley Petroleum Corporation, Limited. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

McAdoo, Neblett & Clagett, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. D. Andrews, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J.

Defendant filed an answer in which is included a counterclaim. Thereafter plaintiff's motion to strike the answer and enter judgment under section 831d of the Code of Civil Procedure was granted, and judgment was entered against defendant for the amount sued for. From this judgment defendant appeals and in support of its appeal contends that section 831d is unconstitutional because it deprives the defendant of a jury trial (Const. art. 1, § 7) and does not provide due process of law (Const. art. 1, § 13); and, further, that if section 831d is valid, an answer containing a complete and well-pleaded defense cannot be stricken out thereunder, and the counterclaim is a bar to proceedings under that section.

Section 831d was amended into its present form in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 857) and, so far as material here, reads as follows:

"When an answer is filed in an action to recover a debt or liquidated demand, if it is claimed that there is no defense to the action, on motion of plaintiff, supported by a verified complaint, or if not verified then by the affidavit of the plaintiff or of any other person having knowledge of the facts, the answer may be stricken out and judgment may be entered, in the discretion of the court, unless the defendant by affidavit shall show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to entitle him to defend.

"Such affidavit shall be made by the defendant, or by any other person, having knowledge of the facts, and shall set forth facts showing that the defendant has a good and substantial defense to the plaintiff's action (or to a portion thereof) upon the merits, as the deponent verily believes, and it shall appear in the affidavit that the facts pertaining to the action have been fully and fairly stated to defendant's counsel, naming him, and that the defendant upon such statement has been advised by such counsel that he has a defense to the action (or to some portion thereof) upon the merits. The facts so stated shall be the personal knowledge of the affiant, shall be set forth in the affidavit with particularity, and the affidavit shall show affirmatively that the affiant, if sworn as a witness, can testify competently thereto. If all facts relied upon as tending to establish such meritorious defense are not within the personal knowledge of one person, then such as are not within the knowledge of the person making the affidavit of merits shall be supported by the affidavit or affidavits of the person or persons qualified, as above, and said supporting affidavits shall be drawn with like particularity.

"If it appear that such defense applies only to a part of the plaintiff's claim, or that any part is admitted, the plaintiff may have judgment entered forthwith for so much of his claim as such defense does not apply to, or as is admitted, on such terms as may be just, and the cause of action may be severed accordingly. A judgment entered under this section is an appealable judgment, as in other cases."

[1-3] While this section provides a form of procedure that is novel in this state, it is the same in general effect, but with some variations in details, as rules of practice established in New York and New Jersey, which require a defendant, on plaintiff's motion for judgment, to file in addition to his answer an affidavit showing "such facts as may be deemed, by the judge hearing the motion, sufficient to entitle him to defend." There is also a rule in the District of Columbia which is the same in purpose but varies slightly in its description of the contents of the required affidavit. All of these rules have been sustained by the courts against the objection that they infringe the constitutional right of trial by jury, on the ground that they do not provide for a trial of the issue but for the means of making an issue or determining whether there is an issue. General Inv. Co. v. I. R. T. Co., 235 N. Y. 133, 139 N. E. 216;

Hanna v. Mitchell, 202 App. Div. 504, 196 N. Y. S. 43; Dwan v. Massarene, 199 App. Div. 872, 192 N. Y. S. 577; Wittemann v. Giele, 99 N. J. Law, 478, 123 A. 716; Eisele v. Raphael, 90 N. J. Law, 219, 101 A. 200; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. United States, 187 U. S. 315, 23 S. Ct. 120, 47 L. Ed. 194; Cropley v. Vogeler, 2 App. D. C. 28.

In General Inv. Co. v. I. R. T. Co., supra, the court, upholding rule 113 of the New York Rules of Civil Practice above referred to said:

> "The argument that rule 113 infringes upon the right of jury trial guaranteed by the Constitution cannot be sustained. The rule in question is simply one regulating and prescribing procedure, whereby the court may summarily determine whether or not a bona fide issue exists between the parties to the action. A determination by the court that such issue is presented requires the denial of an application for summary judgment and trial of the issue by the jury at the election of either party."

In Fidelity, etc., Co. v. United States, supra, the court, sustaining the rule of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, said:

> "If it were true that the rule deprived plaintiff in error of the right to trial by jury, we should pronounce it void without reference to cases. But it does not do so. It prescribes the means of making an issue. The issue made as prescribed, the right of trial by jury accrues."

Appellant points out no particular in which this section is wanting in due process of law, and we see none. The District of Columbia rule was upheld against this objection also in Fidelity, etc., Co. v. United States, supra. Judgment can be rendered under section 831d only on motion of the plaintiff and after a hearing. While nothing is expressly said in the section about notice of such a motion, we think its intention is to require such notice because it does expressly afford defendant an opportunity to make a showing by affidavit, which he might not be able to do were the motion to be made without notice. Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 536, 129 P. 981. This being so, sections 1005 and 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure require the notice to be in writing and served at least five days before the motion, and provide how such notice must be served. The essentials of due process of law are that the party proceeded against shall have reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard, in an orderly manner. People v. Troche, 206 Cal. 35, 42, 273 P. 767. Due process may include new methods of procedure, provided they are in harmony with the accepted underlying principles of such procedure according to the traditions of the common law. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. United States, supra; People v. Troche, supra. Moreover, the notice essential to due process of law is the original notice whereby the court acquires jurisdiction—in this case the summons by which the defendant was brought into court. The party has no constitutional right to demand notice of further proceedings thereafter, the question whether such notice shall be provided being a matter of legislative discretion. Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 318, 265 P. 246. We think section 831d is immune to attack on any of the constitutional grounds urged.

[4] Appellant cites a large number of cases holding that under the provision of our Code authorizing the striking out of answers as sham, an answer which states and properly pleads a good defense cannot be stricken out, and other cases holding that a judgment upon the pleadings cannot be given if the answer presents any material issue on the allegations of the complaint or sets up any affirmative matter constituting a defense. None of these cases, however, involve any such provision as that found in section 831d. That section provides an entirely new procedure, as far as the Codes of our state are concerned, the purpose of which is to eliminate all issues which have no basis in fact, no matter how well they may be pleaded in form. Under it, an answer may be stricken out, even though a perfect defense may be stated therein, unless the defendant by his affidavits shows facts to substantiate the defense.

[5] Appellant further suggests that the presence of a counterclaim in his answer prevents the entry of judgment under section 831d. This question has been several times considered by the courts of New York under the provisions of their rule 113 above referred to; and it has been held there that a counterclaim is a part of the answer, and its presence is no bar to a motion for a summary judgment where it is unsupported by statements of fact in the affidavit tending to show that it is meritorious or that the defendant is entitled to defend by reason thereof. Chelsea Exchange Bank v. Munoz, 202 App. Div. 702, 195 N. Y. S. 484; Goodman v. Wallack (Sup.) 195 N. Y. S. 328; Dell 'Osso v. Everett, 119 Misc. Rep. 502, 197 N. Y. S. 423; Smith v. Cranleigh, 224 App. Div. 376, 231 N. Y. S. 201. In Dell 'Osso v. Everett, supra, the trial court, while giving judgment, stayed execution of it until disposition of the counterclaim, and on appeal the Appellate Division reversed the part of the order staying execution, allowing the judgment to stand without any stay. 206 App. Div. 718, 200 N. Y. S. 840. Section 437 of our Code of Civil Procedure contains the same provision on which these New York authorities rely, making the counterclaim a part of the answer, and we are therefore satisfied with the rule of the New York cases and hold that the entire answer including the counterclaim may be stricken out by proceedings under section 831d.

[6] From the record in this case it appears that the defendant operated certain oil wells and the plaintiff operated a plant for the extraction of gasoline from the natural gas produced by oil wells, and that, under a contract made between predecessors in interest of the respective parties, defendant was delivering gas from its oil wells to the plaintiff for extraction of the gasoline therefrom. Plaintiff's action is based upon a claim for dry gas claimed to have been delivered by plaintiff to defendant in connection with the operations under this contract. Defendant's counterclaim is based upon a clause in the contract authorizing the plaintiff to use a reasonable amount of the gas received from defendant in the operation of the gasoline plant, and upon allegations to the effect that the plaintiff had used an unreasonable amount and thereby converted certain gas to its own use, for the value of which defendant sought judgment on its counterclaim. Appellant contends that the counterclaim, although so labeled by it, is really a cross-complaint, and therefore not subject to be stricken under section 831d. But the counterclaim is well within the provisions of sections 437 and 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to counterclaims, and was properly labelled by appellant.

[7-9] In response to the motion for summary judgment, the defendant filed an affidavit by its secretary, to which he attached a complete copy of the contract above mentioned, and in which, after stating his construction of the contract, he made the following statement relating to the counterclaim: "That the plaintiff, Cowan Oil and Refining Company, a corporation, instead of using defendant's dry gas in reasonable quantities, as provided for in said lease, fraudulently converted and appropriated to its own use and benefit large quantities of dry gas in excess of any reasonable quantity or amount necessary to operate its gasoline plant; that the quantity of defendant's dry gas in excess of any reasonable amount necessary to operate plaintiff's plant, so converted by plaintiff to its own use, was of the value of $1,897.35." This language is a copy of the answer, except for the words, "necessary to operate its gasoline plant" and the equivalent words a few lines below, and is the only statement in the affidavit purporting to support the counterclaim. The affidavit contains nothing in support of denials of the complaint which are contained in the answer. We think the statements quoted are insufficient to defeat the motion for judgment under section 831d. They are manifestly mere conclusions of law, or, putting the most favorable construction upon them, they are perhaps conclusions of fact or ultimate facts. Neither conclusions of law, nor conclusions of fact, nor so-called ultimate facts are sufficient to satisfy the requirements of this section. Not only does it require the defendant to show "such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to entitle him to defend," but it also requires that "the facts so stated shall be the personal knowledge of the affiant, shall be set forth in the affidavit with particularity, and the affidavit shall show affirmatively that the affiant, if sworn as a witness, can testify competently thereto." The effect of these provisions is to require a defendant, in order to defeat a motion for summary judgment, to present an affidavit or affidavits setting forth evidentiary facts sufficient, if accepted as true—as they must be for the purposes of the motion—to show that the defendant has a defense to the plaintiff's claim or to some part thereof. No witness could competently testify to the statements above quoted from the affidavit presented by defendant, in the form in which they are there made, and they are not evidentiary facts. To the rule just stated there may be exceptions in cases where a defendant presents to the court reasons sufficient to show that in the exercise of the discretion vested in it by the section, it should deny the motion for summary judgment even though the defendant is unable to make such a showing in opposition thereto as the section requires. Such a case is not before us, as there is nothing of that kind in defendant's affidavit, and hence we do not pass upon the matter further than to call attention to the provision as to discretion and suggest that there may be cases where a proper exercise of that discretion would call for a denial of the motion with a view to a trial upon the merits.

Substantially the same question has arisen upon the New York rule regarding summary judgments, which does not expressly require that the facts be particularly stated, be within the personal knowledge of affiant, or be such as he can competently testify to, and it is there held that statements of ultimate facts or mere general or specific denials or conclusions of law, or anything other than statements of evidentiary facts, are insufficient. O'Meara v. National Park Bank, 239 N. Y. 386, 146 N. E. 636, 39 A. L. R. 747; Sher v. Rodkin (Sup.) 198 N. Y. S. 597; Galusha Stove Co. v. Pivnik Construction Co., 132 Misc. Rep. 875, 230 N. Y. S. 720. A statute and rule the same as section 831d also exist in Michigan, and it is there held that mere conclusions in a defendant's affidavit are insufficient. Webster v. Pelavin, 241 Mich. 19, 216 N. W. 430.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed, with costs of appeal to respondent.

ADOLPH M. SCHWARTZ, Inc., v. BURNETT PHARMACY et al.

No. CA-287.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

1. Courts 🔑24, 37(1).

Jurisdiction of subject-matter cannot be conferred on municipal court by consent, agreement, or waiver of parties (St. 1925, p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2).

2. Appeal and error 🔑185(1).

Court's jurisdiction of subject-matter can be questioned on appeal, although no objection was made in trial court.

3. Appearance 🔑19(1).

Court's jurisdiction of person is conferred by general appearance.

4. Courts 🔑37(1).

Objection to court's jurisdiction of person is waived by seeking relief on any other ground than want of such jurisdiction.

5. Courts 🔑472(6).

Municipal court had jurisdiction of assignee's action to recover less than $50, since action being brought by assignee was not cognizable in small claims court (St. 1925, p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 927, 927f).

6. Courts 🔑472(6).

Cause of action arising within city or city and county wherein municipal court is established is excluded from jurisdiction of any other municipal court (St. 1925, p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2).

7. Abatement and revival 🔑3.

Demurrer to jurisdiction of court of general jurisdiction only lies where want of such jurisdiction appears affirmatively on face of complaint.

8. Courts 🔑33.

In court of limited and special jurisdiction, every fact essential to confer jurisdiction must be alleged.

9. Courts 🔑36.

In determining application of presumption as to jurisdiction, municipal courts are regarded as courts of superior or general jurisdiction (St. 1925, p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2; Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 12, as amended in 1924, and §§ 5, 13 as amended in 1928).

10. Courts 🔑33.

Jurisdiction of municipal courts in civil cases need not affirmatively appear from pleadings or other proceedings before them (St. 1925 p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2; Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 12, as amended in 1924 and §§ 5, 13, as amended in 1928).

11. Courts 🔑33.

Municipal court had jurisdiction to render summary judgment in civil case, although fact showing court's jurisdiction was not alleged, there being no showing of lack of jurisdiction (St. 1925, p. 658, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2; Code Civ. Proc. § 831d; Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 12, as amended in 1924, and §§ 5, 13 as amended in 1928).

Action by Adolph M. Schwartz, Inc., against the Burnett Pharmacy and others. From an order vacating and setting aside a summary judgment and dismissing the action, the plaintiff appeals.

SHAW, J.

The complaint in this action shows that plaintiff seeks to recover on an assigned claim the sum of $47.26. The cause of action is set forth in three forms, each of which is an action at law for breach of contract. The complaint is entirely devoid of allegations to show where the cause of action arose or where any defendant resides or has his place of business. The defendant Paschall filed an answer, and thereafter, by summary proceedings taken against him under section 831d of the Code of Civil Procedure, judgment was rendered against him. Thereupon he made a motion to vacate the judgment on the ground that the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles had no jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause. No showing outside of the pleadings was made in support of this motion. It was granted, and the plaintiff appeals from the order granting it and dismissing the action.

The sole question presented on the appeal is whether the municipal court had jurisdiction to render the judgment. The jurisdiction of municipal courts in civil cases is fixed by section 29 of the Municipal Court Act (St. 1925, p. 658) as amended in 1929 (Stats. 1929, p. 838, § 2), which, so far as material here, reads as follows:

"Each municipal court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil cases and actions, arising within the city or city and county in which such municipal court is established, of the following classes:

"1. All cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to two thousand dollars or less.

"2. * * *

"In cities or cities and counties wherein such municipal court is established, and wherein an inferior court has been established and its jurisdiction determined as provided by law, such municipal court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with such inferior court to the extent of its jurisdiction.

"Each municipal court shall have original jurisdiction of all cases specified in subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 hereinabove, arising outside the city in which a municipal court is established, and within the county in which such municipal court is established, and also of all such cases arising outside the county in which a municipal court is established, in which any proper defendant named therein resides or has his place of business within the county wherein such municipal court is established.

"Each municipal court shall have original jurisdiction, concurrent with that of justices' or other inferior courts in the county in which such municipal court is established, of all civil cases of which such justices' or other inferior courts are given jurisdiction, excepting civil cases of which such justices' or other inferior courts are given exclusive jurisdiction, and excepting cases cognizable in such courts, sitting as small claims courts."

[1-4] By the terms of this statute, the jurisdiction of a municipal court may be affected by three matters: First, the nature (including in that term the amount in controversy) of the cause of action; second, the place where it arose; and, third, the place where the defendant resides or has his place of business. The first of the matters just stated no doubt goes to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and so does the second. Such jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, agreement, or waiver of the parties (7 Cal. Jur. 597, 598; 15 Cor. Jur. 894; Fritts v. Camp [1892] 94 Cal. 393, 398, 29 P. 867; King v. Kutner-Goldstein Co. [1901] 135 Cal. 65, 67 P. 10; Taylor v. Taylor [1923] 192 Cal. 71, 78, 218 P. 756, 51 A. L. R. 1074; Harrington v. Superior Court [1924] 194 Cal. 185, 188, 228 P. 15; Stimpson, etc., Co. v. Superior Court [1910] 12 Cal. App. 536, 539, 107 P. 1013; Lewis v. Shaw [1926] 77 Cal. App. 99, 102, 246 P. 86), and it can be questioned on appeal, although no objection was made in the trial court (2 Cal. Jur. 251; Hallock v. Jaudin [1867] 34 Cal. 167, 173; Stephens v. Weyl-Zuckerman Co. [1917] 34 Cal. App. 210, 167 P. 171; Maguire v. Cunningham [1923] 64 Cal. App. 536, 539, 222 P. 838). The third matter mentioned above unquestionably relates only to jurisdiction of the person, which is conferred by a general appearance and the objection to which is waived by seeking relief on any other ground than want of such jurisdiction. In re Thompson's Estate, 101 Cal. 349, 354, 35 P. 991, 36 P. 98, 508; Faxon v. All Persons (1913) 166 Cal. 707, 711, 137 P. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209; Roberts v. Superior Court (1916) 30 Cal. App. 714, 720, 159 P. 465; Bogmuda v. Young (1922) 58 Cal. App. 19, 207 P. 915; Gulick v. Justice's Court (1929) 101 Cal. App. 619, 281 P. 1031. Since the defendant in the present case made a general appearance, no question can arise as to jurisdiction of his person.

[5] The complaint in this case shows that the plaintiff seeks to recover less than $50; and it is contended that by reason of this fact the case is cognizable in a small claims court, under section 927 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which fixes that sum as the maximum size of the claim which may be litigated in those courts. On this proposition is based the further contention that the case is excluded from the jurisdiction of the municipal court by the second exception contained in the last sentence above quoted from the Municipal Court Act. Passing other possible answers to this argument, it is provided by section 927f of the Code of Civil Procedure that "no claim shall be filed or prosecuted in such small claims court by the assignee of such claim." This action is brought by an assignee, and is therefore not cognizable in any small claims court.

The jurisdiction of a municipal court which is concurrent with justices' and other inferior courts in the county is also subject to an exception of cases in which such courts have exclusive jurisdiction. There is no such exclusive civil jurisdiction of justices' courts (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 103, 112), but certain police courts and other city courts are given exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions to collect licenses, forfeitures, and penalties imposed by city ordinances. As far as we have discovered, this is the only class of civil cases in which exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on the inferior courts, and this case is not of that class, so this exception does not affect it.

[6] Since each municipal court has exclusive jurisdiction of a cause of action arising within the city or city and county wherein it is established, all such cases must by necessary implication be excluded from the jurisdiction of any other municipal court. Consequently, the possibility suggests itself that the cause of action here sued on may have arisen in Long Beach or San Francisco, in each of which places there is a municipal court. An objection on this ground goes to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and is not waived by answer. The complaint in this case is silent as to the place where the cause of action arose, and hence the real question is whether it is necessary for a complaint in a municipal court to show affirmatively that the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

[7, 8] It is the rule that "a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the court only lies where the want of such jurisdiction appears affirmatively upon the face of the complaint. In a court of limited and special jurisdiction, the rule is otherwise; there, every fact essential to confer the jurisdiction must be alleged. In courts of general jurisdiction, the cause of action need only be stated, and the want of jurisdiction, arising from the insufficient value of the premises, must be taken advantage of in some other way." Doll v. Feller (1860) 16 Cal. 432. In that case a complaint in a district court showed that it related to real estate, but did not allege what was its value, and the demurrer for want of jurisdiction was based on this omission; the jurisdiction of the district courts being then limited to cases where the amount in dispute exceeded $200. Article 6, § 6, Constitution of 1849.

The question what courts are entitled to the benefit of the presumption in favor of jurisdiction has been much discussed, and the decisions on it are not entirely harmonious. This presumption applies to the judgments of the favored courts when they are collaterally attacked, as well as on a demurrer or motion directly attacking the jurisdiction; in fact, most of the decisions on the point arise out of collateral attacks. In Hahn v. Kelly (1868) 34 Cal. 391, at pages 409 to 415, 94 Am. Dec. 742, there is an extensive and well-reasoned discussion of the matter, from which it appears that the presumption has been variously declared to apply to superior courts, to courts of general jurisdiction, or to courts proceeding according to the course of the common law. The final conclusion reached in Hahn v. Kelly is that the presumption of regularity attaches to the proceedings of courts of record as distinguished from courts and tribunals not of record (page 414 of 34 Cal.); and, so far as we can discover, this rule has not been departed from in California. The Supreme Court there stated that district courts, probate courts, and county courts, which as then constituted were courts of record, should be considered as superior courts in the sense of this rule, while courts held by justices of the peace and various boards exercising judicial functions of a limited and special character are inferior courts.

In Vassault v. Austin (1869) 36 Cal. 691, 696, and McCauley v. Fulton (1872) 44 Cal. 355, 361, it was held that the superior court of San Francisco, which existed from 1850 to 1857, which was a court of record having a seal and clerk, and which had the same jurisdiction as the district courts, except that as to real estate it was limited to San Francisco, was a court of general jurisdiction so that its judgments imported absolute verity against collateral attack, although other decisions not questioned or overruled had upheld the power of the Legislature to create this court on the ground that it was an inferior court within the meaning of a constitutional provision authorizing the Legislature to establish "such municipal and other inferior courts as may be necessary." Both of these cases were decided in reliance upon the decision in Hahn v. Kelly, supra.

In People v. Blackwell (1864) 27 Cal. 65, 67; Barrett v. Carney (1867) 33 Cal. 530, 537; and Yenawine v. Richter (1872) 43 Cal. 314, it was held that county courts, being courts of record, were to be considered courts of superior jurisdiction and the presumption of regularity attached to their judgments. Accordingly, it was presumed in Barrett v. Carney, supra, the record being silent as to the place of residence of an insolvent who filed his petition in a county court, that he resided in the county where the court was held, this fact being necessary under the insolvency act to give that court jurisdiction over the proceeding. At the time these decisions were made, the county courts were given by the Constitution original jurisdiction of a few enumerated classes of cases and "of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for; and also such criminal jurisdiction as the legislature may prescribe," and appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' courts and other inferior courts; but the district courts had general trial jurisdiction of all equity cases and of all law cases involving certain questions or in which the amount in controversy was $300 or more, and in all criminal cases not otherwise provided for. Constitution of 1849, art. 6, §§ 6 and 8, as amended in 1862. Thus the situation of the county courts in the framework of the judicial system was very much like that of the present municipal courts, which, although without appellate jurisdiction, have such jurisdiction as the Legislature may confer upon them, while the superior courts remain the courts of general trial jurisdiction without upper limit as to the amount in civil cases and have jurisdiction of all criminal cases amounting to felony. Constitution, art. 6, §§ 5 and 13, as amended in 1928.

In Simpson v. Payne (1926) 79 Cal. App. 780, 786, 251 P. 324, it was declared that municipal courts established under the amendment of 1924 to section 11, art. 6, of the Constitution, are not inferior courts as that term is used in section 7½, art. 11, of the Constitution. In re Luna (1927) 201 Cal. 405, 409, 410, 257 P. 76, the Supreme Court said the municipal courts just referred to, are "of some greater dignity than an inferior court," and, "although inferior to superior courts, are nevertheless superior to inferior courts." These two cases did not involve the question as to the presumption attaching to the proceedings of municipal courts, and they are, therefore, not authority for our conclusion in the matter, but they are at least consistent therewith.

Finally, the Constitution itself (article 6, § 12, as amended in 1924) provides that "the supreme court, the district courts of appeal, the superior courts, the municipal courts, and such other courts as the legislature shall prescribe, shall be courts of record." The only change made by this amendment was the insertion of the words "the municipal courts," and its purpose could only have been to make the municipal courts courts of record without action by the Legislature and beyond its power to provide otherwise. The Constitution nowhere declares what powers or attributes shall accrue to a court by reason of its being "of record." It is, however, instructive to note that the Constitution of 1849 contained no such provision as that last quoted, and that the case of Hahn v. Kelly, supra, declaring that the true distinction as to the presumption above mentioned is between courts of record and courts not of record, was decided before 1879. It is a fair conclusion that the framers of the Constitution of 1879 had this rule in mind when they declared certain courts to be courts of record, and intended thereby to make the decision in Hahn v. Kelly applicable to those courts; and it follows that the framers of the amendment of 1924 intended that the same rule should be applied also to municipal courts. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that in none of the constitutional amendments which have been made to authorize the establishment of municipal courts or to regulate their jurisdiction have they been referred to as inferior courts, although that term appears at several places in the Constitution. Section 1 of article 6, as amended in 1924, lists the courts of the state as including "such municipal courts as may be established * * * and such inferior courts as the legislature may establish." Section 3 of article 6, as amended in 1928, refers in one place to "municipal or to justices' or other inferior courts," and in another place refers to cases arising "in municipal and in justices' and other inferior courts." Section 13 of article 6, as amended in 1928, refers to the "jurisdiction of municipal courts and inferior courts in cities having municipal courts." Neither in these provisions nor in any other part of the Constitution, as far as we have discovered, is language used which suggests that the municipal courts are to be classified as inferior courts.

[9-11] For the foregoing reasons, we hold that, for the purpose of applying the presumption as to jurisdiction, the municipal courts are to be regarded as courts of superior or general jurisdiction, that the same presumption attaches to their proceedings as is accorded to other courts of that class, and hence that the jurisdiction of the municipal courts need not affirmatively appear from the pleadings or other proceedings before them. It is sufficient that the lack of jurisdiction does not so appear. This statement refers only to civil cases; the rule perhaps being otherwise in criminal cases, even as to courts of general jurisdiction, at least when the territorial jurisdiction of the court is in question. See People v. Wong Wang (1891) 92 Cal. 277, 28 P. 270.

pellant, Walters, and his nonappealing codefendants had on seven specified occasions asked and received of the complaining witness usurious interest on loans varying in the principal involved from fifteen to twenty five dollars. The main question in the case is presented by appellant's contention that the several transactions were not loans but were payments for the assignments of earned wages, and that the sums received by him were these wages.

The prosecuting witness, Otto Neuman, testified that he first went to the office of J. M. Adams & Co. in April, 1929, and asked the appellant, who was an employee of the company, for a loan of more than $20 (Tr. p. 9), but was told that, on account of his salary, only $15 was forthcoming. His testimony continues: "This amount was to be paid back each week at the rate of $15.75. * * * You pay the full amount back each week, Your Honor. Pay the full amount back each week, including seventy-five cents. In other words, paying $15.75." Question by appellant's counsel: "What was the amount you borrowed?" Answer: "The full amount to be paid back weekly." (Tr. p. 10.) Later: "I received my money, in the amount of $15 and left, to be paid back from my coming pay day." "When was that?" "It was supposed to be on Saturday, and I explained to them also at the time in case I could not get in there on Saturday I would be in on Monday, which they accepted." (Tr. pp. 11, 12.) The prosecuting witness then related how for almost a year he returned every Saturday or Monday (with a few exceptions when he sent his wife), and paid back the sum he had received the week before, at first $15, then later $25, and in addition 75 cents or $1.25. (Tr. p. 22.) The few times his wife went for him she did not repay the principal sum received the week before, nor receive any money, but "all I did was to go and tell (appellant) who it was for and hand him the money," the money so handed being $1.25. (Tr. p. 46.)

At each weekly trip made by the prosecuting witness he signed two forms, physically attached together by a perforated line. (Tr. p. 26.) Sixteen of these documents were received in evidence. The first form was an application to assign to J. M. Adams & Co. salary or wages represented to have been earned during the month named. The name of the employer, I. X. L. Awnings, also appeared on this first form. In the second form, also signed by the prosecuting witness, it was recited that "my account for salary or wages already earned by me, during the month of ——192—, and amounting to $26.25, and due to me by ——," was assigned to J. M. Adams & Co. The blanks indicated were not filled in on any of the "assignments" in evidence. No written notice that any of these purported assignments had been made was received by the employer (Tr. p. 73), and each week the account for salary or wages was collected by the prosecuting witness himself and brought to the J. M. Adams & Co.

With this picture of events before them, the jurors were warranted in concluding that the assignments were but paper cloaks too thin to conceal the corpora delicti, loans on which an unlawful rate of interest was collected. Authority is not needed to support this conclusion, but, by way of cases illustrating by their facts the identical practice engaged in by defendant here, and regarded by the courts with the same disfavor, we find: Cotton v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App. 1913) 160 S. W. 597; McWhite v. State (1921) 143 Tenn. 222, 226 S. W. 542; Tennessee Finance Co. v. Thompson (C. C. A. 1922) 278 F. 597.

[2] The sixteen assignment forms in evidence were offered by the people, with the expressed approval of the defendant, but were never, so far as appears, either read to the jurors or placed in their hands for perusal. After the court had instructed the jury, defense counsel stated that the jurors had not heard or seen the contents of these documents, and requested that they be sent to the jury room with the jurors who were about to retire. The court's reply was: "I have stated the jury may have them at their request. If they request them, they may have them, otherwise they will not be shown to the jury." Of this ruling defendant complains, relying upon section 1137 of the Penal Code, which begins: "Upon retiring for deliberation, the jury may take with them all papers (except depositions) which have been received as evidence in the cause."

In People v. Cochran (1882) 61 Cal. 548, the word "may" in this section was emphasized, and the court said (page 551): "The statute is not mandatory. It directs the Court to allow the jury to take with them any papers received as evidence which may be of service to them, * * * but none can be taken without permission of the Court. The matter is therefore left to the sound discretion of the Court, and its action is not revisable, unless there has been an abuse of discretion." The following quotation from the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice McKinstry in the Cochran Case appears in People v. Dunlop (1915) 27 Cal. App. 460, 470, 150 P. 389, 393: "It is not the absolute right of the prosecution or defense to have the papers or instructions sent with the jury, unless the jury demand it." We are of the opinion, therefore, that the defendant has no ground of complaint in the court's ruling. It should be noted, in this connection, that we are discussing the court's ruling on a request not made during the course of the trial. Appellant could have read the exhibits to the jury, of course, as a part of his case, but did not. He could have used them in argument, but he waived argument. Furthermore, we are satisfied that, had the jury both seen and heard read these exhibits, it would not have affected their verdict.

[3] We have considered the other arguments presented by appellant in his points and authorities, and find none with merit or worthy of consideration here. The grounds listed in his statement on appeal and not touched upon in his points and authorities we have considered as abandoned, and have not searched the record to see if they are well taken. People v. Mechler (1925) 75 Cal. App. 181, 188, 242 P. 503; People v. Williams (1929) 96 Cal. App. 215, 218, 273 P. 1087.

The judgment is affirmed.

Award affirmed.

McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is a petition by the employer to review an award of compensation made by respondent commission to the heirs of a deceased employee.

The employee was Captain Albert Pelle, master of the Union Oil Company's barge Santa Paula. His vessel was used to carry oil to ships and wharves in various parts of San Francisco bay. On January 15, 1928, she was brought to the foot of Seventeenth street, where the balance of her oil was discharged about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. There being nothing further to do on board until the following morning, the crew went ashore to spend the night. Captain Pelle also left the ship, spent the afternoon at his home in Oakland, and returned to San Francisco in the evening. He went to a water front hotel, played cards and had a few drinks, and at about 10 p. m., together with his friend Twigg, strolled down to the wharf where the barge was tied. Among other things, it appears that they intended to make a cup of coffee on board. The deck of the barge was about eighteen inches higher than the level of the wharf, and the usual method of getting aboard was to stand on the wharf, grasp the barge's stanchions, and then step on deck. Twigg preceded Captain Pelle and climbed on board in this manner. Shortly afterwards he heard Captain Pelle exclaim "Oh," and turning, saw his head disappear over the edge of the wharf, and heard a splash. The captain had apparently fallen through the open space between two piles. It was stipulated that the death was due to drowning.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Respondent commission took jurisdiction and found that the death occurred in the course of the deceased's employment. Jurisdiction was based upon the ground that the act which gave rise to the cause of action took place on the land. The finding that the death occurred in the course of employment was made on the theory that the captain had gone to the barge to sleep there during the night, in order to arise early and direct its departure in the morning.

[1] The jurisdictional problem presented by this case is one on which our research has failed to disclose any authority directly in point. The deceased was a seaman, engaged in maritime work, and died as a result of drowning in navigable waters of the United States. The cause of action for his death would ordinarily come within the admiralty jurisdiction. See London Guarantee, etc., Co. v. Brooke, 279 U. S. 109, 49 S. Ct. 296, 73 L. Ed. 632. To this rule there is the well-settled exception that, if an injury is initiated and consummated on land, it comes within the state jurisdiction. Respondent commission proceeded upon the theory that Captain Pelle fell from the wharf, and that the injury was therefore initiated and consummated with reference to the wharf and not the barge or the navigable waters. The chief reliance is on the case of T. Smith & Sons, Inc., v. Taylor, 276 U. S. 179, 48 S. Ct. 228, 229, 72 L. Ed. 520, where an employee at work on a stage resting upon a wharf was struck by a sling operated on the vessel and knocked off the stage into the water. The court said: "Plaintiff in error * * * argues that as no claim was made for injuries sustained while deceased was on land and as the suit was solely for death that occurred in the river, the case is exclusively within the admiralty jurisdiction. But this is a partial view that cannot be sustained. The blow by the sling was what gave rise to the cause of action. It was given and took effect while deceased was upon the land. It was the sole, immediate and proximate cause of his death. * * * The substance and consummation of the occurrence which gave rise to the cause of action took place on land."

The correctness of this principle cannot be questioned, and it is clearly applicable to the situation presented by the instant case if the commission is correct in its determination, as a fact, that the injury was initiated and consummated on the wharf. There was no direct evidence as to how Captain Pelle met his death. Twigg, the only witness at the scene, said in his testimony: "* * * When we got to the vessel I said to the captain, 'Get aboard,' and he said, 'You get aboard first,' and I got on, and after I got on all I could hear was 'Oh,' and all I could see was his head and he went overboard." From this testimony it might be inferred that Captain Pelle had actually reached the barge, had his feet upon it, and slipped, falling from the barge; or that he slipped on the wharf, and fell from it. The commission chose the latter inference and contends that this determination is within its conclusive fact-finding power.

[2, 3] It cannot be denied that the commission may base its findings upon inferences drawn from circumstantial evidence. George L. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17; United Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 92 Cal. App. 110, 267 P. 763; Mailman v. Record Foundry & Machine Co. et al., 118 Me. 172, 106 A. 606; Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L. R. A. 1916D, 641; Vulcan Detinning Co. v. Industrial Commission et al., 295 Ill. 141, 128 N. E. 917; See Ross, Rules of Evidence Before Workmen's Compensation Commissions, 36 Harv. L. Rev. 263, 266. It is, of course, essential that the inference be a probable one; there must be something in the evidence which leads to the choice of one inference instead of another. In re Sanderson's Case, 224 Mass. 558, 113 N. E. 355; Sponatski's Case, 220 Mass. 526, 108 N. E. 466, L. R. A. 1916A, 333; Hills v. Blair et al., 182 Mich. 20, 148 N. W. 243; Madison Coal Corporation v. Industrial Commission et al., 320 Ill. 298, 150 N. E. 645; Allen v. Robert Gage Coal Co., 218 Mich. 347, 188 N. W. 388; Voelz v. Industrial Commission et al., 161 Wis. 240, 152 N. W. 830.

In Mailman v. Record Foundry & Machine Co. et al., supra, where the award of the commission was upheld, the court said at page 609 of 106 A.: "In cases wherein the evidence is circumstantial, and not direct, the line between inference and conjecture is sometimes obscure. * * * If, however, a state of facts is shown more consistent with the commissioner's finding than with any other theory, and the finding is supported by rational and natural inferences from facts proved or admitted, an appeal cannot be sustained." In Roebling's Sons Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 36 Cal. App. 10, 171 P. 987, 989, the award of the commission was annulled by a decision of the District Court of Appeal. This court, while in accord with the judgment, nevertheless rendered an opinion in denying a hearing which reads in part as follows: "* * * We deem it proper to say that we do not understand the rule to be that if different conclusions may rationally and fairly be drawn from the evidence, one sustaining the right to compensation and the other being opposed thereto, the Industrial Accident Commission is not at liberty to adopt the conclusion favorable to the claim. Of course it is well settled that the commission can do this very thing, and that its conclusion in that regard is beyond the scope of our review." (Italics ours.)

[4] It thus appears that both in this court and in other jurisdictions the power of the commission to draw reasonable inferences from the evidence has been liberally viewed. In the instant case, the commission concluded from the evidence before it that Captain Pelle had not reached the barge, but fell from the wharf. Is this a probable inference from the evidence? The record discloses that there was enough space between the piles on the wharf for the body of the decedent to slip through; that the deck of the barge was over a foot higher than the wharf; and that to attain the deck of the barge it was necessary to grasp the stanchions and climb onto it. There is no evidence that the deceased ever took hold of the barge's stanchions. The last place in which we find him, prior to his disappearing between the piles, is on the wharf; and, since there is no evidence that he had reached the barge, the inference that he fell from the wharf is sufficiently probable to warrant us in sustaining the award of the commission.

[5] With respect to the finding that the deceased met his death in the course of his employment, we are satisfied that the conclusion reached by the commission should be upheld. The record shows that Captain Pelle was not required to remain on board the barge that night by reason of the rules of his employer. It was permissible for him to go to his home in Oakland, and he might have stayed there and met the barge at Oleum, to which point it was to be towed in the morning. On the other hand, the tug was to take out the barge at about 6 a. m., and, if he desired to take charge of his ship at this time, it would have been impossible for him to stay at home, for the transbay transportation service would get him to the barge after 6:30 a. m. It appears that it was largely discretionary with the captain as to whether he would take the boat out or not, but his discretion was to be exercised for the best interests of his employer. The witness Rosland, clerk for the marine department of the company, testified that the captain was subject to duty "at any time"; that it was up to him where he thought it was best for him to be at the time the vessel departed; that the dispatcher would tell the captain what time the barge would leave, and that, if the captain's judgment was that he had to be there several hours before that time, it was up to him. Hence it appears that whether the work of the deceased demanded his presence on board that night was to a large extent subject to his own determination, and that whether he came to such a determination is the important question. On this point the witness Twigg testified: "I asked him why he was at the place at that hour. I thought he probably came in and was on the way home. He said, 'I am going aboard the ship because I have to get out early in the morning, and I could not make it if I stayed at home.'"

[6] It is well settled that, if an employee is required to live or board on the premises of his employer, either by the terms of his contract of employment or the necessities of the work, an injury received while on the premises may be compensable, though the employee is not at work at the time of the injury. State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Industrial Accident Commission, 194 Cal. 28, 227 P. 168; Giliotti v. Hoffman Catering Co., 246 N. Y. 279, 158 N. E. 621, 56 A. L. R. 500; 27 Cal. Jur. 392. Of course, if the employer's premises were chosen for mere convenience or comfort, with full opportunity to secure other quarters, a different situation is presented. See Associated Oil Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 557, 217 P. 744. In the instant case, however, there was a definite compulsion upon the deceased to come on board that night. The fact that the compulsion did not arise out of a direct order from his employer is not conclusive; it was none the less a compulsion when it arose out of a required exercise of discretion by the employee himself. It can hardly be disputed that, when a captain of a vessel comes to board her at night for the purpose of directing her departure on time in the morning, he is rendering service in the course of his employment. The commission so found upon sufficient evidence, and we see no reason to disturb its conclusion.

The award is therefore affirmed.

CHRISTIN v. STORY.

L. A. 11597.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 26, 1931.

Appeal and error 🔑781(4).

Defendant's appeal in action to forfeit rights under land contract would not be dismissed because time for final payment had expired.

> Motion to dismiss was made on ground that since taking of appeal, time for final payment under contract had expired, and that whole matter was therefore moot; but appellant contended that plaintiff by her conduct had waived right to declare forfeiture, and reviewing court would not investigate and consider merits of appeal on motion to dismiss.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Action by Estelle Porter Christin against Charles W. Story to forfeit rights under a contract to purchase real property in which defendant appealed from an adverse judgment. On motion to dismiss.

Motion denied.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, Horace S. Wilson, of Los Angeles, and Charles A. Christin and Arthur Dunn, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a motion to dismiss defendant's appeal from a judgment of forfeiture.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract by which the former agreed to sell, and the latter to buy, certain described real property for the sum of $100,000, principal and interest payments to be made in stated installments. The contract was executed in 1927, and the final payment was due on or before June 1, 1930. Time was of the essence, and provision was made for forfeiture in the event of default. Following defendant's default in the payment of certain installments of interest and taxes, the plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of the property and to have defendant's rights under the contract declared forfeited. Upon the trial defendant urged that by accepting a tardy and insufficient installment payment of interest, and thereafter repeatedly acquiescing in defendant's default to make payments as required, the plaintiff had waived the provisions making time of the essence and authorizing a forfeiture. The trial court found for the plaintiff on this issue, and gave judgment accordingly, whereupon defendant appealed. Since the taking of the appeal the time for making the final payment under the contract has expired, and respondent asks that the appeal be dismissed on the ground that the whole matter is therefore moot.

In United States v. Ackerman, 208 Cal. 99, 101, 280 P. 359, we declined to investigate and consider the merits of an appeal upon a motion to dismiss. This principle has application to the present motion. Appellant contends that respondent, by her conduct, has waived all right to declare a forfeiture. The determination of this point goes to the merits of the appeal, and we must therefore decline to pass on the point in advance of a consideration of the appeal on its merits. Therefore we cannot now say that appellant is precluded from asserting any and all rights under the contract, and the motion must, for this reason, be denied.

The motion is denied.

CHURCH v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF FRESNO COUNTY et al.

L. A. 12502.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 22, 1931.

Justices of the peace 🔑2.

City justice court for city of Fresno held to continue to exist, notwithstanding provision of city charter creating city police court (Fresno City Charter, art. 8, § 74; Code Civ. Proc. § 103).

Fresno City Charter, art. 8, § 74, providing for establishment of city police court with concurrent jurisdiction with township justices' courts and like authority, power, and jurisdiction in the city as township justices' courts, did not create such a court as would do away with office of justice of peace of city.

John G. Groene, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J.

Application for a writ of mandate to issue herein, directed to the board of supervisors of the county of Fresno and the members thereof, requiring them and each of them to take action in the matter of the appointment of some competent person as justice of the peace of the city of Fresno, to fill the vacancy alleged to exist in such office. The answer of the respondent to the order to show cause issued herein is to the effect that there is no such existing office in said city, and hence no vacancy to fill which the respondents should be commanded by said writ.

The single question presented for consideration herein is as to whether by the terms of the city charter of the city of Fresno a city police court has been created, the jurisdiction of which and of the judge thereof was made equal and coextensive with that which would be exercised, and prior to the enactment of said provision of the city charter had been exercised, by a city justice's court and judge thereof existing and acting under the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We do not deem it necessary to again review the recent decision of the District Court of Appeal in the case of Robertson v. Langford, 95 Cal. App. 414, 273 P. 150, or Ex parte Romero, 207 Cal. 341, 278 P. 430, or In re Lovall, 207 Cal. 544, 279 P. 452, or Proctor v. Justice Court of City of Berkeley, 209 Cal. 39, 285 P. 312, or Antilla v. Justice Court (Cal. Sup.) 290 P. 43, since it is conceded that the effect of these decisions is to establish the proposition that unless the charter of a city in its attempted creation of a city police court therein shall invest such court with a jurisdiction which shall in all respects be coextensive with that with which city justices' courts theretofore existing therein under the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure possessed and exercised, such city justices' court would not be supplanted thereby, but would continue to exist and function notwithstanding the provisions of such charter creating such police courts therein. The foregoing proposition having been thus established and conceded, it only remains for us to examine the provisions of the charter of the city of Fresno relating to the establishment of a city police court therein in the light of such provisions found in the city charters of those other cities which came under review in the foregoing decisions in order to determine whether and to what extent the provisions of the charter of the city of Fresno are affected thereby. The Fresno city charter by the provisions of section 74 of article 8, after providing for the establishment of a city police court within said city, proceeds to state: "Within the city limits, said court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with township justices' courts in all matters and things in which said justice courts now or hereafter may have jurisdiction; and said police court shall have in addition to the special jurisdiction conferred in this article, like authority, power and jurisdiction in the city as now or hereafter may be conferred upon township justices' courts." When the above provision is compared with the like provisions of those other city charters which came under review in the foregoing decisions, it will be found that it is substantially identical with the provisions of the charter of the city of Richmond, and to be quite similar in its substance and effect to the charter of the city of Stockton. The Fresno city charter and the Richmond city charter each employed the phrase "within the city limits said court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with township justice's courts," etc. The Fresno charter goes somewhat further in providing that the police court thereby established shall have "like authority, power and jurisdiction in the city as now or hereafter may be conferred upon township justices' courts." The Stockton charter employs a somewhat different phraseology in providing that the police court in said city "shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors * * * committed within the corporate limits of the city," and further providing that said police court shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases concurrently with the justice courts in "all actions and proceedings arising within the corporate limits of the city." We are unable to discover any substantial dissimilarity between the provisions of these three charters as the same are above set forth, and this being so, we are of the opinion that our decision in the matter of Ex parte Romero, supra, and particularly, our most recent decision in the matter of Ex parte Lovall, supra, have full and direct application to the question presented in the instant proceeding, and hence it must be concluded that the city justice court in and for the city of Fresno, created under the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, continues to exist and should be permitted and equipped to function notwithstanding the aforesaid provision of the city charter of Fresno creating a city police court therein.

It follows that the petitioner is entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandate in accordance with the prayer of his petition. Let the writ issue accordingly.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

Action by Edna Leota Squires, as administratrix of the estate of George E. Squires, deceased, against Winnie Riffe and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal herewith adopted, see, 287 P. 360.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, and L. H. Honey, of Stockton (A. Dal. Thomson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

W. H. Hazell, of Lakeport, for defendant Tallman.

M. H. Iverson, of Ukiah, and Benjamin C. Jones, of Lakeport, for respondent Squires.

PER CURIAM.

An order of transfer of this cause was made on account of the reference in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal to the cases of Smellie v. Southern Pacific Company (Cal. Sup.) 287 P. 343, and Krause v. Rarity (Cal. App.) 285 P. 879. At the time of the order of transfer, these two cases were before us, in the former of which a rehearing had been granted, and in the latter a transfer had been ordered. These cases were cited in support of the conclusion that section 141¾ of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1929, p. 1580) was not applicable to the instant case. Since the transfer of this case to this court, we have decided the case of Krause v. Rarity, which is reported in 293 P. 62, and have held therein that said section 141¾ does not affect pending actions. We deem it unnecessary, therefore, to further discuss that question. We have therefore eliminated from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal all reference to said question. We adopt the remaining portion of said opinion as the opinion of this court. It was written by Presiding Justice Finch, concurred in by Justices Plummer and Thompson, and with the exception above noted is as follows:

The plaintiff recovered judgment for damages in the sum of $5,000 for the death of her husband, George E. Squires, alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of an automobile owned by the defendant Winnie Riffe and driven by the defendant Tallman. Winnie Riffe has appealed from the judgment.

At the time of and prior to the accident the appellant owned and conducted a hotel at Upper Lake, Lake county. Tallman is the appellant's brother. He had been doing "odd jobs and errands" for her for many years, sometimes using her automobile in going on such errands. She also permitted Tallman and his wife to use her automobile "on their private errands." Tallman's wife was a waitress in the hotel. Yee Ock was employed by the appellant as a cook in the hotel.

Tallman, his wife, Squires, and Yee Ock left Upper Lake in appellant's automobile shortly before 10 o'clock in the evening on September 15, 1928. It does not appear at whose invitation Squires rode in the machine. They drove to several places during the night, and as they were returning to Upper Lake between the hours of 4:30 and 5 the next morning, at a place where the road turns sharply to the right over a bridge, Tallman lost control of the automobile and it went over the left side of the bridge. Squires was crushed beneath the automobile and killed. Part of the road near the bridge was covered with loose gravel, and, in passing through it, the rear end of the automobile skidded so far to the left that, while the front wheels went upon the bridge, the left rear wheel missed it, thereby causing the machine to topple over into the bed of the creek below. The automobile was a Jewett sedan, equipped with balloon tires. The evidence shows that the right rear tire was flat, it having been punctured by a large nail, apparently as the machine was approaching the bridge, the nail being of the kind used in the structure of the bridge. One of the witnesses testified that the flat tire "would have a tendency to throw you back and to the left." Tallman testified that he slowed down to "10 or 15 miles an hour" as he approached the bridge. There is sufficient evidence to support a finding either that the accident was caused by the flat tire, or that it was due to the negligence of Tallman in rounding the curve at too high a speed.

Mrs. Tallman testified:

"Q. Did this Yee Ock ask to accompany you on this trip? A. No sir.

"Q. How did he happen to go? A. Mrs. Riffe said if we were going to take him with us. * * *

"Q. What words did she use in that connection, if you remember? A. Not exactly. She asked if we were going. I said the lights were not good in our car. She said if we were going any place in the evening to take her car and take the little China boy (Yee Ock) along with us."

Relative to the same matter, the appellant testified:

"Q. On the occasion of permitting your car to be used on the evening before the accident happened, did you give you any order to any person as to who should be taken in the car there or who should not? A. I told them to take Albert (Yee Ock), we called him Albert, if he cared to go. * * *

"Q. Did you order anybody to take him? A. No.

"Q. Did you make the use of your car dependent on them taking Albert? A. Not entirely, no."

[1] The evidence shows without conflict that the automobile in question was owned by the appellant, and was, at the time of the accident, being driven by Tallman with her consent. From these facts an inference arises that he was her agent in driving the automobile. Ransford v. Ainsworth, 196 Cal. 279, 281, 237 P. 747. In addition to this inference, the foregoing evidence tends to show, as was said in the case cited, not only that Tallman was operating the automobile with the appellant's consent, "but that in doing so he was engaged in doing things which were matters of her * * * concern." While such proof of agency is not conclusive, it is sufficient.

[2] The following occurred during the direct examination of the plaintiff as a witness:

"Q. After the death of your husband, Mrs. Squires, did you have any conversation with Mrs. Riffe? A. I did. * * *

"Q. State what that conversation was, * * * relating to the bringing of this suit and making a demand upon Mrs. Riffe?

"Mr. Honey (counsel for defendants): We submit that it is immaterial whether she made demand on Mrs. Riffe when she brought suit. * * * I have an idea it is an attempt to bring in extraneous matter here that has no relation to this matter.

"The Court: I think I will overrule the objection. * * *

"A. I told Mrs. Riffe I was going to bring suit, that I thought I ought to get damages. * * * She said she didn't want it to cost her a lot of money but she realized it and that is the reason she had insurance.

"Mr. Honey: If the court please, I assign the asking of that question as misconduct on the part of counsel, injecting extraneous matter into this case, and I now move that this jury panel be discharged and this case adjudged a mistrial. * * *

"The Court: The testimony about the conversation will be stricken out and the jury admonished when a matter is stricken out it is not to be considered by you in any way, it is to be considered the same as if no such testimony had been given or called for. The balance of the motion will be denied."

At the close of the plaintiff's case in chief, counsel for the defendants renewed his motion for the discharge of the jury because of the prejudicial effect of the foregoing evidence. In denying the motion the court said: "I confess I am considerably worried about the question."

It must be presumed that counsel for the plaintiff knew the answer which his client would give to the objectionable question. Her answer could serve no purpose, except to get before the jury the fact that the appellant carried indemnity insurance. The language of the Supreme Court in Citti v. Bava, 204 Cal. 136, 138, 266 P. 954, 955, is applicable to the matter under discussion. Referring to proof of a settlement disclosing "the fact that the defendant was indemnified by a policy of insurance", it is there said: "The evidence of the settlement, alone, not connected up with any act or admission of the defendant, and concerning which he had nothing to do, was clearly inadmissible in evidence. The error in admitting it might not in and of itself require a reversal, but, coupled with the avowed purpose and successful attempt of plaintiff's counsel to get before the jury, not only the fact of the settlement, but also that the settlement was made by the insurance carrier of the defendant, puts the case in a position where section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution will not save the judgment. The natural tendency of a line of examination that suggests to the jury that the defendant is indemnified against any judgment for damages against him is highly prejudicial to his rights, especially in a closely balanced case where the evidence otherwise would be easily sufficient on appeal to support a verdict either for the plaintiff or for the defendant. Such attempts on the part of counsel have frequently been held to be improper and prejudicial. * * * From an examination of the record in this case it is impossible for us to state that the jury would not have found a different verdict had the objectionable examination not taken place and the evidence not been admitted."

One of the instructions contains the word "presumption" where the word "inference" should have been used. Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal. App. 323, 183 P. 198. Another instruction states that it is negligence as a matter of law to "approach" a turn at a speed greater than 15 miles an hour under the conditions mentioned in section 113 (b), subd. 3, of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1917, p. 554). The limit fixed by that subdivision is "fifteen miles an hour in traversing or going around curves or corner."

The judgment against appellant, Winnie Riffe, is reversed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellant.

WASTE, C. J.

This action, instituted by plaintiff's testate, Christopher J. La Sance, hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff or respondent, for damages for personal injuries received by him when struck by defendant's automobile, resulted in a verdict and judgment for $9,000 in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

An extended statement of the facts of the case is unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that plaintiff and his wife had alighted from a street car at a transfer point, and were standing on a "safety station" awaiting the arrival of the car to which they intended to transfer, and that defendant, in changing the course of his automobile, made a turn in such manner that the front wheel of his car could not clear the safety station, but was carried over the curbing, the bumper of the automobile striking plaintiff and throwing him to the ground, causing the injuries which form the basis of this action. Defendant contended at the trial that he was not negligent in operating his automobile, but that the brake on the right wheel dragged and interfered with the turn, causing the car to swerve over the curbing of the safety station. He charged the plaintiff with being contributorily negligent. The only errors urged as grounds for reversal relate to the giving of certain instructions and the refusal of the court to give other instructions requested by the defendant.

Appellant's objections to the instructions of the court with reference to the burden of proof, preponderance of evidence, prima facie, negligence, and contradictory evidence are without merit. These instructions, read as a whole, appear to be full, clear, and, in our opinion, quite fair to appellant.

[1] The court stated the law as to the necessity for adequate brakes on a motor vehicle operated on the public highway. Appellant urges that this instruction implied that there may have been some evidence that there was undue delay in stopping his machine and that the giving of this instruction, without any qualification as to appellant's lack of knowledge of the defect in his brake, "led them [the jury] to believe that the appellant was an insurer of his brakes and to believe that this law applied to brakes which worked unevenly as well as to brakes inadequate to stop the machine," and was clearly erroneous. He also complains of the refusal of the court to give his requested instruction as to unavoidable accident. The court, however, did state to the jury that the mere fact that an accident occurred did not, of itself, raise any presumption that defendant was careless or negligent in driving his car. Furthermore, instruction X, which was decidedly favorable to appellant, fully answers both of the objections raised by him. It reads: "If you find that the defendant Casey was driving his automobile with ordinary care and prudence, and if you also find that the accident was entirely due to the fact that one of the brakes on the automobile dragged and thereby caused Mr. Casey to run the automobile upon the safety station; and if you further find that Mr. Casey was not careless or negligent in any manner, then he is exonerated from any liability in this case and your verdict must be in his favor."

[2] Appellant next complains of the court's instruction with reference to the credibility of witnesses, wherein the court failed to instruct the jury that a witness is presumed to speak the truth (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847), for which reason, he contends, the instruction did not properly state the law. Counsel for respondent points out that appellant did not ask for such an instruction. Section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, setting forth specific matters on which the court should instruct a jury, on proper occasions, does not provide for an instruction that a witness is presumed to speak the truth. Therefore, the instruction not having been requested, appellant cannot assign the mere failure of the court to give it as error sufficient for reversal. See People v. Fowler, 178 Cal. 657, 663, 174 P. 892.

[3] The appellant pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the respondent, and requested the court to instruct the jury on that point. The court, however, refused all instructions as to that issue. Appellant asserts that, under the facts of this case, "this was certainly reversible error." The safety station where the accident occurred was not uniformly constructed; that is, there was a gradual decline on the southerly end, on which portion the respondent and his wife stood awaiting the arrival of the street car. Appellant contends that it cannot be said that a person so standing upon this low end of the structure, "the one dangerous part of this station, the one place where he had no business, and maintaining no watch whatsoever, was exercising due care," and that the question of the negligence of respondent was a question for the jury. Under the undisputed facts of the case, we cannot see how the question of contributory negligence enters into the consideration. The traveling public has the right to assume that a safety zone or station is what its name implies, namely, a place of safety reserved for those waiting to board or depart from street cars at that point, "an area or space officially set apart * * * for the exclusive use of pedestrians. * * *" Section 23½, California Vehicle Act (added 1929), St. 1929, p. 510, § 6. Furthermore, it appears from the evidence that respondent, being unacquainted with the district, had inquired of the motorman of the K car before alighting where he and his wife should wait in order to board the M car to which they intended to transfer, and were told to remain where they were standing at the time of the accident. While it may not be said that a person on a safety station may stand idly by and make no attempt to avert or avoid threatened injury, we do not find in the evidence any indication that such was the fact in this case. It was not error, therefore, for the trial court to refuse to allow the question of contributory negligence on the part of the respondent to be submitted to the jury. The proximate and negligent cause of the accident appears to have been an error of judgment on the part of appellant in believing that the front wheel of his automobile would clear the curb, since the evidence indicates that the car stopped immediately when the brakes were applied.

The judgment is affirmed.

WORKS, P. J.

Defendant was found guilty under a charge of robbery in the first degree. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant insists that the testimony of the witness Hansen was insufficient to show an identification of appellant as the individual who committed the alleged robbery. It is said that the witness claimed to identify appellant by means of a gray coat which the latter wore at the time of the commission of the offense, but that while on cross-examination the witness was shown to have no familiarity with the appearance of the coat. Hansen, however, did not identify appellant by the coat alone, for the following appears in a portion of the record quoted in appellant's brief:

"Q. [By counsel for defendant]: And the cap which the defendant had on his head was pulled down how far? A. Well, right above his eyes.

"Q. You could obtain then, could you, a clear view of his face? A. I could. * * *

"Q. That [by means of the coat and cap] is the only way you could identify him? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. Well, what other way could you identify the defendant? A. By his features."

It is true that two impeaching witnesses testified that Hansen had said out of court that he could not identify appellant, or was not sure of his ability to identify him, but this testimony only gave rise to a conflict in the evidence, which the jury was privileged to resolve as it pleased. The point must therefore be determined against appellant.

[2] At some period prior to the time when appellant was charged with robbery, he had been tried on another criminal charge and had been acquitted. At the trial of the present action a police officer, over objection, was permitted to testify to a conversation between himself and appellant which led to the unearthing of a pistol which belonged to appellant, and the weapon was received in evidence. This conversation occurred and the gun was located pending trial of the first charge against appellant. Moreover, the police officer then knew nothing of the facts out of which arose the charge of robbery. It is contended that the trial court erred in allowing the conversation to go to the jury and in receiving the gun in evidence. But if there was any error in these respects—which we do not decide—the error could have been harmful only if the evidence disclosed to the jury the fact that appellant had been under prosecution upon another criminal charge. This disclosure, however, was not first made by the evidence in question, but by a statement of appellant's counsel made in the presence of the jury. Under these circumstances, appellant cannot successfully object to the error, if there was one. It is to be observed here that in order to fix the grade of appellant's offense under the charge now before us, pursuant to section 211a of the Penal Code, evidence went to the jury which showed directly that he was armed with a gun at the time of the robbery and pointed it at his victim.

Appellant presents several specifications of alleged misconduct on the part of the district attorney, but in view of the answer of respondent to the points made we think them so lacking in merit as not to require a separate treatment.

[3] It is contended that the trial court erred in refusing to give two instructions proposed by appellant for submission to the jury. No argument is presented nor is authority cited to show that the instructions should have been given. It is merely stated that the court erred in refusing them. Points so made give us nothing to decide. No authority need be cited to support this statement, as the cases upon the point are legion.

[4] It is also insisted that the court erred in modifying an instruction offered by appellant and in giving it as modified. The stricken portion of the proposed instruction was to the effect that "you should remember that the defendant is presumed to speak the truth, and unless this presumption is destroyed by the evidence in the case, your oaths require you to find that he has spoken the truth." Section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure is invoked as authority for the inclusion of this language in the instruction. The trial judge gave a general instruction to the effect that a witness is presumed to speak the truth, and followed it with this language: "This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies,—his interest in the case, if any, or his bias and prejudice, if any, against one or any of the parties, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty or integrity, or by contradictory evidence, and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility." It is held in many cases that it is not proper to single out a defendant and to charge the jury upon the credibility of his testimony, while others appear to allow such an instruction. 16 C. J. 1018, § 2443. Without grasping either horn of this dilemma in its full force, we think that where a trial judge gives such a general instruction as we have set forth, applicable to all the witnesses, it is not error to delete such matter as the trial judge here eliminated from the proposed instruction.

BARNARD, P. J.

One King sold 45 dairy cows to one Beard under three conditional sales contracts, dated respectively November 4, 1926, February 5, 1927, and July 28, 1927. On the date each of these contracts was executed it was assigned by King to the plaintiff herein. On November 15, 1927, a new conditional sales contract was executed by King, as seller, and Beard, as buyer, for the purpose, among other things, of combining all three of these transactions into one contract. This new contract covered only 42 cows, including 5 which had not been covered in the original contracts. Immediately after its execution this contract was assigned to the plaintiff herein by King, but was not recorded until December 10, 1927. In the meantime, on November 19, 1927, in a suit brought by one Loubet against Beard, who had possession of the cows at all times after the original contracts were executed, the sheriff of San Bernardino county attached most of these cows and later sold them to satisfy a judgment in that action, although the plaintiff herein had filed a third party claim. Each of the contracts mentioned provided that title to the cattle should remain in the seller until the stipulated price was fully paid. This action was brought to recover the value of the cattle sold by the sheriff, and from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff the defendants have appealed.

Appellants ask for a reversal of this judgment upon the ground that the last-mentioned conditional sales contract is void, as against this attaching creditor of Beard, under the terms of section 2980 of the Civil Code, which went into effect July 29, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1567). This section reads as follows:

"Conditional Sales of Livestock and Poultry. Any conditional sales contract creating or reserving any interest in or lien upon livestock or poultry not in the possession of the person having such interest or lien shall be void against all others than the parties to the agreement unless acknowledged and recorded in the same manner as mortgages on livestock are required to be acknowledged and recorded.

"Sections 2959 and 2965 of the Civil Code, and sections 408, 4130, 4140 and 4300c of the Political Code, are hereby made applicable to conditional sales contracts involving livestock and poultry in the same manner as to mortgages on livestock."

The manner in which mortgages on live stock are required to be acknowledged and recorded is set forth in section 2957 of the Civil Code.

*Hearing granted 5 P.2d 882.

agree, but a discussion of which is rendered unnecessary by our views upon a third point. This is, that section 2980 of the Civil Code is unconstitutional, being in violation of article 1, § 11, of the Constitution of California, in that it is not uniform in its operation, which point we think must be sustained.

In Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 266, 82 P. 956, 958, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475, the rule is thus stated: "A law which applies alike to all the subjects upon which it acts, or, in other words, a law which applies equally to all persons or things within a legitimate class to which, alone, it is addressed, does not violate the provision requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation, and is neither local nor special." Citing cases.

In Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 P. 915, 918, 45 P. 1057, the court said: "It is only laws of a general nature which must have a uniform operation. And it has been uniformly held that a law is general which applies to all of a class, the classification being a proper one, and that the requirement of uniformity is satisfied if it applies to all of the class alike. In [People ex rel.] Smith v. Judge Twelfth District, 17 Cal. 547, it was said: 'The word "uniform" in the constitution does not mean "universal." The section intends simply that the effect of general laws shall be the same to and upon all persons who stand in the same relation to the law; that is, all the facts of whose cases are substantially the same.' "

In the case of In re Sumida, 177 Cal. 388, 170 P. 823, 824 the court said: "The sole question, therefore, is whether or not this ordinance is discriminatory, and class legislation within the principles of constitutional law applying to the subject. The rules upon the subject are well established by many decisions in this state. 'From necessity it has been held that the Legislature may classify in order that it may adapt its legislation to the needs of the people. If this cannot be done, laws will not always bear equally upon the people. This classification, however, must be founded upon differences which are either defined by the Constitution or natural, and which will suggest a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity in the legislation. It must not be arbitrary, for the mere purpose of classification, that legislation really local or special may seem to be general, but for the purpose of meeting different conditions naturally requiring different legislation.' Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 645, 38 P. 501. 'A law is general and uniform in its operation when it applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, provided such class is made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction between the persons composing it and others not embraced in it. * * * The difference on which the classification is based must be such as, in some reasonable degree, will account for or justify the peculiar legislation.' Ex parte Miller, 162 Cal. 698, 124 P. 430. Other decisions supporting these propositions are cited in that case and need not be repeated here."

In Bruch v. Colombet, 104 Cal. 347, 38 P. 45, 47, the court said: "No absolute, inflexible rule has ever been formulated, and probably never will be, by which to determine what departure from uniformity is permissible and what will be fatal. The courts must determine each case as it arises, presuming in favor of the rightful exercise of the legislative power. Yet the inhibition should be enforced unless there is discoverable some reasonable ground for a distinction."

Applying these rules to the statute here in question, although this law applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, that is to say, to all persons selling live stock or poultry upon conditional sales contracts, when the seller does not retain the possession thereof, on the other hand, we are unable to see that the particular classification is "founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction." We are unable to discover any reasonable ground for the distinction here drawn between live stock and other forms of personal property. It would appear to have been the intention of the Legislature, in adding this section to the Code, to apply to conditional sales contracts covering livestock or poultry, so far as their effect upon third persons is concerned, practically the same rules of law as apply to chattel mortgages upon such property. The section in question applies the recording provisions of section 2957 of the Civil Code to conditional sales contracts covering live stock or poultry, which leave the buyer in possession. But it will be noted that the last-named section applies not only to mortgages upon live stock, but to mortgages upon all kinds of personal property. And while section 2980 also makes applicable to conditional sales contracts covering live stock or poultry, the provisions of sections 2959 and 2965 of the Civil Code, these last-named sections are also very much broader in their scope than the section here in question. In the instant case, we are not concerned with the portions of these sections applying to removal of personal property to another county, or the recording provisions applicable thereto. We are here concerned only with the effect of this section where the property remains in the same county where it is originally sold under a conditional sales contract. It is at once apparent that section 2980, in regulating conditional sales contracts, draws a distinction that is not drawn in regulating chattel mortgages, and that, under its terms, in order to shut out attaching creditors of the party in possession, a conditional sales contract covering live stock or poultry must be recorded, while a similar contract, covering other kinds of personal property, need not be recorded.

While it may be conceded that a distinction may legitimately be drawn between such chattels as may properly be termed "migratory," and other forms of personal property which are not quite so moveable in nature, and while even greater reason might appear for making a separate classification of motor vehicles, in view of their nature and use under modern conditions, we are unable to see any such distinction between live stock or poultry, and for, instance, vehicles or farm implements. In modern business, radios, musical instruments, motor vehicles, furniture, and many other forms of personal property, are customarily sold upon conditional sales contracts. While such a law as we have here under consideration might, with propriety, be made to apply to all forms of personal property so sold, and even conceding that such a law might properly be applied to all such property which could properly be classed as migratory, we are unable to find a natural or intrinsic reason why such a provision should be made applicable to livestock and poultry alone, whether removed from the county or not, and why all other forms of personal property, whether removed from the county or not, and irrespective of whether it is equally susceptible of being removed or even more so, should be relieved from a similar obligation. This section not only gives an attaching creditor a right with reference to property the seller of which has not complied with the terms of the section, which he would not have in reference to other forms of personal property, similarly sold, but does this without regard to whether or not the creditor has relied upon or been misled by the debtor's possession. It seems to us that in so far as this statute declares void, so far as third parties are concerned, this class of contracts, covering a special limited kind of personal property, which is in fact a part of a much larger class which should be treated alike, it is not uniform and general in its scope, and that it constitutes an unreasonable infringement upon the rights of a part of a general class. And, further, that in so far as it vests in third parties a right to interfere with the performance of contracts covering live stock or poultry, it vests in such third parties rights that are not enjoyed by others in exactly the same position with reference to similar contracts covering other forms of property which are and belong in the same class. As we view it, there is no reasonable ground for placing live stock or poultry in a class separate and distinct from all other forms of personal property, for the purpose of subjecting such property and its owners to requirements and limitations, in the sale thereof, from which all other forms of personal property, and the owners thereof, are excluded. The distinction made by this section appears to us to be arbitrary rather than natural, intrinsic, or constitutional.

Appellants cite a number of decisions from other states, where, it is claimed, statutes similar to the one under consideration were upheld. In each instance cited the statute involved covered personal property in general rather than a named exception from a general class.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by Annie C. Cooper against J. M. Tanner and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals.

Affirmed.

Macfarlane, Schaefer, Haun & Mulford, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Estudillo & Schwinn, of Riverside, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

Respondent was the owner of an orange grove near the city of Corona in the county of Riverside. She was also the owner of 75½ shares of the capital stock of the Temescal Water Company. This stock was found in the possession of appellant, and upon his refusal to deliver it to her, this action was brought to compel the cancellation of certificate number 3725 issued for it, and the issuance of a duplicate by the water company. Judgment was entered for respondent, and appellant has prosecuted this appeal.

Appellant presents two grounds upon which he bases his claim for a reversal of the judgment: First, that the water stock in question was not appurtenant to the land owned by respondent; and, second, that "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." Section 3543, Civ. Code.

Under the conclusions which we have reached it makes no difference whether or not the water stock was appurtenant to the land. Therefore, we will assume, without deciding, that the contention of appellant is correct and that the stock was not appurtenant to the land.

The evidence discloses that respondent purchased this stock in 1912. On August 10, 1921, the records of the company show a receipt for it signed by F. P. Cooper, her son, and son-in-law of appellant. It does not appear that respondent ever had possession of the certificate. F. P. Cooper died in 1929, before the trial of this action.

In 1922, F. P. Cooper was indebted to the Long Beach National Bank in the sum of $3,500. He had pledged the water stock, together with other stock belonging to his mother, as security for the loan, without her knowledge or consent. In September of the same year the bank was about to foreclose the pledge. On October 7, 1922, appellant loaned Cooper $3,500 with which to pay the bank and was given possession of certificate No. 3725 representing this water stock. This certificate had been issued in the name of Mrs. Anna C. Cooper, admittedly the respondent, although the first name appears to be misspelled. On the back of the certificate was the following endorsement:

"For value received ——— hereby sell, assign and transfer unto Long Beach Natl Bank, Long Beach, Cal Shares of the Capital Stock represented by the within Certificate, and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint ——— to transfer the said Stock on the books of the within named Corporation with full power of substitution in the premises.

"Dated Sept. 13, 1922

"Mrs. Annie C. Cooper.

"In presence of ———"

The date of the indorsement shows an erasure under the word "Sept." and under the figures "22." The name "Mrs. Annie C. Cooper" was undoubtedly forged on the indorsement, probably by F. P. Cooper. This indorsement was on the certificate at the time it was received by appellant. About November 15, 1922, appellant took the certificate to the bank and had the following indorsement placed thereon:

"For Value Received we hereby sell, assign and transfer unto Mrs. Annie C. Cooper shares of the capital stock represented by the within certificate and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint to transfer the said stock on the books of the within named corporation with full power of substitution in the premises.

"Dated No. 15, 1922.

"Long Beach National Bank, Long Beach, Cal.

"By C. R. Davis."

A short time after this transaction, respondent and another son, Reul Cooper, went to Long Beach in search of the stock certificate. F. P. Cooper was at this time in the state of Texas and they knew that he had intrusted appellant with some of his private papers. Respondent told appellant that she had intrusted this certificate to her son F. P. Cooper for safe-keeping, but that she was now looking for it because it might be necessary for her to renew a loan upon her orange orchard in Riverside county and she would need to use it as further security. Appellant told respondent that he had possession of the certificate and that it was in his safe-deposit box in the bank, but that as it was after banking hours he could not show it to her that day. In this conversation appellant told respondent that F. P. Cooper owed him money and that he was holding the stock certificate for the loan. Respondent replied that he could not hold her stock for her son's indebtedness. Several days later respondent and her son Reul returned to Long Beach and were taken to the safe-deposit box and shown the certificate of stock. Respondent and Reul Cooper both testified that the certificate was wrapped in a newspaper with other private papers belonging to F. P. Cooper and was not mingled with the private papers of appellant; that appellant told respondent that these papers had been given to him for safe-keeping by F. P. Cooper before he left for Texas. This particular portion of the conversation was denied by appellant, but the court found the facts in accordance with the testimony of respondent and Reul Cooper.

[1] Under the circumstances of this case as disclosed by the evidence, the provisions of section 3543 of the Civil Code do not apply. The face of the certificate of stock showed ownership in respondent. The forged assignment on the back was in favor of the Long Beach National Bank. The assignment by the bank was in favor of respondent. These facts alone are sufficient to have put appellant upon his inquiry before accepting the stock as collateral security, if he did so accept it. In his first conversation with respondent, she asserted ownership of the stock and told him that he could not hold it as security for her son's indebtedness. Notwithstanding these circumstances, appellant had continued to advance considerable sums to his son-in-law. He produced a note signed by F. P. Cooper and Helen Cooper, his wife, payable to J. M. Tanner, dated July 1, 1928, in the principal sum of $21,412.31. This note was in the usual form of an ordinary promissory note and not in the form of a pledge or collateral security note. Security was not mentioned therein. It had been taken for various advances made by appellant to F. P. Cooper over a period of years on and after October 7, 1922, the greater part of which had been made after respondent told appellant that she claimed title to the stock.

[2] Under the principles announced in 1 Cal. Jur. pp. 734 to 737, and the cases therein cited, appellant has not brought himself within the provisions of section 3543 of the Civil Code. It has been repeatedly held that a pledgee does not acquire a valid lien upon personal property against the true owner where the true owner has not allowed the pledgor to assume the apparent ownership of the pledged property but had only entrusted him with it for safe-keeping. Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 P. 72; McLean v. Mooser, 59 Cal. App. 345, 210 P. 827; Bastheim Co. v. Schultz, 46 Cal. App. 24, 188 P. 841. Respondent testified that her son, F. P. Cooper, had the stock certificate for safekeeping, and that when she saw it among his private papers in the possession of appellant she allowed it to remain there believing that it would be safe with him and that her son would return it to her upon his return from Texas. The evidence fails to disclose that respondent clothed her son with any apparent ownership of the stock, and furthermore it shows that appellant had notice that F. P. Cooper had no interest in the stock or in the certificate.

[3] Appellant complains of a number of the findings of fact made by the trial court. All of these findings against which he directs his attack are unnecessary to support the judgment and may be regarded as surplusage. There are sufficient findings supported by the evidence to support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

MIDDLETON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY.*

Civ. 7619.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 23, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 24, 1931.

1. New trial 🔑165.

Trial court is limited to single ruling on motion for new trial after decree on material issues presented by pleadings.

2. Judgment 🔑294.

Court may modify decree only in exceptional ways prescribed by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

> Modification may be made only by proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, or by proceeding for an entry nunc pro tunc in the event of an erroneous entry at variance with its rulings.

3. New trial 🔑157.

Motion for new trial, if entertained and considered in disregard of statutory methods of procedure, was erroneous, but not void.

4. New trial 🔑165.

Trial court overruling motion for new trial after decree determining respective interests of partners was without authority after supplementary judgment to grant new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 956, 963).

> By the findings, conclusions of law, and decree made and entered at conclusion of trial, all of issues were finally and definitely settled and determined, leaving for ascertainment no more than amounts of certain already adjusted reciprocal obligations, a mere question of arithmetic, and all that remained for court to do upon receipt of the account was to adopt and embody report in a supplemental decree which adjudged holdings of each party and amounts of a portion of obligations of each of parties to others under requirements of original judgment.

*Hearing granted 6 P.2d 93[illegible]

tain defendants joined issue, the action was dismissed as to others, and, after the introduction of evidence, a decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff determining the issues between the parties and directing an accounting. Thereafter, upon the rendition of the accounting, a "supplemental" decree was rendered, adopting recommendations of the accountants and directing distribution of certain funds in accordance therewith, which decree also was entered. The plaintiff has petitioned this court for a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings below, and for annulment of subsequent orders of the trial court purporting to vacate the decree first mentioned and granting a new trial upon the issues determined thereby.

At the conclusion of the trial findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decree dated July 19, 1929, determined the respective interests in certain described properties of the plaintiff, and of defendants T. L. Dudley, F. P. Newport, and the Security Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation. Referees or accountants were appointed, and the court directed that Dudley render an accounting of certain trust funds, liens, etc., and that Newport render an accounting to Dudley and to the plaintiff, reciting in its decree that "thereupon this court shall decree the amount of money due" from each to the other, namely, from Newport to Dudley as trustee, to Middleton & Newport, a copartnership, and to Middleton personally; from Dudley to the trust and copartnership, and as to any mortgages or liens created to secure the payments of moneys claimed to be due to Newport. It was further decreed that the defendant Newport bear the expense of such accounting, and that the plaintiff and the defendant bank recover their costs from the defendant Newport. A motion for a new trial was presented by the defendants Dudley and Newport, which was denied. On July 31, 1930, upon the return and filing of the accountants' report, the trial court made its "supplemental judgment" heretofore mentioned, reciting that said report had been filed in accordance with the decree, and adopting the report.

On August 8, 1930, the defendants Newport and Dudley caused to be served a notice of motion "to vacate and set aside the first or interlocutory judgment heretofore rendered in said action on July 19, 1929; * * * and * * * to vacate and set aside the second or final judgment heretofore rendered in this action on July 31, 1930." Said motion was based upon the same grounds and upon the affidavits "heretofore filed herein on or about the 30th day of July, 1929," which were presented in the first instance. This latter motion was "granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision, and that the decision is against law." On September 24, 1929, the defendants appealed from the decree of July 19, 1929, and on August 29, 1930, they appealed from the decree of July 31, 1930. Pursuant to the order granting a new trial there is pending a motion to set the case for trial "of all of the issues involved therein, including all of the issues decided and determined in and by said judgment therein of July 19, 1929."

The respondent demurs to the instant proceeding upon the ground that the stated facts do not authorize the relief sought, and by answer it is contended that the decree first rendered was interlocutory, that the motion for a new trial then presented was premature, and that the order denying it was a nullity; that the motion for a new trial which was interposed after rendition of the later and so-called "supplemental judgment," designated by respondent as the "final judgment," was timely, that the order granting a new trial was valid, and that petitioner is not without a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, for the reason that he may abide the event of another trial and appeal from any adverse judgment, if such be rendered.

By the findings, conclusions of law, and decree made and entered in July, 1929, at the conclusion of the trial, all of the issues were finally and definitely settled and determined, leaving for ascertainment no more than the amounts of certain already adjusted reciprocal obligations, a mere question of arithmetic. It was found that a partnership existed between the plaintiff and the defendant Newport, and the same was by said decree dissolved. It was determined that Middleton was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in all the assets and properties of said copartnership, the title to a portion of which stood in the name of the defendant Dudley; that the partnership interest was subject to the interests of a certain syndicate for which the latter should receive the sum of $150.000; that a certain adjudged interest of the plaintiff was subject to the rights of the defendant bank as trustee for assignees of Middleton, and that the bank should receive the sum of $27,657.64, with interest, for such assignees. These facts were all thereafter reargued upon a motion for a new trial, were considered by the trial court, and the motion was denied. Upon the motion then presented the court decided, in effect, that there were no errors occurring at the trial, that the evidence was not insufficient to justify the decision, that it was not against the law or against the evidence, and that the defendants were not prevented from having a fair trial. Upon receipt of the account, all that remained to do or that was done consisted of its adoption and embodiment in a supplemental decree, which adjudged the holdings of each party and the amounts of a portion of the obligations of each of the parties to the others under the requirements of the original judgment.

While the authorities upon which the respondent relies may at first blush apparently tend to sustain its contentions, they are analogous only to the extent that they hold that an interlocutory decree is not final. An analysis of them all is not necessary to a complete consideration of the question before us. None of them pretends to hold that in a case such as the instant one a ruling upon a motion for a new trial is not conclusive upon the trial court. So far as they differ in character or in result they are not in point, but so far as they express pertinent principles, even by obiter dictum, they are in harmony with controlling authorities which recognize the finality of orders denying new trials. Selected examples are sufficient to reveal the extent of their persuasive value in this proceeding. In an action to quiet title it was said that an interlocutory judgment, reserving for future determination the amount of rents, issues, and profits, is appealable, and that proceedings upon a motion for new trial do not apply. Yet, the Supreme Court held: "The very fact that the judgment in question was interlocutory left the whole case before the court for final adjudication, and even if it be conceded that the order vacating the interlocutory judgment and granting a new trial was erroneous, it was but an order in the exercise of its jurisdiction over the cause and the parties, to be corrected, if need be, upon an appeal from the final judgment in the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 956." Pomper v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 494, 216 P. 577, 578. Following this authority it is clear that, even if conceded that the order of the court denying the first motion for a new trial was erroneous, it could not be corrected by a motion of the same character, but, aside from certain statutory exceptions with which we are not concerned, this could be accomplished only in the course of an appeal to be taken from the judgment when rendered. This is the remedy indicated by the foregoing decision in such an instance. In Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 114 P. 579, 582, and Clement v. Duncan, 191 Cal. 209, 215 P. 1025, 1028, both involving partnership accountings, the interlocutory decree was in each instance based upon findings which, as stated in the Doudell Case, determined none of the issues except the fact of partnership and the existence of mutual undetermined claims and demands, and certain property, and a conclusion of law which declared no more than that an accounting was necessary. In neither of the cases were there findings fixing the relative rights of the parties as there are in the one here under consideration. In the former a stay of execution upon appeal from the final judgment without sureties was denied, and in the latter the right of appeal from the interlocutory judgment was denied. In each of these two cases elaborate findings of fact and conclusions of law were requisite to the final judgment after an accounting. But in Doudell v. Shoo, supra, it was remarked: "If the first decree was a final adjudication of the rights of the parties with respect to any matter contained in it, it might well be claimed that the appeal from that order, together with the giving of the bond required by the order of the trial court, would stay the power of the court to take any further proceedings with reference to the matter covered by the judgment appealed from while the appeal remained undisposed of." In the instant case we have every issue covered in the findings upon which the interlocutory decree is based, and, when the so-called "final judgment" was made, it was unnecessary to make further findings, and none were made, except that approving the report of the referees. In both of the above-mentioned cases it was observed: "There may, however, be cases not coming within the purview of said section [Code Civ. Proc. § 963] in which an interlocutory decree may involve a full, complete, and definite adjudication of all the material or vital issues of fact arising in the case." We think that this is such a case.

[1-4] We are aware of no authority in this state in conflict with the rule first announced herein which limits a trial court to a single ruling upon the motion for a new trial, after suspension of a hearing and the rendition of findings, conclusions of law, and a decree upon the material issues presented by the pleadings. The court may modify its decree only in exceptional ways prescribed by the statute, that is, by a proceeding under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by a proceeding for an entry nunc pro tunc in the event of an erroneous entry at variance with its rulings. Frost v. L. A. Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 365, 132 P. 442. The court here had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and jurisdiction to grant or to deny a new trial. If the motion was entertained and considered in disregard of statutory methods of procedure, it was erroneous, but not void. Hutchinson v. Inyo County, 61 Cal. 119; Yenawine v. Richter, 43 Cal. 312. Subject to exceptions not here appearing, the order denying a new trial was reviewable only upon appeal, and the subsequent action of the court in rendering a contrary decision of the same issues, upon the same grounds, was accomplished through an attempted exercise of an exhausted authority. Holtum v. Grief, 144 Cal. 521, 78 P. 11, 12. The statute authorizes but one motion for a new trial, and makes the ruling thereon final, so far as the superior court is concerned. Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484, 6 P. 135. In an instance not dissimilar to that here presented the Supreme Court observed: "The decisions of this court are numerous and uniform to the effect that a judgment or order once regularly entered can be reviewed and set aside only in the modes prescribed by statute. If they have been entered prematurely or by inadvertence, they may be set aside on a proper showing (Odd Fellows' Savings Bank

v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 170, 4 P. 1173, and cases cited), * * * but, subject to these exceptions, the order is reviewable only on appeal, and, the decision of the trial court having been once made after regular submission of the motion, its power is exhausted. It is functus officio. * * *" Holtum v. Grief, supra. The same rule was applied in Bloomquist v. Haley, 204 Cal. 258, 268 P. 364. In Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 260 P. 869, 872, these principles were considered in passing upon the validity of an order granting a new trial and a subsequent order amending the first and denying a motion for new trial as to one of the defendants, and the rule applied in the following language: "When a motion for a new trial has been made in due form, upon a settled statement, and the court has passed on the motion, the order regularly made is conclusive so far as the court making it is concerned. It cannot afterwards, even on motion, vacate the order and decide the matter anew." We think further consideration of the matter would be unwarranted.

The writ is granted, and orders annulled as prayed.

PEOPLE v. BATEMAN.

Cr. 1590.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Jan. 15, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1931.

1. Receiving stolen goods 🔑1.

Defendant's knowledge property was stolen and his receiving it for purpose of gain of himself, or himself and others, covered all elements of "receiving stolen goods" (Pen. Code, § 496).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Receiving Stolen Goods," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Criminal law 🔑564(1).

Evidence held to show defendant received stolen goods in San Francisco, so as to support prosecution in such county (Pen. Code, § 496).

3. Conspiracy 🔑45.

On counts for conspiracy and for completed offense, issue of conspiracy was present until acquittal on such count; hence statements by third person out of defendant's presence were admissible.

4. Criminal law 🔑673(2).

Evidence of statements by third person to conspiracy having been properly admitted under circumstances, and court having instructed jury on limited use it might make thereof, there was no error.

5. Criminal law 🔑1144(15).

In absence of showing to contrary, appellate court is bound to assume jury followed instructions.

6. Criminal law 🔑511(1).

In prosecution for receiving stolen goods, testimony of alleged accomplice held sufficiently corroborated (Pen. Code, § 496).

STURTEVANT, J.

The grand jury presented an indictment against L. L. Bateman, Raymond Bateman, James Arp, and W. C. Dorris. The indictment was framed in two counts. In the first count it was charged that the defendants conspired to commit the offense of receiving stolen goods. In the second count it was charged that the defendants committed the offense of receiving stolen goods. The defendants pleaded not guilty. A trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict acquitting the defendant L. L. Bateman on the conspiracy charge, and it returned a verdict convicting him on the other charge. From a judgment entered on the verdict and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, that defendant has appealed.

The transcript contains unwards of 1,000 pages. During the trial 50 or 60 witnesses were called and examined. Some of the witnesses gave evidence regarding acts and declarations of the alleged conspirators. Other witnesses testified to other facts and circumstances, but the defendant does not claim that the trial court erred in ruling on the admission of evidence or in giving instructions.

[1, 2] The defendant claims the trial court had no jurisdiction because the property was not received in San Francisco. The defendant states that: "(a) A person charged must receive or buy the property; (b) he must know that the property was stolen; (c) the purpose or intent to prevent the owner from again possessing the property, or for the receiver's own gain, must also exist." State v. Pray, 30 Nev. 206, 94 P. 218, 221. He then asserts that the jurisdiction of the charge rests in the court of the place where the property was received. People v. Zimmer, 174 App. Div. 470, 160 N. Y. S. 459; 16 C. J. 168, § 214. We do not understand the prosecution to dispute any one of these claims except as to the correctness of the facts on which they are based. It is an admitted fact that the property was stolen from the owner in San Francisco June 1, 1929. This defendant and W. T. Davis both came from Bakersfield to San Francisco, and on July 2, 1929, they occupied adjoining rooms at Hotel Holland. On July 17, 1929, Ray Bateman telegraphed $2,300 to L. L. Bateman at San Francisco and the draft was paid on the same day. Early in July the jewelry was in Bakersfield and was from time to time either as a lot, or piece by piece, exhibited as in the hands of W. T. Davis, James Arp, Ray Bateman, or others. Each one attempted to make sales of the articles. In Ray Bateman's restaurant in October, 1929, the defendant L. L. Bateman, his son Ray, Dorris, and Smith were having breakfast. Dorris said to the defendant: "It looks like you will have to make another trip to Chicago, and if you do, take the string along, you can raise more money on that than anything we have got." Later, on January 21, 1930, Jackson and Tatham, detective sergeants on the police force in San Francisco, went to Bakersfield and called at the house of Ray Bateman, the son of this defendant. When they were admitted to the house Mrs. Bateman had on her finger a guard ring set with many diamonds. That ring had been reset by order of Ray Bateman and had one more diamond thereon than the guard ring which had been stolen from Mrs. Dinkelspiel. The detectives took possession of it, gave Mrs. Bateman a receipt therefor, and left to call on Ray Bateman. When Tatham called on Ray Bateman, he told the latter that he had just got the ring from Mrs. Bateman and that the ring had been stolen in a burglary in San Francisco. Ray Bateman made an appointment for Tatham to see the defendant. When Tatham went to the house of L. L. Bateman, Detectives Jackson and Kays and Shannon of the Bakersfield police force accompanied him. As they approached the house the screen door was locked. Attorney Dorris, who was inside with the defendant, asked if they had a warrant. Tatham said no. Then Dorris started to curse and threaten them. The defendant interrupted saying: "Let me at em; I will put nine bullets into the sons of bitches; they pulled that Hoosier on the little girl." After that incident Mrs. Wells acted as a go-between. Tatham wrote on a paper a statement that if Mrs. Wells was allowed to take the jewelry to Lloyd's appraiser, and if a satisfactory arrangement was not made, Mrs. Wells could return the jewelry and would not be arrested. In one conversation the defendant asked her to make an appointment with the detectives to take the jewelry to San Francisco, saying, at the same time: "I paid my money for this jewelry. I bought it legitimately, and I want my money out of it." Such arrangements were made by the defendant, his son, and James Arp, that the defendant and Mrs. Wells came to San Francisco. Arp shipped the jewelry by express to J. M. Sullivan. The defendant brought Mrs. Wells north, he driving a Chevrolet coupé. He took her to the house of one of his lady friends in Oakland. The next morning he called and took her to San Francisco. On arriving there he told her that he had had the jewelry forwarded by express. He asked her to go at once to see Lloyd's appraiser and then to come back to him. She did so and reported to the defendant. He then gave her the box of jewelry and told her to take it to the appraiser who would pay her $3,800 for it. Otherwise it was to be returned. Later she reported to the defendant what the appraiser said he would pay. The defendant told her to tell the appraiser to go to hell and directed her to get the jewelry and return it to him. As a part of the same conversation the defendant stated to Mrs. Wells: "It was Ray's money, he will have to be the loser. I did not have anything in it myself." Later she was instructed to collect $2,000 if she could, but otherwise to bring the jewelry back. She attempted to do so, but, as she came out of the store, she was arrested. The jewelry had been forwarded to San Francisco in a package from James Arp. It was addressed to J. M. Sullivan. When Mrs. Wells was released from jail Mr. Sullivan was present, was introduced to her by the defendant, and presented a wrist watch to her.

At the time of the trial Wm. Davis was dead. J. M. Sullivan was not called as a witness. Ray Bateman testified that in the latter part of July, 1929, W. T. Davis brought the jewelry and put it in witness' safe. Afterwards witness loaned him over $2,000. In the last part of October he was given possession of the jewelry by W. T. Davis, who said the witness could sell it and repay himself for the moneys borrowed and account to Davis for the balance of the moneys received from sales. The witness had the guard ring made over, an additional diamond put in, and gave it to his wife. In December, 1929, he traded to Arp one bracelet, one pendant watch, one string of pearls, and one jade ring. Arp testified to about the same facts regarding his trade. But he also testified that about the first of July, 1929, Wm. Davis approached him and tried to sell him some of the stolen jewelry. When Tatham and Jackson were in Bakersfield, it does not appear that any single piece of the jewelry was in the possession of the defendant. However, such agreements were made that it was arranged that the defendant and Mrs. Wells were to go, and did go, to San Francisco, and that Arp and Ray Bateman were to send, and they did send, all of the jewelry to J. M. Sullivan to be turned over to, and it was turned over to, the defendant in San Francisco. It is clear that there was some circumstantial evidence that about July 1, 1929, the defendant and Davis bought the jewelry in San Francisco. However, there was the further showing that both disposed of their interests. Later the defendant, acting for himself or for himself and others, on January 27, 1930, at San Francisco, received the stolen property. He then knew it was stolen property. He received it for the purpose of the gain of himself or of himself and those others. These facts covered all of the elements of the offense. Pen. Code, § 496; Ellison v. Com., 190 Ky. 305, 227 S. W. 458, 461, 462.

In other words the case at bar is not a case in which stolen goods have been unlawfully received by one who then takes them to another place for the purpose of selling them. People v. Zimmer, 174 App. Div. 470, 160 N. Y. S. 459. It is not so simple in its facts. There is some evidence that the defendant received the stolen goods as early as the first day of July, 1929, but he then disposed of them. Later, being pressed with criminal proceedings, he negotiated for and did again receive the same goods for the same unlawful purpose. The uncontradicted evidence is that he so received the goods in San Francisco.

[3, 4] The defendant claims that in the absence of evidence of a conspiracy, statements or conversations by third persons out of the presence of the defendant and not a part of the res gestæ are inadmissible. Conceding that such is a correct statement of the law, the point is not presented by the facts in the record. Here there was some evidence of a conspiracy, and the rule contended for has no application. The issue of conspiracy was present at all times until the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty as to the count charging conspiracy. Hence, evidence on that subject was admissible. When instructing the jury the court gave an instruction which limited the use the jury might make of the evidence of declarations and acts of the alleged conspirators. Hence there was nothing on which the defendant may predicate error on the part of the trial court in admitting the evidence.

[5] In this connection the defendant claims the verdict was contrary to the evidence. The point rests on the fact that the defendant was acquitted on the count charging conspiracy, and the defendant asserts that there is no evidence in the record proving the other count. This contention assumes there is no other evidence in the record. We think that there is and hereinabove we have stated some of that evidence. But the real point of the defendant is this. He complains that perchance the jury used and acted on the declarations of the alleged conspirators for purposes other than those stated in the instructions of the court. The record does not show that the jury did so. In the absence of some showing to the contrary, we are bound to assume the jury followed the instructions given by the court.

[6] Much of the evidence given during the trial was given by Mrs. Wells. Some statements were made in the briefs to the effect that she was an accomplice. Whether she was or was not an accomplice we need not pause to determine. Hereinabove we have set forth evidence which fully complies with the rules concerning the corroboration of an accomplice.

We find no error in the record. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Measure of damages for breach of contract to drill oil well held not cost of completing work, where owner of prospecting permit was to give well driller lease only in event oil was discovered.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an action for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff was the owner of 160 acres of land in Kern county, acquired under an agricultural patent which reserved the oil rights to the government. She was also the owner of a "Prospecting Permit" issued by the Department of the Interior, giving her the right to prospect for oil or gas on this same property. As first party, she entered into an agreement with one J. C. Grant, as second party, which agreement was later assigned by Grant to Julian Petroleum Corporation. This agreement, after reciting that the first party is the owner of the surface rights in the property, and also of a prospecting permit issued by the Secretary of the Interior, provides that the second party shall drill a well on said premises to a depth of not less than 3,000 feet, unless oil in paying commercial quantities is discovered therein at a lesser depth. In the event oil is discovered in paying quantities, the second party agrees to provide the first party with all necessary affidavits and proofs to enable her to obtain a lease to said land from the Secretary of the Interior, and the first party agrees to then obtain such a lease from the Secretary of the Interior, and assign the same to the second party. Thereafter the second party is to pay to the first party a royalty of 5 per cent of any oil and gas produced from the land.

The Julian Petroleum Corporation commenced to drill a well on the property, but, after going down 562 feet, abandoned the project. The evidence shows that the plaintiff's land was near a proven oil field, there being many producing wells about 2½ miles distant, in one direction; that about the same time at least three other wells were drilled within 1½ miles of plaintiff's land, some of them showing some oil, but none of them being put on production; that two other wells were drilled and abandoned in the neighborhood, although their distance from plaintiff's land is not set forth; and that the well begun on plaintiff's land lay between two dry holes, one of which, 1½ miles away, showed some oil, but was not put on production, while the other, known as the Miller well, one mile away, was drilled to depth of 4,360 feet, but never put on production. Two geologists expressed an opinion that oil could not be produced on plaintiff's land, although both had thought the chances were favorable at the time the contract here in question was executed. One said it took the Miller well to determine the possibilities of the plaintiff's land, and the other testified that he had changed his mind because of another drilling operation in the vicinity. It was stipulated by the parties that the cost of completing the well on plaintiff's land to depth of 3,000 feet would be $50,000. The case was submitted to the trial judge, without a jury, on this stipulation and on certain written testimony. The court found that the defendants had breached the contract by refusing to drill the well to the agreed depth, and that the cost of completing the well would be $50,000, but further found that the plaintiff had suffered no detriment from the breach of the agreement, and entered judgment for the defendants. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant raises but one question, which, in the language of the brief, is thus stated: "Is the cost of doing the work the proper measure of damages for breach of this contract? If it is not, for any reason at all, whether it has been stated or not, then the judgment should be affirmed." It is argued that, the work having been fully paid for in advance, the cost of completing the well is the measure of damages. In support of this contention, appellant cites certain California cases, which we will now consider. In Taylor v. N. P. C. R. R. Co., 56 Cal. 317, the plaintiff had deeded a right of way across his land to a railroad company upon the agreement that the company should build for him a certain wagon road in lieu of another road destroyed, and should build fences on both sides of the right of way. The court held that the plaintiff had fully paid for the road and the fences, and was entitled to recover what it would cost to construct them. In Wallace v. Ah Sam, 71 Cal. 197, 12 P. 46, 48, 60 Am. Rep. 534, which involved an agreement to build certain levees to reclaim land, although the court discussed the measure of damages which ordinarily would apply for the breach of a contract to construct such an improvement, the case was decided upon the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover loss of profits from a lease executed without the defendant's knowledge, after a breach of the contract had already occurred. In Fabian v. Lammers, 3 Cal. App. 109, 84 P. 432, certain parties owning adjoining lands had agreed that each would build a levee across his particular land; the entire project being to the mutual advantage of all. The plaintiffs built their part, but the defendant failed to build his. His portion being necessary to the success of the whole plan, after notice, the plaintiffs filled in the gap across the defendant's land. The court held that the plaintiffs had paid in full by building their respective portions, and that they were entitled to recover the cost of doing what the defendant had agreed to do, under the rule laid down in Taylor v. N. P. C. R. R. Co., supra. In Turner v. Howze, 28 Cal. App. 167, 151 P. 751, the defendant agreed, in connection with a subdivision proposition, to put in certain street improvements. He failed to do so, and the court held the measure of damages was the cost of doing the work. It appears that the plaintiff had fully performed, and had nothing more to do, so far as the defendant was concerned.

While appellant concedes that the rule contended for has in no California case been applied to a contract for the drilling of an oil well, she cites certain cases from other states in support of her theory that this measure of damages applies to such a contract, which cases we will now consider. In Ardizonne v. Archer, 72 Okl. 70, 178 P. 263, it was held that the measure of damages for the breach of an agreement to drill an oil well to a certain depth, under the facts and circumstances of that case, was the cost of doing the work. It appears that the plaintiff had already delivered to the defendant a lease to the land in question, and nothing remained to be done by him. The court said the situation was analogous to a contract to build a house, where the other party has been paid in advance. In U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Gray, 106 Okl. 222, 233 P. 731, the court applied the same rule, under the facts and circumstances there existing. One circumstance was that the plaintiff, before the work was begun, had executed and delivered leases of the land to the defendant, who, in turn, had sold some of them to other parties. In Okmulgee v. Baugh, 111 Okl. 203, 239 P. 900, 902, a similar rule was followed. The court said: "The object of the contract was to put down two test wells for oil and gas in 'Wildcat' territory. For this purpose the assignment of the leases were made. The defendant received full pay to put down the test wells." In Fraley v. Wilkinson, 79 Okl. 21, 191 P. 156, the court states that, where lots were deeded to the defendant in consideration of some cash and an agreement to erect a brick building thereon, in order to benefit other lots owned by the plaintiff, the measure of damages would be the cost of the building, the consideration having been fully paid. In Knupp v. Bright, 186 Pa. 181, 40 A. 414, the plaintiff agreed to assign his interest in a certain lease to the defendant, who agreed to drill an oil well on the property. The trial court instructed the jury to find for the defendant, if they found that the assignment of the lease had not been delivered, but, if they found the assignment had been delivered, they should find for the plaintiff, for the amount it would cost to do the work. On appeal, this instruction was approved. Appellant also cites Johnstown R. R Co. v. Egbert, 152 Pa. 53, 25 A. 151; Gibson v. Oliver, 158 Pa. 277, 27 A. 961; and Mollohan v. Patton, 110 Kan. 663, 202 P. 616, 205 P. 643, none of which are of assistance here; the first two being actions to recover rent agreed to be paid, and the last being an action to recover damages for failing to reconvey leased land, and definite damages were proved.

In Wallace v. Ah Sam, supra, the court states the general rule as follows: "Ordinarily, the measure of damages for the breach of a contract to construct levee, a fence, or any similar work is: (1) If payment has been made, the cost of constructing the work. (2) If payment has not been made, the excess of the cost of the work over the contract price."

Assuming, but not deciding, that the rule ordinarily applied to contracts for the construction of houses, levees, fences, etc., that the measure of damages is the cost of doing the work, is applicable to contracts for the drilling of oil wells, this rule applies only where full payment has been made in advance. If payment has not been made in advance, as pointed out in Wallace v. Ah Sam, supra, the measure of damages is the excess of the cost of the work over the contract price, or, if part of the contract price has been paid, as pointed out in 8 California Jurisprudence, 832, the measure of damages is the excess of the cost of completing the work over the unpaid portion of the contract price. It will be noted that in all of the cases relied upon by appellant, as above referred to, the full contract price had been paid by the plaintiff, and nothing remained for him to do.

The appellant here rests her entire case upon the ground that she had paid in advance all of the compensation which respondents were to receive for drilling the well, and that, under the authority of the cases cited. the measure of her damages is the cost of completing the work, the amount of which is not in dispute. Our first question then is whether appellant had, in the instant case, fully paid for the work in advance. Appellant argues, "Had she made a contract with respondents to pay a certain sum of money in cash for a well to a depth of 3000 feet, and paid them the cash in advance, there could not be the slightest doubt as to the legitimacy of the contract; and if they had thereafter failed to drill the well she could have recovered damages, and the measure of those damages would be, not the price paid, but the cost of doing the work." She also argues that the only compensation respondents were to receive for drilling the well consisted of the right given them to enter upon the land and prospect for oil—of her agreement to obtain a lease from the government after the discovery of oil, and assign the same to respondents—and of her agreement that respondents might then take all oil or gas produced on the land, after paying the government rentals and her royalty. It is argued that, by these agreements upon her part, appellant had fully paid and compensated the respondents for the work they were required to do.

There is a wide difference between agreeing to do something, and doing the same. Agreeing to pay a fixed sum for erecting a house would hardly be considered full payment in advance. Paying in advance a fixed sum for drilling a well 3,000 feet deep, as referred to in the illustration used by appellant, is quite different from agreeing that, after such a project is completed, if a certain result is obtained, payment will then be made by obtaining something from a third party, and then conveying it to the party doing the work. In each of the oil cases from other states cited by appellant, it will be observed that the court particularly points out that the plaintiff had either deeded the land or assigned a lease to the other party, in advance. In each of those cases, the plaintiff had done everything he was to do; in other words, had fully paid. In the instant case, while the appellant agreed to do certain things, these were not done in advance, and much remained for her to do. She did not even agree to compensate respondents for drilling by giving them a lease to the land. She only agreed to do this in the event certain results should be obtained. The results never having been obtained, she was neither required to, nor did she, deliver to them any such lease. If respondents had performed, and if successful results had been obtained, the contract would then have called for further compensation to them. Like an owner who agrees that, if a building is built, and if it proves successful for a certain purpose, he will secure the money from a third party and pay it to the builder, this appellant agreed that, if the well should be drilled, and should prove successful, she would obtain a lease from the government, and would assign the same to respondents, thereby compensating them for the work done. In effect, this contract provides that, if the work is not done or is unsuccessful, appellant does not have to pay, but, if it is done and is successful, she is to pay by securing and assigning to the respondents what would then be a valuable lease. This presents a different situation from the cases cited by appellant, where nothing remained to be done by the plaintiff, not even so much as a scratch of a pen, and where the defendant had received all that he was ever to receive from the plaintiff, whether the results were successful or not. We conclude that, under the facts and circumstances shown here, the appellant had not paid in advance for the drilling of this well. For the reason that the facts show that the respondents had not been fully compensated in advance for the work to be done, we think the rule contended for does not apply, and that the measure of damages in the instant case is not the cost of completing the work. If we are correct in this, under appellant's statement in raising the point, the judgment should be affirmed.

If, as appellant contends, a contract for the drilling of an oil well comes under the same rules of law as govern building and construction contracts, then, under those rules, as above stated, the measure of damages in the instant case would be the excess of the cost of completing the work, over the unpaid portion of the purchase price. While the cost of completing the work mentioned was stipulated to by the parties and found by the court, the record contains no evidence from which a court could determine what portion of the contract price remained unpaid. There is no evidence as to what was the value of the right presently given by the contract in question, being the part of the compensation paid in advance, nor what was the value of the lease to be secured and assigned to respondents, being the portion that was not paid in advance. And this last item would vary according to whether or not the results were successful. The apparent difficulty of securing such evidence is indicative of the speculative nature of this undertaking. Not only was there no evidence before the court to justify an award of damages upon that basis, but the appellant recognizes how any such element of damages, under the circumstances of this case, would run into the speculative, uncertain, and remote, when, after discussing the general matter of damages, she says: "The foregoing considerations, and other rules not especially noticed, exclude every other measure except cost of drilling." For that reason, apparently appellant's entire case has been based, both at the trial and upon this appeal, on the theory that the measure of damages contended for was and is applicable to the facts of this case. Whether or not any damages could have been shown by appellant, in the absence of a provision in the contract providing for liquidated damages, nothing appears in the facts before the trial court, as shown by the bill of exceptions, which would have justified other than nominal damages. Not only should the case not be reversed because of the failure of the trial court to find in favor of the plaintiff for nominal damages only (Liljefelt v. Blum, 33 Cal. App. 721, 166 P. 384) but appellant, in her statement above quoted, has waived any such reversal.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment is affirmed.

WARREN et al. v. HILTSCHER et al.

Civ. 7718.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 26, 1931.

1. Evidence 🔑376(1).

Rule as to laying foundation for admission in evidence of account books stated.

> In order to lay the foundation for the admission of such evidence, it must be shown that the books in question are books of account kept in the regular course of the business; that the business is of a character in which it is proper or customary to keep such books; that the entries were either original entries or the first permanent entries of the transactions; that they were made at the time, or within reasonable proximity to the time, of the respective transactions; and that the persons making them had personal knowledge of the transactions, or obtained such knowledge from a report regularly made to them by some other person employed in the business whose duty it was to make the same in the regular course of business.

2. Evidence 🔑354(22).

Account book, in which deceased contractor kept record of workers' time held properly admitted to account for expenditure of builder's payments to contractor.

> There was evidence to show the account book, or time book, was used by the contractor to enter time reports as given him by his foreman. The foreman identified it, and the handwriting in it, and testified he saw the contractor at various times enter time reports in the book, which he carried continuously. In addition, all the names, together with the amounts credited them, tallied when compared to canceled checks issued to all the workmen.

3. Evidence 🔑355(7).

Minute or memorandum, made at time when fact it records took place, by person since deceased, in ordinary course of business, corroborated by other circumstances, is admissible in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Hiram Warren, as administrator with will annexed of the estate of James E. Dawson, deceased, and another, against John F. Hiltscher and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

A. E. McManus, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff Hiram Warren is the administrator with the will annexed of the estate of James E. Dawson, deceased. The plaintiff Minnie L. Engle is the executrix of the last will and testament of Bertha Dawson, deceased. The plaintiffs, acting in their representative capacity as aforesaid, commenced this action to recover from the defendants certain commissions alleged to be due on a contract of employment made and executed between the defendants and James E. Dawson. The court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal therefrom.

[1, 2] This appeal is based upon the claim that the admission in evidence of the book of account, called the "time book," was reversible error, that it should have been excluded, and that without it there was no evidence upon which the court could predicate its findings.

It is undisputed that the defendants entered into a written contract with said Dawson. By its terms the defendants employed Dawson to construct a certain building, and for such services he was to receive as compensation 10 per cent. of the cost of construction, the same to be paid upon completion of the building. Acting under said contract, Dawson constructed the building at a cost of $50,372.80, and he thereby became entitled to a commission of $5,037.28. During the course of the construction of said building, the defendants paid to Dawson $12,312.90, which sum, according to the time book received in evidence, was accounted for by payments for labor and material used in said building. A balance of $2,128.25 was found to be due the plaintiffs. This sum, together with interest allowed by the court, made a total of $2,434.80, the amount for which judgment was rendered. Appellants, as heretofore stated, claim that the time book was not properly proved so as to entitle it to admission in evidence. The rule governing the admission in evidence of books of account is clearly stated in Chan Kiu Sing v. Gordon, 171 Cal. 28, 151 P. 657, where it is held that, "in order to lay the foundation for the admission of such evidence it must be shown that the books in question are books of account kept in the regular course of the business; that the business is of a character in which it is proper or customary to keep such books; that the entries were either original entries or the first permanent entries of the transactions; that they were made at the time, or within reasonable proximity to the time, of the respective transactions; and that the persons making them had personal knowledge of the transactions, or obtained such knowledge from a report regularly made to him by some other person employed in the business whose duty it was to make the same in the regular course of business. 1 Elliott on Evidence, §§ 458 to 463, inclusive; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1554; 2 Jones on Evidence, § 322."

To establish the authenticity of the time book, the respondents called as a witness Lester A. Daniels, who testified that he was the foreman of the carpenters who worked on the job, and that it was his duty to see that all the men were at work; that he kept the time of the men and gave it to Mr. Dawson; that he generally checked up the time each Saturday morning; that whenever he gave the time to Mr. Dawson the latter would enter it in his time book; that he (Mr. Dawson) carried the time book continuously; that sometimes the witness would pay off the men and sometimes they were paid by Dawson; that they were paid by check. The witness was then shown the time book and asked if he had ever seen it before, to which he replied: "I have, I would say it was this time book that Mr. Dawson carried with him continuously." The witness also testified that he was familiar with the handwriting of Dawson at the time of the transaction. The witness was further asked the following questions and gave the following replies:

"Q. Now examine that book and state whether or not you can say that is Mr. Dawson's handwriting or not? A. It is like I said before, I would say yes.

"Q. That is your best? A. That is the best of my knowledge. I would say that handwriting resembled Mr. Dawson's handwriting enough—I would say it was Mr. Dawson's handwriting."

The witness also identified the book by certain peculiarities in Dawson's handwriting; also by the personal account of the witness appearing in the book. On cross-examination the witness admitted that he "couldn't absolutely identify that book, as the book," and he made some similar expressions which threw some possible or imaginary doubt upon his identification of the book.

It is further claimed by the appellant that the items for painting were not in any manner identified. On this subject the witness Daniels testified that he knew that some money was paid to the painters on the job; that he saw Mr. Dawson give them a check, but did not know the amounts due them; that Dawson kept the entire—that the book he carried kept the entire time of all. The witness also said: "I know he kept the time of everything in the book that he carried * * * because I saw him putting the time down." The witness admitted he did not always see him put it down, but that he kept the time in that one book; that he did not know whether the time of the painters was correct, because the witness did not write it down himself; he did know some of the painters whose names appeared in the book. In addition to the foregoing, all of the names together with the amounts thereof were compared with the canceled checks issued to all of the workmen, and they tallied. In 10 Ruling Case Law, p. 1175, it is said: "The admissibility of books of account, is in the first instance a question for the court, to be determined upon the preliminary proof made as required either at common law or by statute." In the instant case the court held the time book admissible, and we think the ruling was correct.

[3] In Jones on Evidence, § 323, the rule is stated that: "It has long been a settled rule of law both in England and in this country that a minute or memorandum in writing made at the time when the fact it records took place by a person since deceased, in the ordinary course of business corroborated by other circumstances which render it probable that the fact occurred is admissible in evidence." In Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 31, 84 P. 417, 419, it was claimed the court erred in admitting in evidence the cashbook and two ledgers kept by the deceased, but it was shown that the books were kept in the regular course of business, the entries were contemporaneous with the facts they represented, and they were in the handwriting of the deceased. The court said: "It may not be doubted that the books were admissible in evidence."

Section 1946 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that such entries may be read as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. We believe the book was properly received in evidence. No other point is presented for a reversal of the judgment.

It follows that the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by H. Rasmussen against the Pacific Fruit Exchange, a corporation, with a cross-complaint by defendant against plaintiff and others. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

G. L. Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for appellant.

N. Lindsay South, of Fresno, for respondents.

MARKS, J.

The complaint in this action contains eleven separate causes of action. Plaintiff and his father, M. Rasmussen, were engaged in the joint enterprise of raising Thompson seedless grapes for market. M. Rasmussen and ten others assigned their causes of action against the defendant corporation to the plaintiff, who thereupon brought suit against defendant upon his own and the assigned causes of action. Except for the several amounts of grapes delivered, and the several amounts of indebtedness claimed, the causes of action are identical.

It is alleged by plaintiff that on or about the 5th day of July, 1928, defendant entered into a verbal contract with plaintiff and M. Rasmussen whereby they agreed to deliver to defendant Thompson seedless grapes, and defendant agreed to pack and sell said grapes, f. o. b. Miley, Cal., guaranteeing to the growers the sum of $1.10, less 46 cents charges, for the grapes so delivered; that 861 crates were delivered to defendant at said price; that a few days later defendant entered into another and similar agreement with plaintiff and M. Rasmussen whereby they agreed to deliver Thompson seedless grapes to defendant and defendant agreed to pack and sell the same f. o. b. Miley, California, guaranteeing the sum of 90 cents a crate, less 45 cents packing and other charges; that 204 crates were delivered under the terms of this contract; that defendant accepted the delivery of the grapes and advanced plaintiff and his father $238.30 on account thereof, leaving a balance due and unpaid in the sum of $864.86.

Defendant denied the guaranty of a fixed price for the grapes, and alleged that they were delivered to it as brokers to sell for the growers upon a commission basis. Defendant further alleged that at the time of making the contract with plaintiff and his assignors it had the grapes sold f. o. b. points of loading, but that the prospective purchasers rejected them, forcing defendant to send the grapes to, and sell them at, auction. It is admitted that this was done without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff and his assignors. Defendant pleads a custom of the trade in justification of such action on its part. The grapes did not sell for sufficient money to pay the advances made by defendant and costs of packing, shipping, inspection, and sale.

Defendant filed a cross-complaint to recover its losses from the cross-defendants. The case was tried before a jury which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against defendant on its cross-complaint. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff, and the defendant and cross-complainant has prosecuted this appeal.

The sole point made by defendant and cross-complainant, and upon which it relies for a reversal of the judgment, is that the evidence does not sustain the judgment, in that it does not show any guaranty on the part of the defendant and cross-complainant that the plaintiff and his assignors would receive the sums claimed by them, and, further, that the evidence shows that defendant had the right, by a custom of the trade which constituted a part of its contracts, to ship the grapes to auction and sell them for the best price obtainable after they had been rejected at the California loading points, and charge the losses resulting therefrom to the sellers.

[1, 2] As the sole question on this appeal is whether or not the evidence sustains the judgment, it will only be necessary for us to set forth a synopsis of the evidence most favorable to plaintiff and cross-defendants. If such evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment, it is binding and conclusive upon this court. We cannot set aside the verdict of the jury and reverse the judgment because the evidence is conflicting.

[3] Plaintiff and his father were both called as witnesses to their contracts with defendant. It appears that the contracts were oral and were made with the authorized agents of defendant. They testified that the agents promised to receive their grapes, and guaranteed that the growers would receive $1.10 per crate, less charges thereon amounting to 46 cents. The manager of defendant gave M. Rasmussen the following memorandum: $1.10 f. o. b. 35 cents packing and 11 commission, 46, and deduct from $1.10 leaving 64 cents net." There was a second agreement under which additional grapes were delivered by plaintiff and his father to defendant and under which defendant promised to sell the grapes f. o. b. Miley, Cal., and guaranteed that the growers would receive 90 cents a crate less 45 cents charges of packing and sale. Plaintiff and his father were positive in stating that defendant guaranteed these prices to them; that the grapes were to be sold f. o. b. Miley, Cal., and were to be paid for in cash at the shipping point, and that the grapes were subject to state and county inspection only, which they passed. The testimony of all the other growers was substantially to the same effect except as to the loading points. Two witnesses added the detail that defendant promised to pay for the grapes as soon as they were loaded on the cars.

All of the growers had had considerable unfortunate experience in former seasons in consigning grapes to eastern auction markets through brokers. All refused to consign the grapes in question and insisted that defendant sell them for cash f. o. b. California loading points. None of the growers knew that defendant had shipped the grapes on consignment to eastern auction markets until all of them had been sold there.

Under this testimony, the custom of the trade relied upon by defendant is not applicable. Instances in which customs of the trade may be considered as a part of contracts are clearly set forth in 6 California Jurisprudence, 315, as follows: "Parties who contract on a subject matter concerning which known usages prevail, by implication incorporate them into their agreements, if nothing is said to the contrary. Evidence may be given of usage to explain the true character of a contract or instrument, where such true character is not otherwise plain. In such case usage is an instrument of interpretation. The rule has also been stated as follows: 'Evidence of usage is admitted to annex incidents to contracts where it is apparent that the parties have omitted to state important parts of their agreements, and the incident so annexed is consistent with the express terms and its inclusion can fairly be presumed to have been intended by the parties.' But usage is admissible only as an instrument of interpretation. Usage should not be regarded at all, unless it be of such a character as may be supposed to have influenced parties; and none can be ordinarily presumed to do this, but such as is public and continued. A usage, of course, cannot be given in evidence to relieve a party from his express stipulation, or to vary a contract certain in its terms. It has been said that the gate to a limitless field for the exercise of chicanery and deceit would be opened if parties were permitted to nullify a contract by evidence of a custom at variance with its terms."

In the instant case the contracts were definite and contained the distinct agreement that the grapes were to be sold f. o. b. California loading points, subject only to state and county inspection. These contracts would by their terms exclude the purchasers from consigning the grapes to auction without the consent of the growers.

The case of Glantz v. Freedman, 100 Cal. App. 611, 280 P. 704, presents a state of facts almost identical with the one which we are considering. In the Glantz Case the court went further than we are required to go in the instant case. It held that the plaintiff could sue the defendant for the reasonable value of his grapes instead of basing his suit upon a guaranteed price. It was held there that the principal may treat the unauthorized sale of his property by a broker as a conversion of the goods. We think that the evidence in the instant case will bring it within the rule of the Glantz Case.

[4] Plaintiff and his assignors delivered their grapes to defendant to be sold by it f. o. b. California loading points subject only to state and county inspection. Defendant guaranteed plaintiff and his assignors minimum cash returns for these grapes. Defendant did not sell the grapes f. o. b. California loading points, but consigned them to itself at eastern markets. It was not authorized to do this. Under the express terms of its contracts it therefore becomes liable to plaintiff and his assignors for the minimum price it guaranteed for the grapes. The record amply supports the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Pro Tem. JAMISON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action for damages caused by the breaking of appellant's water main, thereby flooding the basement of respondent's building and causing loss and injury to said building and to the property of respondent contained therein.

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: During the years 1923 and 1924 appellant was supplying water to the city of Long Beach, and for that purpose was maintaining an eight-inch water main in the alley in the rear of respondent's building, through which it distributed water to its consumers. On the 27th of April, 1924, there was a breach in said water main from which a large volume of water found its way into respondent's building, causing damage to the basement of said building and to the property contained therein. Some time prior to the break a connection had been made with the main in said alley at a point behind respondent's building, and it was at this place that the break occurred.

Appellant admitted by its answer that it had the management and control of the said main and caused to flow through it a great quantity of water under high pressure.

At the trial of the case respondent produced proof of the breaking of the main and the resultant flooding of its building and damage to its property therefrom, and that a break of this character does not occur in the usual course of things, if those having the management thereof use proper care, and upon this proof rested its case. Appellant then moved the court to grant a nonsuit upon the ground that respondent had not made out a case, that it had failed to show that appellant was negligent, but, upon the contrary, had shown that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence. The motion was denied by the court, and appellant then produced evidence tending to show absence of negligence on its part and contributory negligence upon the part of respondent. Thereupon respondent produced evidence in rebuttal tending to prove affirmative negligence on the part of appellant.

[1] The appellant claims that the court erred in denying its motion for a nonsuit, for the reason that, when respondent rested its case, the only evidence of appellant's negligence was the presumption of negligence arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and that the facts proven in this case in no wise warranted the application of this doctrine.

R. L. Wentz testified that he examined the building and premises of respondent the morning after its flooding and found that the water which entered the building came from a break in this main.

Clark H. Shaw, appellant's chief engineer of its water department, testified that there was an eight-inch main, owned and managed by appellant, located in the alley in question, and that in his opinion a water main of the kind and character of this would not, with proper care and management, in the ordinary course of events, break or burst. In a recent case decided by our Supreme Court, that of Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 265 P. 238, 239, 59 A. L. R. 480, the court said: "The courts of this state have long since adopted the rule as expressed in 1 Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (6th Ed.) p. 132, viz.: 'Where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of proper care'"—citing O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 223, 146 P. 674, and many other decisions of the Supreme Court. The case of Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. City of Portland, 34 Or. 282, 55 P. 961, 43 L. R. A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, cited by respondent in its brief, the facts are similar to those in the instant case. That was an action for damages caused by the bursting of a water main belonging to the city of Portland and managed and controlled by it. The court held that, it being shown that the main was under the management of the city and that the accident is such as, in the ordinary cause of things, does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care.

In the case now under consideration, the things which contributed to the accident, that is to say, the water which entered respondent's building and the main which broke, permitting water to escape therefrom, were both managed and controlled by appellant.

Appellant's chief engineer, who by reason of his official duties was familiar with this main and of its construction, testified that, in the ordinary course of things, the main would not have burst, if those having management of it used proper care.

We are of the opinion that the evidence produced by respondent established a prima facie case, and that the trial court did not err in denying the motion for a nonsuit.

Appellant next contends that the evidence shows that the accident was entirely owing to the negligence of respondent. During the year 1923, respondent had a building under construction which adjoined its old building and which abutted upon the alley in which the said main was located; said main being about five feet from the west wall of said building. Appellant produced testimony to the effect that, in preparing the foundation and basement for the said building, respondent made an excavation, some forty feet in depth, that said excavation caused a part of the alley in which the main was located to cave in, leaving the main without support, and that by reason thereof the weight of the main caused it to sag down, and that this sagging produced the break and consequent flooding of respondent's building.

The evidence shows that a connection was made with the main, according to appellant's witnesses in October, 1923, but respondents' witnesses testified it was done about two months preceding the break, and that at the point where this connection was made the break occurred, and that this connection was made by the insertion of a T pipe in the main, that in inserting a T pipe in a main it is necessary to cut the main at a joint and place the T in the cut place, caulking one end of the T into the main; the other end being made a part of the main by placing a sleeve over the cut end of the main and the end of the T and caulking it in. This sleeve was about sixteen inches in length and was cast iron and was cut from a piece of pipe with a cold chisel and sledge. This connection was made at a point in the alley opposite the south corner of the old building and at the north corner of the new building, and was made for the purpose of conducting water into the new building.

Respondent produced evidence to the effect that, for the purpose of installing this connection, the employees of appellant dug a ditch ten feet long, four feet wide, and two feet below the main; that the ground where this ditch was dug was solid, and that, when the ditch was filled, the dirt was thrown back loosely and was not tamped down under the main and rendered solid so as to furnish support for the main, and the leakage from the main softened the loose earth underneath the main and caused it to sag and break; that a main with a sleeve is stronger than the joints in a main unless the sleeve is defective, and that a sagging pipe will pull out at the joint before the sleeve will give way, if the sleeve is properly made; that only a practiced workman can cut a sleeve without cracking it; that there were five joints exposed when this break occurred and none of them had pulled out.

There is no evidence indicating which one of appellant's employees cut this sleeve, but the foreman who superintended the putting in of the sleeve testified that it was not defective or cracked. A piece of the sleeve was seen by one of appellant's employees after the accident, and he testified that it split lengthwise.

On rebuttal R. L. Wertz, a witness for respondent, the superintendent of construction of respondent's building, testified that he had full charge of the work done in the construction of the building; that when the excavation for the foundation and basement reached a depth of eighteen or twenty feet, a sluffing off of the ground next to the alley took place; that this sluffing extended over a distance of twenty-five or thirty feet, extending into the alley from a minimum distance to three and one-half feet; that he immediately shored up the alley where the sluffing occurred and then back-filled to keep the alignment intact. This witness further testified that the cause of the sluffing of the dirt from the alley resulted from moist condition of the ground produced by leaks from the main. When the wall of the building next to the alley was completed, the shoring was removed and the space where the sluf had taken place was back-filled and tamped so that the surface of that part which was back-filled was slightly above other portions of the surface of the alley; that this back-filling was done more than a year before the break in the main.

There was evidence on the part of respondent that on several occasions appellant was notified that its said main was leaking, and at said times it had its employees repair the main.

The court found, in substance, that the main leaked and caused the soil to become soft and left the main without support, so that it sagged and settled, and by reason thereof, broke and permitted water therefrom to escape to respondent's damage; that appellant had full knowledge of the dangerous condition of said main, and, having such knowledge, permitted it to remain in that condition until the break occurred; that the appellant was guilty of negligence in using defective material and making the connection and in failing to properly repair and support the main and that this negligence was the proximate cause of the breaking of the main; and that the respondent was not guilty of negligence.

Respondent's proof that the breaking of the main was caused under circumstances which raised the presumption of negligence on the part of appellant can only be counteracted by proof on the part of appellant that it in no wise had been guilty of negligence. This the appellant endeavored to do by proof that the break was caused by the removal of the supporting earth from the main in making the excavation for respondent's building.

In refutation of this evidence, the respondent, in rebuttal, produced evidence to the effect that more than one year before the break it had replaced and tamped the earth which had broken away from the alley at the time of the excavation, and that the withdrawal of the supporting earth from the main was done by appellant's employees in making repairs on said main and repairing leaks therein.

In this connection, it was said by the Supreme Court, in Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 265 P. 238, 240, 59 A. L. R. 480, that "it is for the jury, or for the court when sitting without a jury, to determine from all the evidence in the case whether the defendant has successfully met and rebutted the prima facie case made out by the plaintiff in an action wherein the mere proof of the happening of the accident and the circumstances surrounding it give rise to an inference of negligence. That the inference of negligence created by the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur constitutes evidence which may not be disregarded by the jury, but is to be weighed and considered as against the evidence adduced by the defendant in rebuttal thereof, has been announced in numerous cases." Further along in this same decision the Supreme Court quotes with approval the following words used in the opinion rendered in the case of Travers v. Murray, 87 App. Div. 552, 84 N. Y. S. 558, where, after stating that the mere fall of a chimney was sufficient to give rise to an inference of negligence, the court held such inference "alone is enough to sustain the verdict, even in face of the attempted explanation on the part of the defendant."

[2] The respondent, in the case now under consideration, having established a prima facie case of negligence on the part of appellant, it then became the duty of the appellant to rebut that presumption by evidence showing that it exercised the requisite degree of care and that it was not negligent. There is a decided conflict between the evidence produced by the appellant to the effect that the break in the main was without its fault and the rebutting evidence of respondent to the contrary. There is substantial evidence that it was due to the negligence of appellant that the main broke. Such being the case, the findings of the court cannot be disturbed. 2 Cal. Jur. 921.

Appellant devotes considerable space of his rather voluminous brief to a discussion of the relative rights of coterminous landowners.

In view of the decision we have reached, we think it unnecessary to give consideration to those matters.

The judgment is affirmed.

McMURRY v. PACIFIC READY-CUT HOMES, Inc., et al.

Civ. 167.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 26, 1931.

1. Principal and agent ⚷14(2).

Act or omission on part of alleged principal is necessary to create liability on theory of ostensible agency (Civ. Code, § 2300).

2. Principal and agent ⚷23(5).

Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that contractors were ostensible agents of lumber manufacturing concern in entering into building contract (Civ. Code, § 2300).

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Henry H. McMurry against the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., and others, wherein Jessie F. McMurry, as administratrix, was substituted as plaintiff in place and stead of original plaintiff who had died before trial. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals.

Reversed.

Hubert Starr, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jess G. Sutliff, of Independence, for plaintiff-respondent.

MARKS, J.

This action was brought by Henry H. McMurry to recover damages against defendants for breach of contract. After the action was instituted, and before the trial, he died, and Jessie M. McMurry, the administratrix of his estate, was substituted as plaintiff in his place and stead.

The contract upon which the action is based was entered into by Henry H. McMurry and Jessie F. McMurry, his wife, with Frey & McIntyre for the construction of a house at Big Pine in Inyo county. Frey & McIntyre abandoned the contract, and McMurry completed it. Plaintiff claims $740.88 damages, as money expended in completing the house over and above the contract price, and $300 special damages for its rental value for the period of the delay in construction. A judgment was entered against all defendants for the damages prayed for.

Appellant presents several assignments of error upon which it relies for a reversal of the judgment. Under the view we take of the case it will be necessary for us to consider but one of them. The court found that Frey & McIntyre were the ostensible agents of appellant in entering into the contract with deceased and his wife. If the evidence fails to support this finding, the judgment must be reversed.

Section 2300 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him."

In 1 California Jurisprudence, at page 739, the elements essential to the creation of an ostensible agency are clearly set forth as follows: "There are two essential features of an ostensible authority, viz., the third person must believe that the agent had authority, and such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person to be held. To state the same requirements in different terms and in reverse order, there must be some intentional conduct or neglect on the part of the alleged principal creating a belief in the minds of third persons that an agency exists, and a reasonable reliance thereon by such third persons. Attention will be given in the following sections to the rules that the third person must believe that the agent possessed the authority assumed, and that this belief must have arisen by reason of the acts and declarations of the principal, recognizing the authority of the agent in similar previous transactions. In addition to these more important elements, there is a further requirement that the third person, in relying on the agent's apparent authority, must not have been guilty of negligence."

In the case of Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., v. Seeber, 205 Cal. 690, 272 P. 579, 581, the court said: "All parties to this controversy concede that it is settled law that ostensible agency cannot be created alone by the representations of the purported agent himself, but that there must be some act or conduct on the part of the principal by which he either intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third person to believe that the agent possesses the authority to bind him as principal (Civ. Code, §§ 2300, 2317, 2334)."

[1] From these rules of law it is apparent that in this case there would have to have been some act or omission on the part of Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., to make Frey & McIntyre its ostensible agents. The evidence fails to disclose any intentional act on the part of appellant by which respondent and her husband could have been led to believe that this relation existed. If the ostensible agency existed, its source must be found in some neglect of duty or want of ordinary care on the part of appellant.

[2] Appellant was a manufacturing concern, with its principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles. It cut and prepared lumber for buildings at its factory, and delivered the material at the building sites ready to be placed in the structure. It had entered into a contract with E. R. Frey whereby he became an independent contractor for the use of such materials in the construction of buildings in Inyo county.

Respondent and her husband desired to erect a home in Big Pine. Douglas Joseph, one of their neighbors, had written a letter to appellant stating his desire to erect a dwelling, and had received a reply in which he referred to Frey as "our Builder who is maintaining a complete building service for Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, in your territory." Joseph informed deceased of this communication, and deceased and his wife got into communication with Frey. R. K. McIntyre, Frey's partner, called upon them in Big Pine, and left with them a pamphlet issued by appellant describing its mode of operation, and containing plans, specifications, and pictures of a large number of houses. In the center of one of the pages of this pamphlet, in a type distinctive from the other type on the page, and surrounded by brackets, appeared the following:

"Construction Service Outside of Los Angeles

"If your home is to be built distant from Los Angeles, outside of the traveling radius of our crews, arrangements can be made with nearest builder of Pacific Homes (name on request) to assume the responsibility."

The evidence shows that the pamphlet given to respondent and deceased by McIntyre was placed upon many news stands and in bookstores for sale, and was in many free libraries.

Negotiations resulted in a written contract bearing date the 22d day of May, 1928, "between Frey & McIntyre, contractor, and Henry H. McMurry, buyer, address, Big Pine, California." It was also signed by Jessie F. McMurry as buyer, though her name did not appear in the body of the agreement. The parts of this contract material here are as follows:

"That as between the parties to this agreement, and any assignee or successor in interest of either or both parties, said R-C building and equipment shall be regarded as personal property, and title to same and the right to immediate possession of same without any writ, process or order of any court, shall remain in aforesaid contractor, until the entire purchase price has been paid. * * *

"All orders are taken subject to approval of and acknowledgment by the company.

"The initial payment received under the terms of this contract is to be applied on account of preparing sketches, estimates on building, and general office charges of the contractor. Upon commencement of building operations the initial payment is to be applied on account of the purchase price as specified in said contract, the sketches, estimates, etc., to remain the property of the corporation."

On May 31, 1928, respondent and deceased made a payment of $2,288 by check payable to Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc. This check bears the indorsement of the corporation, and was paid on July 26, 1928. The second payment was made in the sum of $1,095, and was by check payable to Pacific Ready-Cut Homes. It bore the indorsement "Pacific Ready-Cut Homes by R. K. McIntyre." On August 29, 1928, a third payment was made in the sum of $1,100 by a check payable to Frey & McIntyre, and indorsed by them. Another check in the sum of $587 was drawn in favor of Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc. It was indorsed "Pacific Ready-Cut Homes by Frey & McIntyre." Appellant had no knowledge of the issuance or payment of any of these checks except the first.

Rafael Rossi testified that he had written appellant concerning the building of some houses for him, and had been called upon by Frey in reply to his letter. It does not appear that either respondent or deceased had any knowledge of this transaction prior to the completion of their home.

We have summarized all of the evidence in the record upon which respondent must rely to support the finding of ostensible agency. We believe that this evidence fails to support such a finding. Under the terms of the contract, appellant was entitled to receive and retain the money obtained on the first check issued by respondent and deceased. It had no knowledge of the other checks, and therefore could not be bound by their issuance. While the form of the contract between respondent and her deceased husband and the contractors was furnished to Frey by appellant, its name did not appear therein, and under its terms respondent and her husband were dealing with Frey & McIntyre as their contractors. In the letter from appellant to Joseph, Frey was referred to as a builder and not as the agent or other representative of Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc. We find from these facts no evidence of a neglect or omission to perform a duty on the part of appellant upon which respondent and her deceased husband could have relied to establish an ostensible agency on the part of Frey & McIntyre or either of them.

Judgment reversed.

ANDERSON v. SCRANTON et al., Board of Trustees.

Civ. 6098.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 26, 1931.

1. Mandamus ⚷168(4).

Evidence showed that permanent school teacher was discharged without hearing or statutory cause, justifying writ of mandate for reinstatement (Pol. Code, § 1609).

> There was no evidence that it had become necessary to decrease number of permanent teachers on account of decrease in number of pupils, or on account of discontinuance of particular kind of teaching service, which would have authorized discharge of teacher in view of Pol. Code, § 1609, which was in force at time cause of action arose.

2. Schools and school districts ⚷141(6).

That permanent school teacher, discharged without statutory cause, failed to protest until after trustees' employed new teacher, did not estop him to assert statutory rights (Pol. Code, § 1609).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Petition by John F. Anderson for a writ of mandate against Charles G. Scranton and others, to compel respondents, as the Board of Trustees of the Lugo Elementary School District, to reinstate petitioner as a school teacher. The trial court granted a peremptory writ, and respondents appeal.

Affirmed.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fall & Fall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

[1] Respondent by his petition alleged facts showing that he had been first employed as a probationary teacher of the elementary grades in Lugo elementary school district and had continued in that employment from the 7th day of August, 1924, until May 31, 1926, when he was re-employed as a permanent teacher for the next ensuing school year, to wit, September 13, 1926, to June, 1927, and under this employment did teach in this school throughout the school year. Petitioner further alleged that by virtue of the facts above stated, and by virtue of the laws of the state of California and particularly section 1609 of the Political Code, commonly known as the Teachers' Tenure Law, he became and was a permanent teacher in said Lugo school district, and by virtue thereof, was deemed employed in said district until legally discharged or resigned. The foregoing facts are not only alleged but are conceded to be true.

Petitioner further alleged facts which in substance are to the effect that on May 26, 1927, the board of trustees, without the presentation of any charges against him in relation to any of the matters set forth in section 1609 of the Political Code, and without any public hearing or any opportunity to be heard, attempted to discharge him from service and by its secretary notified him in writing as follows: "At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Lugo School Dist. on May 26, 1927, the Secretary was ordered to express the appreciation of the Board for your past work and to inform you that your services for the coming year would not be needed as it is found necessary to obtain some one who can handle the physical education as well as the sloyd work."

Petitioner further alleged that he has not resigned from his said employment, nor has the board of trustees found it necessary to decrease the number of permanent teachers employed by the school district on account of the decrease of the number of pupils attending, nor on account of the discontinuance of the particular kind of teaching service such as petitioner was engaged in in said district. The last-mentioned negative statements have relation to those grounds of removal of a teacher which are permitted without the filing of charges under the terms of said section 1609 of the Political Code, and in force at the time of said action taken by the board in May, 1927. In this case we are not concerned with the fact that said section was again amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1913), nor with the fact that the provisions of the Political Code on this subject have been superseded by the School Code adopted in the year 1929.

Defendants having answered the petition, the proceeding was brought to trial, and pursuant to findings duly made, the court entered its judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate, which requires that defendants reinstate the petitioner and pay his accrued salary. The defendants appeal from the judgment. The grounds of appeal as stated in the brief are: That the petitioner was not discharged but, on the contrary, his contract of employment was terminated by mutual consent; that petitioner did not voluntarily terminate his employment, but by his conduct was estopped to deny a voluntary termination; that petitioner waived his right to a formal dismissal under the Teachers' Tenure Act; that the board of trustees discontinued the particular kind of service rendered by petitioner and therefore might dismiss him without filing charges or holding a hearing; that petitioner has not been dismissed, but has merely been granted a vacation for a year without pay, pursuant to the right reserved in the contract; that the writ of mandamus does not lie in this case; that the judgment is erroneous in ordering payment of salary when the services have not been rendered.

The evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding that petitioner was discharged, and such discharge was in violation of the provisions of said section 1609 of the Political Code. In that section, in addition to the grounds of dismissal upon charges after a hearing thereon, it is provided "that whenever it becomes necessary to decrease the number of permanent teachers employed by a school district on account of the decrease in the number of pupils attending the schools of such district, or on account of the discontinuance of a particular kind of teaching service in such district, the governing board may dismiss such teacher or teachers at the close of the school year." There is no evidence that either of these conditions existed. The excuse offered was that it was found necessary to "obtain someone who can handle the physical education as well as the sloyd work." It thus appears that the sloyd work (which seems to have been the actual employment of petitioner) was to be continued in the school. In fact that board proceeded to employ another teacher of sloyd together with physical education. It is a fact shown by the evidence, although perhaps not material here, that petitioner was qualified as a teacher not only for sloyd but as a teacher in physical education work. It was stipulated at the trial that the certificate of petitioner on file in the county superintendent's office is sufficient to enable him to teach all subjects in the schools of California, and so far as the records go, he is entitled to teach every subject.

[2] The answer of the defendants alleged that neither upon receipt of notice given him in May, 1927, nor at any time prior to October, 1927, did petitioner protest against his dismissal or raise any objection thereto, but, on the contrary, petitioner at all times prior to the 24th day of October, 1927, consented to and acquiesced in his dismissal and intended respondents to rely upon his acquiescence; that respondents did so rely and act thereon and before the commencement of the school term in September, 1927, duly employed another teacher to fill petitioner's place and do his school work for the school year; that their action in so employing a successor was a direct result of petitioner's consent and acquiescence; and that petitioner is by his said consent estopped to deny that he is legally discharged. Upon this paragraph of the answer the court made no finding, and it is now contended by appellants that without a finding thereon the judgment cannot be sustained. We are of the opinion that under the evidence such finding if made would have been in favor of the petitioner, and if it were deemed necessary we would make that finding now. While the status of petitioner as a permanent teacher originated in contract, together with service under those contracts, it also appears that thereafter petitioner had been regularly classified and employed as a permanent teacher. Thereafter, by virtue of the statute, he was entitled to continue in the service as a permanent teacher unless and until some condition should arise which, under the provisions of the law, would authorize his dismissal. Saxton v. Board of Education, 206 Cal. 758, 276 P. 998.

Since it thus appears that at the time of his dismissal by the respondent, the petitioner was in possession of a right created by statute, and the term for which such position might be held was fixed by that statute, we think that the rule of estoppel relied upon by appellants has no application to the case. If in fact respondent without proper excuse failed to report for work at the opening of the school term, and if in that or any other way he was guilty of any misconduct which would justify his removal, the statute provides an appropriate proceeding whereby, after due notice and hearing, he might have been dismissed. But the board chose to stand upon the attempted dismissal, and respondent is entitled to have his rights determined directly upon the issue thus presented.

There is no merit in the claim of appellant that respondent was merely granted a vacation. He never asked for a vacation, and there is nothing in the proceedings of the board which can fairly be interpreted as having anything to do with a vacation.

The judgment is affirmed.

FEDER v. BRYSON et al.

Civ. 7719.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Jan. 29, 1931.

1. Evidence 🔑158(28).

In action for landlord's violating lease by failure to repair hotel after fire, tenant properly testified from own knowledge regarding income; production of tenant's only book, lost by landlord, being unnecessary.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1048(5).

Overruling objection to question held harmless, in absence of answer.

3. Evidence 🔑271(19).

Letter to plaintiff from defendants' counsel held properly excluded, where defendants failed to segregate self-serving and immaterial statements.

4. Appeal and error 🔑201(2), 1046(5).

Where juror asked what jury were to learn from particular evidence, court's reply, "Do the best you can," held not prejudicial; alleged error not being mentioned to judge.

5. Evidence 🔑543(4).

Insurance adjuster, who had adjusted losses and knew value of secondhand furniture, held competent to testify regarding value of hotel furniture involved in fire.

6. Trial 🔑46(1).

Excluding apparently immaterial question held not error; court not being advised of purpose.

7. Appeal and error 🔑206(2).

Having failed to enlighten court regarding subject of desired cross-examination, counsel could not complain court prohibited further cross-examination.

8. Trial 🔑89.

Unresponsive answer could be stricken out by court, in absence of showing that answer was otherwise admissible.

9. Trial 🔑29(2).

Court's remarking on futility of cross-examination, and stating what witness had said, held not objectionable as comment on weight of evidence.

10. Appeal and error 🔑207.

Statement by plaintiff's counsel regarding defendant's physical condition held not prejudical, in absence of motion to strike out, or to instruct jury to disregard it.

11. Landlord and tenant 🔑152(3).

Under agreement that, if fire damage could be repaired within 90 days, landlord should make repairs, landlord held obligated to make entire hotel tenantable.

12. Trial 🔑243.

Instruction that landlord must make every part of hotel tenantable after fire held not to conflict with instruction that hotel must be placed in condition to be used for purpose intended.

Jury could not construe language in either instruction in question as meaning more than that landlord had duty of placing entire building in tenantable condition.

13. Landlord and tenant 🔑154(5).

In action for landlord's violating lease by failure to repair hotel, evidence showing tenant's profits before and at time of fire held to authorize instruction regarding future profits.

14. Appeal and error 🔑699(4).

Refusal to give instruction on credibility of witnesses, held not prejudicial, at least where transcript failed to show instructions given.

15. Landlord and tenant 🔑152(10).

Where lease obligated landlord for repairs, no duty devolved on tenant to repair and deduct cost from rent.

L. Frank Ottofy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for damages. The first count of the complaint is for the sum of $10,800, alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff by reason of a violation of the terms of a lease. The second cause of action is for the sum of $2,685, alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff because of the wrongful conversion of certain personal property by the defendants. The cause was tried by a jury and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,500. Judgment was entered in accordance with said verdict. Defendants made a motion for a new trial. Said motion was denied, and the defendants have appealed. The defendant Theodore Ruberg has died, and the administrator of his estate has been substituted as one of the defendants.

It appears from a bill of exceptions that on November 7, 1923, said defendants Theodore Ruberg and Elizabeth Ruberg leased to the plaintiff Kohos Feder the Globe Hotel in the city of Los Angeles for a term of five years. The rental price thereof was to be paid in monthly installments of $175, payable in advance. On the same day the plaintiff purchased from the defendants the furniture and equipment used in connection with said hotel, for the sum of $3,500, which amount was paid in cash. The plaintiff entered into possession of said property, and, so far as the record discloses, everything proceeded satisfactorily to all concerned until June 8, 1926, when a fire partially destroyed the building and damaged the furniture. Because of the fire the plaintiff vacated the premises and left his furniture in the hotel. The failure of the defendants to repair the building or to allow plaintiff to have his furniture is the subject of the action. There is a provision in the lease that, if the premises are damaged by fire and the damage be of such a nature that the building can be repaired within ninety working days from the date of the fire, the lessors shall repair and replace the same as soon as reasonable, deducting the rents for the time it takes to repair the same. There is no claim by the appellants that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. It is their contention that the court erred in its rulings upon evidence and misdirected the jury on questions of law. There are thirty specifications of error in the bill of exceptions.

[1] The first specification of error is based upon the contention that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff to testify to the amount of income derived from the hotel at the time of the fire; that the court should have compelled the production of plaintiff's books. There are two answers to this claim. They are that plaintiff was testifying to facts within his own knowledge, and it is further shown by the record that the only book kept by the plaintiff was a schedule of the prices of the rooms; that this book was left in the hotel and the defendant Mrs. Ruberg had it in her possession thereafter, but did not know what she had done with it.

[2] The next error assigned was the overruling of the defendants' objection to a question asked of a witness. As there was no answer to the question, no error could follow the ruling of the court.

[3] It is next claimed that the court erred in excluding from the record a letter written by one Wells, an attorney for the defendants. This letter purported to be an offer to return articles of furniture that were in the hotel building and which it was claimed were part of the furniture belonging to plaintiff. This letter was written eight days after the commencement of this action. It also contained many self-serving declarations that were not proper evidence even had the letter been material to the issues, which it was not. The court was justified in excluding it from evidence in view of the failure of the defendants to segregate the immaterial matter.

[4] Another claim of error is based upon alleged misconduct of the trial court. Counsel for defendants asked the plaintiff where he kept the money he had made from the hotel business. At this point a juror asked what the jury were to learn from this evidence. The court replied: "Do the best you can." It is claimed that this remark reflected upon the weight of the evidence and influenced the jury against the defendants. Counsel has failed to point out the prejudicial effect of this statement, and we perceive none, nor was the alleged error called to the attention of the trial court.

[5] Another assignment of error is to the effect that one Nevins, an insurance adjuster, was permitted to testify as to the value of the furniture in the hotel. The witness made a schedule of all the furniture in the house and adjusted the furniture loss. The witness testified that he had never bought or sold secondhand furniture, but that he had adjusted such losses and knew the market value. He was, therefore, qualified to testify on that subject. However, an examination of the bill of exceptions shows that the only value placed on the furniture by this witness was $2,182.09, its value prior to the fire, therefore it was not responsive to the issue as to value subsequent to the fire.

[6] The next assigned error is the ruling of the court sustaining an objection to the following questions asked Morris Feder, a son of the plaintiff: "Q. Did you hear the testimony of Mary Alcazar given here, the housekeeper? A. Part of it. Q. Did you hear her testimony to the effect that there were cases where water had run from toilets and stained the walls and rooms of the building?" It is claimed by appellant that this question was merely preliminary to some later questions concerning damage done prior to the fire, by reason of defective plumbing. Standing alone this question was immaterial. It does not appear that the court was advised of its purpose. However, the information could have been elicited from the witness by direct questions for that purpose had it been proper cross-examination.

[7] The next assignment of error is also without merit. The plaintiff was called as a witness in his own behalf and testified that all the furniture in the premises belonged to him. His counsel then asked him: "What do you estimate the value of the furniture in that place after the fire?" To which the witness replied: "The furniture what I had without the lease is not worth much but with the lease is worth." Thereafter counsel for defendants undertook to cross-examine the witness, whereupon the court said: "Why do you want to cross-examine? What did he say except he didn't know. Do you want to cross-examine him on that?" To which counsel for defendant answered: "This matter I had in mind has already been answered, something I had overlooked." Then, referring to another matter, addressed counsel for plaintiff as follows: "Are you going to introduce this?" It is now claimed that by such conduct the trial court prohibited further cross-examination of the witness upon the question of value of the furniture. Had counsel stated to the court that the matter he desired to cross-examine the witness upon, and which he had overlooked, related to the value of the furniture, the court would no doubt have permitted him to do so. Having failed to enlighten the court, he should not at this time be permitted to take advantage of his failure to do so.

[8] It is also claimed that the court erred in striking out an answer to a question propounded by the attorney for the defendants to a witness on the ground that the answer was not responsive. It is claimed that the only one who can move to strike out an answer is the person asking the question. Appellants cite Hirshfield v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 223 P. 451, in support of this claim. The case cited would be in point if the answer struck out were otherwise admissible, but no such showing has been made.

[9] Appellants also claim that the court erred in making the statement to counsel: "Once in a while I suggest to counsel, what is the use of cross-examining? She said she was in there four months before the fire to see a friend." It is claimed that by this statement the court was passing upon the weight of the evidence. We do not believe the remark made by the court is subject to the interpretation placed upon it by appellant.

[10] The next exception goes to the claim that a motion to strike an answer can only be made where no prior opportunity is had to object, and only the questioning party can move to strike an answer as nonresponsive. This objection is answered by what has heretofore been said upon that subject. It is also objected that a statement made by counsel for respondent relative to the physical condition of defendant Theodore Ruberg was prejudicial error. The answer to this claim is that no motion was made to strike out the remark or to instruct the jury to disregard it.

[11] Appellants contend that the court erred in its instruction to the jury that, after the fire, if they found that the place could have been repaired within ninety working days, and if they further found that such repairs were not made within said time so as to make "the same and every part thereof tenantable," then they should find for the plaintiff, etc. It is claimed that this instruction was erroneous because the only obligation upon the appellants was to make the house "tenantable" not each and every part of it. We think it was the duty of the appellants, under the terms of the lease, to make the entire hotel tenantable. There is sufficient evidence in the bill of exceptions to sustain the implied finding by the jury that the hotel was never placed in "tenantable" condition.

[12, 13] It is next claimed that the following portion of another instruction is conflicting with the instruction last above referred to, in that the former instruction states that it was the duty of appellants to place the hotel and each and every part thereof in tenantable condition. The latter instruction states that it must be placed in such a condition so as to "be used by plaintiff and respondent for the purpose for which it was intended, namely, an hotel." We are of the opinion that the instructions are not conflicting. We do not believe a jury could possibly construe the language in either instruction as meaning more than it was the duty of the appellants to place the entire building in a tenantable condition. Complaint is also made that the court committed error in instructing the jury as to future profits to be derived from the hotel business upon failure to repair, it being the claim that there is no evidence upon that question. On this subject the evidence shows the profits made by the respondent prior to and at the time of the fire. This we believe is a sufficient basis for the jury to consider future profits.

[14, 15] The court refused to give a certain instruction on the credibility of the witnesses. It does not appear what general instruction the court gave. The transcript does not purport to contain all of the instruction. In any event, the instruction was upon a matter of common knowledge and does not constitute prejudicial error. Complaint is also made that, where the landlord fails to repair the premises, the remedy of the tenant is to repair and deduct the cost thereof from the rent. It is sufficient to say that, under the terms of the lease, the defendants obligated themselves to make the repairs, and therefore no duty devolved upon the plaintiff to make them.

The foregoing disposes of all the objections presented in the brief of appellants. There is no reversible error in the record presented.

The judgment is affirmed.

GULLICK v. INTERSTATE DRILLING CO. et al.

Civ. 6446.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Jan. 21, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⚷419(1).

Notice of appeal, referring only to judgment signed four days after granting of nonsuit, held sufficient as appeal from judgment of nonsuit.

2. Trial ⚷165.

Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or several inferences, on motion for nonsuit, court must take view most favorable to plaintiffs.

3. Trial ⚷160.

Statute does not authorize court of its own motion to order nonsuit at conclusion of plaintiff's testimony (Code Civ. Proc. § 581).

4. Stipulations ⚷14(1).

Where it was stipulated that defendants indorsed note, it must be inferred that note was signed by makers at same time (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 22).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 22, provides that there is a disputable presumption that an indorsement of a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange was made at the time and place of making the note or bill.

5. Alteration of instruments 🔑10.

Where indorser, on default, paid note, and his indorsement was struck out, prior indorsers and makers, when sued, could not claim alteration.

6. Bills and notes 🔑527(1).

As regards discharge of indorsers, evidence held not to show renewal of note sued on.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Wallace, Judge.

Action by T. M. Gullick against the Interstate Drilling Company, and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for respondent A. Zimmerman.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

[1] This appeal purports to be one from a judgment of nonsuit. Whether it is will depend upon the conclusion reached upon the contention of the respondents that the appeal should be dismissed. Heretofore a motion was made by them for a dismissal of the appeal, and was by this court denied. Gullick v. Interstate Drilling Co., 100 Cal. App. 243, 279 P. 828. Since that time they have made a motion for diminution of the record, which was granted, and the record is now supplemented by a copy of the minutes of the court for October 15, 1928, the material part of which reads as follows: "Motion of all defendants, by attorney Isaac Pacht for nonsuit is by the Court granted." It is to be noted that the judgment was signed four days later, or on October 19. The notice of appeal, which refers only to the judgment of October 19, was filed November 7, 1928, well within the time, even though it started to run on October 15. In view of the fact that the appeal was well within the sixty-day period, and also that the respondents could not possibly have had any doubt concerning the intention of the appellant to have reviewed the action of the court in granting a nonsuit, the dismissal of the present appeal would be the result of an insistence upon a pure technicality without either rhyme or reason. It would amount to reliance upon the shadow and not the substance. The law, however, does not require us to so act. It is to be observed that in Bengel v. Traeger, 100 Cal. App. 526, 280 P. 538, the sixty-day period had not only run when counted from the entry of the order of nonsuit on October 30, 1928, but also when reckoned from the entry of the so-called formal judgment on January 3, before the notice of appeal was filed on March 26, 1929. So, too, in Burks v. Bronson, 58 Cal. App. 143, 207 P. 1018, the second judgment was entered a month after the order of nonsuit was "entered on the minutes and noted in the register of actions by the clerk." In Estate of Yale, 208 Cal. 102, 280 P. 358, 359, the Supreme Court said: "Without in any manner attempting to minimize the force of the authorities cited and relied on by the respondents in support of their motion, it is our conclusion, founded on a reading of the several minute orders and of that portion of the formal judgment hereinabove quoted, that the minute orders were intended by the trial court, and must have been understood by the parties, to be and to serve merely as memoranda affording data from which a proper final judgment might thereafter be drafted disposing of the entire cause. In such a case an appeal is held to lie from the formal judgment. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 523, 524, 59 P. 937; Larson v. Larson, 15 Cal. App. 531, 536, 115 P. 340." In the case of Ferris v. Baker, just cited, it is said: "The order in this case was a mere narration by the clerk as follows: 'Defendants move the court for nonsuit on the grounds stated. Said motion is argued, and thereupon granted.' The order did not show what were the grounds of the motion. It did not purport to be a dismissal of the action, nor a judgment of any kind, and was in fact but a memorandum affording data from which a judgment or proper order might be drafted, similar to the minute made when final judgment is announced, directing that it pass for one party or the other." The identical observations may with all propriety be made concerning the minute entry here in question. In Larson v. Larson, supra, we also find appropriate language as follows: "We are inclined to think, however, that the first order was merely 'a memorandum affording data from which a judgment * * * might be drafted,' and that, therefore, the order of September 22d was the proper one from which to take the appeal. The Supreme Court so held in a similar case. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 P. 937. The appeal was in time, even if the order of nonsuit was entered as claimed by respondent. The error complained of, even if it existed, could not possibly have misled any one, for the notice of appeal identified the order appealed from with reasonable certainty. That is all that is required. Section 941b, Code Civ. Proc. Such errors have always been disregarded. See Weyl v. Sonoma Valley Ry. Co., 69 Cal. 202, 10 P. 510; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65, 1 Am. St. Rep. 34, 13 P. 73; Paul v. Cragnaz, 25 Nev. 293, 59 P. 857, 60 P. 983, 47 L. R. A. 540; British Bark Latona v. McAllep, 3 Wash. T. 332, 19 P. 131." Our conclusion is that an appeal has been duly taken.

We therefore turn to the question whether the nonsuit was properly granted. The action was upon a promissory note. The testimony adduced to support the plaintiff's cause of action shows in effect that the plaintiff had, through his nephew C. M. Gullick, loaned to the respondent Interstate Drilling Company upwards of $16,000; that the note sued upon for $5,162 was delivered to him by his nephew signed Interstate Drilling Co. H. Director Pres. C. M. Gullick Sec. S. Malis, and indorsed on the back by C. M. Gullick, H. Director, and A. Zimmerman; that appellant took the note to his bank, where he discounted it, indorsing it and guaranteeing payment; that, when the note fell due, it was not paid by the payor and indorsers, and he was obliged to pay it; that, after the bank was paid, a pen was drawn through his name, where it appeared as an indorser; that he could not give the exact amounts going to make up the note of $5,162 because his nephew, C. M. Gullick, kept the books for him. The note was delivered to him by his nephew, the defendant C. M. Gullick, who was not called as a witness. The face of the note waived "diligence, demand, presentment, protest and notice of protest." The signatures of the indorsers were admitted by stipulation.

The motion for a nonsuit was made on behalf of the defendant H. Director by counsel, who also represented the defendant Interstate Drilling Company, and was accompanied by the statement by that counsel that the defendant Zimmerman "joins in or is joining in" the motion. No response was forthcoming from counsel who represented the last-named defendant. After argument, the court announced that the motion was granted, but the judgment recites that the motion was made and granted as to defendants Director, Zimmerman, and Interstate Drilling Company, and awards costs, not only to them, but also to the remaining defendants, C. M. Gullick and S. Malis. The grounds of the motion of the defendant Director as stated by his counsel were: That the note sued upon was "not the note of the Interstate Drilling Company"; that no authority for its execution had "been established"; that the indorsers had been discharged from liability by reason of "a material alteration of the instrument," and by a renewal thereof without their knowledge or consent.

[2-4] The plaintiff was seventy-nine years of age, and at times somewhat confused in his testimony, but, when we apply the rule which should be made use of upon a motion for a nonsuit, it becomes apparent that the judgment should be reversed. The rule alluded to is that "where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if one of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiffs." Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 213 P. 45, 49. So far as the defendants Interstate Drilling Company, C. M. Gullick, and S. Malis are concerned, it is obvious that the judgment is erroneous, for the reason that no motion for a nonsuit was made by either of them. Section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, does not authorize the court of its own motion to order a nonsuit at the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony. It must be on motion of the defendant. We have serious doubts also as to whether we may consider that a motion was made by the defendant Zimmerman, but, for reasons about to be stated, the question becomes immaterial. By section 1963, subd. 22, it is provided that it shall be presumed until controverted "that an indorsement of a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange was made at the time and place of making the note or bill." It having been stipulated that the defendants Zimmerman and Director indorsed the note, it must be inferred that the note was signed by the makers at the same time. In this connection it is to be noted that the defendant H. Director purported to sign the note as president of the defendant corporation, and that the secretary was C. M. Gullick, who delivered the note to plaintiff. It is hardly conceivable that the defendant H. Director would have indorsed a note purporting to be signed by him as president of the corporation, unless he had in fact executed it.

[5, 6] There is no merit in the point that there was an alteration of the note. The testimony indicates that a pen was drawn through the signature of plaintiff after he had paid the bank. In other words, his indorsement thereof was withdrawn. This cannot be claimed to be an alteration of the note. Nor was there any evidence of a renewal of the note. The testimony which appellants say is capable of this construction is that which relates to the payment of the bank which at the instance of the plaintiff discounted the note.

Judgment of nonsuit reversed.

Oil derrick constituted "other structure or other work of improvement" within Mechanics' Lien Law; hence one furnishing materials entering into oil derrick obtained lien (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by the Barr Lumber Company and another against Roy W. Perkins, Lawrence G. Brubaker, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the last-named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ray W. Bruce, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank G. Swain, of Whittier, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment directing foreclosure of a mechanic's lien.

The record shows that on or about the 16th day of August, 1924, the appellant leased two lots of land to one R. T. Colter, giving him the exclusive right to explore, mine, excavate, and obtain oil, asphaltum, petroleum, natural gas, and any other hydrocarbon substances contained in said premises. The lease was to continue for a period of twenty years. On or about January 27, 1925, R. T. Colter assigned said lease to Roy W. Perkins. On February 3, 1925, the erection of an oil derrick was begun on lot No. 23, adjoining lot No. 22, the one involved in this action. As the judgment for the foreclosure of a lien does not involve lot 23, no further attention need be given as to what actions were taken in relation thereto. Thereafter, and on or about the 10th day of September, 1925, Roy W. Perkins commenced the erection of an oil derrick on lot No. 22 in block 19, of Athens, as per map recorded in book 8, page 146, of maps, in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county. Within ten days thereafter, and on the 16th day of September, 1925, the appellant posted a notice of nonliability, and on the same day filed a verified copy thereof in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county. For the erection of said derrick the plaintiffs in this action furnished lumber and materials which actually went into the erection and became a component part of the derrick erected upon said lot No. 22.

[1-3] Upon this appeal only two questions are presented: First, the sufficiency of the notice of nonliability; second, whether the erection of an oil derrick upon the premises constitutes a lienable improvement. A third question is presented to the effect that both lots included in the lease to which we have referred should have been included in the lien filed by the respondents. The record, however, shows that the lots are separate tracts, and this statement is a complete answer to the appellant's contention. No question is made as to the amount of the judgment or as to the sufficiency, in form and substance, of the notice of lien filed by the respondents. The trial court held the notice of nonliability insufficient, and also held that the erection of an oil derrick for the purposes of exploring the premises for oil, constituted a lienable improvement within the lien laws of the state. The notice of nonliability posted and filed for record by the appellant is in the following words and figures:

"Notice of Non-Liability

"Under Section 1192, Code of Civil Procedure.

"To All Whom it May Concern, and particularly to all persons who may furnish labor or material, or both, for or upon all or any part of that real property situate in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, described as follows: Lots Twenty-two (22) and Twenty-three (23) in Block Nineteen (19) of Athens, as per map recorded in Book 8, page 146 of Maps, in the office of the County Recorder of said County, or for the improvement upon said land or any part or parcel thereof, or for the construction, alteration or repair of any work or improvement thereon;

"Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, that he is the owner of said described land and being the land upon which this notice is posted; that he will not be responsible for any labor or material delivered upon said premises or used in the construction, alteration or repair of any work or improvement now being, or which may be hereafter constructed, made or done upon said land or any part thereof. Dated September 16, 1925.

"Lawrence G. Brubaker,
"By [Signed] Ray W. Bruce, His Attorney."

Section 1192, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the filing of a notice of nonliability, sets forth when such notice shall be filed, by whom it shall be filed, and also specifies what such notice shall contain, to wit: "Said notice shall contain a description of the property affected thereby sufficient for identification, with the name, and the nature of the title or interest of the person giving the same, name of purchaser under contract, if any, or lessee if known; said copy so recorded may be verified by anyone having a knowledge of the facts, on behalf of the owner or person for whose protection the notice is given." The notice posted and filed for record in this case did not give the name of the lessee, nor does it state that the name of the lessee was unknown. The record before us shows that the owner of the premises had executed a lease thereof, and therefore must be held to have known the name of the person to whom he leased the premises. The record shows that the lessee of the owner assigned his interest in the lease, but it does not appear that the owner ever consented thereto, nor does it appear that the owner did not know of the assignment. This, however, does not change the effect of the requirement of the statute that if the owner has leased the premises, the name of the person to whom he has leased must be given in the notice. Prior to 1925, section 1192, Code of Civil Procedure, did not require that the notice should include the name of the person to whom the premises had been leased, if leased. In 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 304), the section of the Code which we are considering was amended so as to require the including of the name of the lessee, if known, and also the name of anyone holding a contract of purchase. From this the only conclusion deducible is that the Legislature considered the inclusion of such facts within the notice to be material, to the intent and purpose that anyone furnishing material to the occupant of the premises might ascertain what, if any, title he possessed, and be furnished the means for obtaining information in relation thereto. We do not need to cite authorities to the effect that the courts adopt the rule of a liberal construction relative to mechanic's liens, and therefore must follow a strict construction of any act or provision by which the owner of property upon which improvements are made, may relieve himself from, or escape liability. We may, however, cite one case which supports the conclusion of the trial court in this cause.

In Pasqualetti v. Hilson, 43 Cal. App. 718, 185 P. 693, the sufficiency of the notice of nonliability was before the court. The notice contained all the provisions then required to be stated in the notice by section 1192, Code of Civil Procedure, but was acknowledged instead of verified, and was recorded in that form. The court held that the failure to verify the notice and to file a verified notice of record rendered the notice insufficient. In that case, as contradistinguished to the present, the body of the notice contained all the data required to be set forth by the provisions of the Code.

The appellant calls our attention to the case of Allen v. Wilson, 178 Cal. 674, 174 P. 661, 663, where it was held that a claim of lien which did not state the name of the owner of the premises upon which the lien was claimed, did not affect the validity of the lien. The court there said: "The plaintiff is only required to state names mentioned (owner etc.), if known. If the names are not known, the claim filed is sufficient if it is silent on the subject. (Citing cases.) The name of the owner, or reputed owner, is not presumably within the knowledge of the claimant." (Citing cases.) Here, where the owner of the premises is the defendant, and the owner is the one who has given the notice of nonliability, there can be no presumption of lack of knowledge of the name of the person to whom he has leased the premises. The record shows that the owner, to wit, the appellant, at the time he filed the notice of nonliability, possessed a knowledge of the facts which should have been set forth therein. The strictness required in complying with the Code provisions as to the notice of nonliability is further illustrated in the case of Leoni v. Quinn, 189 Cal. 622, 209 P. 551, where it was held that actual notice was insufficient, and that the notice of nonliability must be given in full compliance with the requirements of the section.

[4] Does the erection of an oil derrick afford the basis for a lien to one furnishing material entering into such structure? Section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, gives a lien to one "furnishing materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road or other structure, or other work of improvement." Is an oil derrick reasonably included within any of the terms set forth in this section of the Codes? This requires an interpretation of what is meant by the words "other structure or other work of improvement."

In the case of Helm v. Chapman, 66 Cal. 291, 5 P. 352, the question arose as to whether a lien existed for work performed and materials furnished in sinking a shaft upon a mining claim. The court there said: "The section of the Code [section 1185 of the Code of Civil Procedure] treats of the 'building, improvement, or structure' as separate and distinct from the land upon which it is erected or constructed. We think, without doing violence to the received meaning of language, a mine or pit sunk within a mining claim may be called a structure. Section 1183 does not, it is true, provide for a lien upon mines, but upon 'mining claims.' The lien, if it exists at all, extends to the whole claim. Strictly speaking, of course, a 'mining claim' cannot be constructed, altered, or repaired. The intention of the law-makers seems to have been to give a lien upon the whole claim, for labor performed on, and for materials furnished for and used in, any structure, or on or in the alteration or repair of any structure on or in the mining claim." The court held the plaintiff entitled to a lien.

In the case of Western Electric Co., Inc., v. Colley, 79 Cal. App. 770, 251 P. 331, 333, this court, in consideration of the word "structure," used the following language: "We think the Legislature, in the use of the term 'other structure,' must have had in mind the comprehensive language of the Constitution where use is made of the word 'property,' and that a liberal and fair interpretation would lead to the conclusion that the Legislature so intended, and not that the term 'other structure' is limited in its meaning to an object, which is in kind similar either to a house, a wharf, a bridge, or a wagon road, but includes all objects built upon the soil, and, in some instances, extending beneath the surface of the soil, which partake of the nature of permanency, that is, a structure is an object which is built upon the soil and is not necessarily a house, or similar to a house, a bridge, or similar to a bridge, but is property, under the constitutional definition, having the nature of permanency and put in place to accomplish some definite purpose." The question before the court in that case was whether a lien existed upon a power line, and it was there held that a power line, including the poles supporting it, constituted a structure.

In 18 Ruling Case Law, 892, we find the following in relation to the interpretation given by different courts to the words "other improvement or structure": "Where the statute provides for a lien upon any building, erection, etc., or 'other' improvement or structure, the term 'other' improvement or structure is interpreted by some courts in accordance with the familiar doctrine ejusdem generis. That is, the term in question is regarded as including only such erections or constructions as are similar to the improvements or structures named. * * * In some of the statutes the improvements specifically mentioned are numerous and the term 'other' has been construed to give the acts a very wide application. So, in such a connection, the phrase has been applied to a completed oil well with all its appliances, and to a mine or mining claim. The right to a lien for the work of digging or drilling a well has sometimes been denied under a statute giving a lien for 'other improvements', but other courts, giving the statute a liberal construction, have considered the phrase as clearly sufficient to give the right to a lien for such work."

In Sunburst Oil & Refg. Co. v. Callender, 84 Mont. 178, 274 P. 834, 837, under a statute somewhat similar to our own, the Supreme Court of Montana held that a lien existed for materials furnished and work done upon an oil well. In so ruling the court used the following language: "Undoubtedly, having drilled well No. 4 and furnished all fixtures and equipment necessary to complete the well and equip it for operation, and not having been paid for his labor and material, defendant had a lien upon the property on which he did the work and placed the improvements," etc.

In Parke & Lacy Co. v. Inter Nos Oil & Devp. Co., 147 Cal. 490, 82 P. 51, 52, the Supreme Court had before it the question of a lien for work done upon a well, where the testimony was not clear as to the kind of well, and used the following language: "The allegations of the complaint bring the case within this provision" (referring to a provision in section 1183, Code Civ. Proc.) "and we are not called upon to decide whether this provision or the one referring to mining claims would be applicable to an oil well, it not appearing that this was an oil well. There is, however, much force in the argument that any and all wells, for whatever purpose constructed, fall within the provision already quoted, and that when the word 'well' was inserted therein by amendment in 1899 (St. 1899, p. 33, c. 35), and in section 1185, Code Civ. Proc., at the same time (St. 1899, p. 24, c. 23), it was contemplated thereby to include oil wells." See, also, notes to Peaceable Creek Coal Co. v. Jackson, Ann. Cas. 1912B, p. 11, where the word "structure" is defined as follows: "The term 'structure' when applied to a material thing made by human labor, whether considered etymologically or with reference to common usage, or with regard to the words by which it is immediately preceded in the statute, means something composed of parts or portions which have been put together by human exertion. * * * Not only was the oil well * * * a structure in the literal sense, but when it is regarded in connection with the structures specifically named in the statute, it must, we think, be considered as within the legislative intent in the use of the statutory phrase 'other structure.'"

In 40 C. J. p. 65, we find the further definition of the word "structure": "The meaning of the word 'structure' as used in a statute authorizing a lien for labor performed or materials furnished in connection with the creation, improvement, or repair of a structure, is to be ascertained by referring to the meaning of the words associated with it, and where all the associated terms designate classes of property attached or appurtenant to, or a part of, the land, the word 'structure' is to be likewise restricted, notwithstanding the fact that it is susceptible to other definitions. The word 'other structure,' following an enumeration of particular things, comprehends all the properties specifically enumerated, and any similar thing constructed, should the enumeration prove incomplete, but it does not embrace matters not resembling, related to, or belonging in, the same class with the structures or improvements specifically enumerated." Following these definitions, even though we were to adopt the strictest interpretation, we think that an oil derrick erected upon premises for the purposes of boring a well, comes within the definition of the terms "other structure or other work or improvement," as found in section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. A reference to the language of the section preceding the word "well" enforces this conclusion. We find therein these words: "Materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, or * * * contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well," etc. Here, it is specifically provided that a lien is given for any materials or appliances used or consumed in the construction of a well. No well could be dug without the construction of a derrick, or, as it is sometimes called in relation to oil wells, "oil rig," and therefore the materials which enter in, and are consumed in the construction of the oil rig or derrick, erected for the purposes of digging a well, furnish a basis for a mechanic's lien.

[5] It will be noticed also that the language of the statute includes materials furnished to be used or consumed, and not materials that have been used or consumed. The record shows in this case that after the materials were consumed in the building of the derrick, the well was not in fact dug. The fact that the actual digging of the oil well referred to in this case was abandoned after the furnishing of materials and the consuming thereof in the erection of the derrick, does not affect the right of the plaintiff in this action to a lien for materials furnished. Under the various sections of the Code of Civil Procedure the abandonment of work or the abandonment of the improvement by the contractor or owner does not destroy the right to a lien for work already done, or materials furnished, although it does in some particulars affect the procedure.

[6] Nor do we find any merit in the contention that the provisions in a lease which authorize the removal of an improvement or structure which otherwise, when erected or created, would constitute a part of the real estate, bar the right to a lien. Those provisions are personal only to the owner and the lessee.

The judgment is affirmed.

All concur.

111 Cal. App. 151

CALIFORNIA STANDARD FINANCE CORPORATION v. RIVERSIDE FINANCE CO. et al.

Civ. 160.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 16, 1931.

1. Sales ⚷459.

Title to automobiles to which finance corporation took title from distributor, and which it conditionally sold to dealer, was vested in finance corporation.

2. Sales ⚷472(3).

Automobile dealer being in default under conditional sale contract with finance corporation, latter must prevail in claim and delivery against dealer's customer, absent estoppel.

3. Estoppel ⚷119.

Whether conditional seller is estopped to claim title against third person is fact question.

4. Estoppel 🔑75.

Conditional seller of automobile, placing car in hands of dealer, is estopped to claim title against bona fide buyer for value (Civ. Code, § 1142).

> This is so, in view of the rule that, if personal property is delivered under conditional sale contract to buyer who is engaged in business of selling property of same kind, and, with knowledge of seller, is placed on display for sale with such other property, holder of reserved title is estopped to assert it against bona fide buyer for value from dealer.

5. Sales 🔑475.

Assignee of conditional sale contract from automobile dealer, who was also holding under conditional sale contract, acquired dealer's rights, and, upon default of dealer's customer, has right to repossess car and terminate contract, thereby succeeding to customer's rights.

6. Sales 🔑475.

Assignee of conditional sale contract from automobile dealer succeeded to customers' rights, though they consented to repossession.

7. Appeal and error 🔑931(1).

In examining sufficiency of evidence, evidence supporting finding, with reasonable inferences, must be accepted as true.

8. Appeal and error 🔑931(1).

Every substantial conflict in testimony must be resolved in favor of finding.

9. Estoppel 🔑116.

Burden rests upon party asserting estoppel to prove its elements.

10. Estoppel 🔑75.

Mere possession of automobile by dealer is insufficient to establish estoppel in favor of dealer's customer against dealer's conditional seller.

11. Estoppel 🔑75.

Finance corporation, holding reserved title to automobile delivered to dealer in and displayed for sale with property of same kind, with finance corporation's knowledge, held estopped to assert title against dealer's bona fide subvendee for value under conditional sale contract.

12. Estoppel 🔑118.

Evidence held to show automobile dealer's salesman, buying automobile from dealer, was put upon inquiry; hence, could not assert estoppel against conditional seller to dealer.

13. Automobiles 🔑32.

Driving automobile from distributing agency to dealer's business place, with dealer's license number, held not to require registration by finance corporation, holder of legal title; hence, corporation was not estopped to assert title against third person because of failure to register (St. 1923, p. 522, § 36(a), as amended by St. 1927, p. 1423, § 8; St. 1923, p. 524, § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7; St. 1923, p. 517, § 45½(b), as added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10; St. 1923, p. 526, § 46, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 11).

14. Estoppel 🔑110.

In claim and delivery, complaint being in usual form and answer denying plaintiff's and alleging defendant's ownership and right to possession, facts constituting equitable estoppel need not be pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by the California Standard Finance Corporation against the Riverside Finance Company and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Rollinson, McGann, Becker & Nelson, of Los Angeles (Charles W. Rollinson and Don S. Irwin, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Leonard J. Difani, of Riverside, for respondents.

WARMER, Justice pro tem.

The facts out of which this action arose are briefly as follows: W. H. Jenner and Ethel L. Sampson, sued herein as Mrs. Edyth Sampson, were doing business under the fictitious name of Paige Sales & Service Company in Riverside, Cal., hereinafter called the dealer. The dealer made an arrangement with the appellant whereby appellant was to finance certain automobiles for the dealer. Under this plan, the appellant was to take the title to the automobiles financed by them from the distributors in Los Angeles, then sell said automobiles to the dealer on conditional sale contracts, hereinafter called flooring contracts. The automobiles were then to be driven by the dealer to Riverside, where the dealer had his place of business. The dealer secured possession of the two automobiles here in question, a Paige sedan, motor No. 171428, and a Paige sedan, motor No. 171994, hereinafter referred to as the Sturgis car and the McKay car, respectively.

The Sturgis car was delivered to the dealer on November 22, 1927, and the McKay car on February 21, 1928. Each of said cars was covered by one of said flooring contracts.

The dealer sold the Sturgis car to Dorothy Sturgis under a conditional sale contract February 25, 1928, and the McKay car to Jack P. McKay on February 27, 1928. On or about February 27, 1928, the dealer assigned these contracts to Riverside Finance Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent. The initial payments on the flooring contracts were made. No other or further payment was made by the dealer or by any one in his behalf. The initial payment on the Sturgis contract was made in cash. McKay was a salesman for the dealer, and the initial payment on the McKay car was made by a credit adjustment. No other or further payments were made on the conditional sale contracts to the dealer by either Sturgis or McKay or anyone else in their behalf.

On March 8, 1928, both of these automobiles were repossessed by respondent, although no further payments under the contracts were due until March 25 and March 27, respectively. The facts surrounding the repossession of the cars are that on or about March 8, 1928, an attachment was levied on the place of business of the dealer, and both Sturgis and McKay notified the respondent herein that they would be unable to make the payments provided for in the contract, and that respondent had better take the cars; which was done by respondent. At the time of the execution of the Sturgis and McKay contracts, the dealer was in default under the flooring contracts which were still held by appellant. Soon thereafter, the appellant instituted this action in claim and delivery, and while the cars were in the possession of the respondent. A further detail of facts will appear in the course of the opinion.

[1, 2] The court's findings are in detail, but in effect find that the appellant is estopped to assert its title as against the respondent herein; that the respondent is the owner of the automobiles in question. It is now conceded by the parties that judgment is based upon an estoppel in pais arising out of an indicia of ownership with which the dealer was clothed by the appellant and by which the respondent was misled and induced to purchase the said automobiles. The title to the automobiles here in question was vested in the appellant. Pacific Finance Corp. v. Hendley (Cal. App.) 284 P. 736. The title being vested in the appellant and the dealer being in default under the terms of the conditional sale contract by which he secured the right of possession, the appellant must prevail, unless it is estopped to assert such right because of certain acts or omissions on its part. In the case of Pacific Finance Corp. v. Hendley, supra, 284 P. 736, 737, at page 737, the court said: "It is well settled in this state that the owner of personal property may make a conditional sale of the same and deliver possession thereof, reserving the title thereto until payment of the agreed price, which title will be superior to that of a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee without notice of the reservation. Oakland Bank of Savings v. California P. B. Co., 183 Cal. 295, 297, 191 P. 524. It is equally well settled that, if personal property is delivered, under a conditional sale contract, to a buyer who is engaged in the business of selling property of the same kind, and, with the knowledge of the seller, is placed on display for sale with such other property, the holder of the reserved title is estopped to assert it against a bona fide subvendee for value. Civ. Code, § 1142; Democrat-Herald Public Co. v. Pettit, 94 Cal. App. 724, 271 P. 910; General Secur. Corp. v. Reo Motor Car Co., 91 Cal. App. 16, 266 P. 576; State Finance Co. v. Isaacson, 86 Cal. App. 113, 260 P. 580; Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 246 P. 1067; Trust Co. v. Acceptance Co., 70 Cal. App. 41, 232 P. 489; Carter v. Rowley, 59 Cal. App. 486, 211 P. 267. In such a case the rights of the innocent subvendee 'do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom he deals directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against the innocent party, the existence of the title or power which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he has caused or allowed to be vested in the party making the sale.' "

[4-6] Inasmuch as the holder of the reserved title is estopped to assert it against a bona fide vendee for value, it becomes necessary to determine, in the case at bar, whether or not the respondent is a bona fide purchaser for value, which gives rise to the inquiry—What are the rights of the purchaser of a conditional sale contract, or contracts, from a dealer whose only right to the property is the right of purchase under a conditional sale contract? The rights of such a purchaser (respondent herein) are measured by the contract which is presented. Rogers Lamb Co. v. Coast Secur. Co., 58 Cal. App. 744, 209 P. 246. By the assignment of the conditional sale contracts by the dealer to the respondent, it acquired all of the rights in the property possessed by the dealer, and, upon default under the terms of the contract, would have the right to repossess the Sturgis and McKay cars and terminate the contract, thereby succeeding to all of the rights of McKay and Sturgis in and to the property described in the contracts. The vendees McKay and Sturgis voluntarily consented to the repossession of the automobiles by the respondent and to the termination of all their rights under the said contracts. We can see no reason why the respondent would not thereby succeed to all of the rights of the vendees therein, to the same extent and for all purposes that it would have succeeded had the repossession been accomplished by some process of law. It therefore becomes pertinent and necessary to determine what were the rights of Sturgis and what were the rights of McKay under the conditional sale contract. In other words, were the conditions under which each of them purchased the automobiles from the dealer such as to work an estoppel as against the dealer's vendor under the conditional sale contract? If so, then the appellant is estopped to assert his reserved title as against the respondent, said respondent's rights being measured by the terms of the contract he presented.

Mr. Coffman, a department manager for the appellant herein, who conducted negotiations on behalf of appellant with the dealer, testified in part as follows:

"(Question by Mr. Difani): I will ask you if, in your experience as an automobile man, and one who has had a great deal of experience—how long have you been with the company? A. With the company about a little over two and a half years.

"Q. During that time, I will ask you, in your experience, if you don't know whether it is a fact that dealers, as such, use their cars as demonstrators? * * *

"(Mr. Difani): Just a moment; he has stated that he did not know until he was informed by Mr. Jenner late in March, that Mr. Jenner was using his cars off the floor as demonstrators, and I am asking him a general question—whether or not he knew that dealers, such as the Paige Sales & Service, used their cars as demonstrators. * * *

"A. No, I don't know of any finance company that will allow a dealer to use floor cars as demonstrators; we have demonstrator contracts that can be entered into by companies, by permission. * * *

"(Question by Court): Was that done in this case? A. Yes, we had demonstrator contracts with Mr. Jenner, but not on these two cars.

"The Court: That is what I mean—in this case. A. No. * * *

"Q. (Mr. Difani): Now, did you know, Mr. Coffman, when Mr. Jenner, for the Paige Sales & Service Company, purchased these cars, he was purchasing them from you for resale to the public?

"Mr. Irwin: We object to that, immaterial.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Yes.

"Q. You knew that he was taking those cars from Los Angeles, from the storeroom or factory or branch, whatever it might be, the Paige Company of California, and driving those cars down here to Riverside? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you ever come down here and make any investigation to find out whether or not they were sitting on his floor, or being driven around?

"Mr. Irwin: We object to that, incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial. * * *

"The Court: Overruled. * * *

"A. No, sir.

"Q. (Mr. Difani): As far as you knew, then, after Mr. Jenner got these cars from the Paige people in Los Angeles and drove them up from there, your interest in them ceased as far as the use of those cars was concerned, if Jenner kept his contract payments up? A. No, sir."

Mrs. Ethel Sampson, one of the members of the copartnership of the Paige Sales & Service Company, testified that in January she knew that the cars were being financed by some one and thought they were all financed by appellant herein, but she knew the cars were being driven by Mr. Jenner or some representative of the Paige Sales & Service Company from the Paige branch in Los Angeles to their place of business in Riverside; that the cars were being operated by those in the employ of the Paige Sales & Service Company, salesmen and herself. She went to the appellant's office in Los Angeles and asked for the manager. A gentleman who resembled Mr. Coffman appeared and she told him who she was—that she was connected with Mr. Jenner in the Graham-Paige agency in Riverside—and the gentleman informed her that he was the one who handled that line of business and would talk to her. She asked a number of questions and he refused to answer. She told him the cars were being continuously driven and was informed by him that they were doing business with Mr. Jenner and that she was interfering.

[7, 8] "In examining the sufficiency of the evidence to support a questioned finding, an appellate court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of the finding as made, taking into account, as well, all inferences which might reasonably have been thought by the trial court to lead to the same conclusion. Every substantial conflict in the testimony * * * is to be resolved in favor of the finding." Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 P. 1157, 1158.

[9-11] It appears, without conflict, that, under the arrangement between the appellant and dealer herein, the distributing agency for the Graham-Paige automobiles were paid for the cars by the appellant for and on behalf of the dealer; that at the time said payment was made the appellant herein took title to the said automobiles and sold them to the dealer on a conditional sale contract, reserving title thereto in the appellant; that Mr. Coffman, department manager of appellant, knew that the cars were driven from the agency in Los Angeles, where they had been purchased, to Riverside; that the dealer maintained a regularly established place of business for the sale of new cars in the city of Riverside; that said Coffman knew that said cars were purchased for resale by the dealer. The conditional sale contract under which the dealer secured possession of the cars from the appellant herein provided, among other things, that: "The purchaser agrees not to sell, attempt to sell, lease, mortgage, hypothecate or otherwise dispose of said personal property or take the same out of the State of California, during the life of this contract, and the purchaser further agrees not to assign this contract, or any of his rights hereunder, and any assignment of this contract or any of the purchaser's rights hereunder, without the consent of the seller, by the purchaser, or by execution or other legal process, or otherwise, or the transfer thereof by process of law, or otherwise, shall at the option of the seller, terminate all rights hereunder to purchase said personal property. The purchaser agrees not to use or permit said personal property to be used for hire."

It is admitted that the dealer sold the two cars here in question on conditional sale contract to Sturgis and McKay; that Miss Sturgis was a resident of the city of San Bernardino and there is no evidence as to whether or not she ever saw the car purchased by her at the dealer's place of business or knew anything about the dealer's business, or whether the automobiles were driven or not. However, it does appear that a salesman of the dealer took her to the office of the dealer and she executed the contract at the dealer's place of business. In General Securities Corp. v. Reo Motor Car Co., 91 Cal. App. 16, at page 19, 266 P. 576, 577, the court said: "'Where the owner of the property clothes another with the apparent title to or power of disposition over it, and an innocent third party has thereby been induced to deal with the apparent owner in reference thereto,' the true owner in such case is estopped from afterward asserting his title. Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 545, 9 P. 942." See, also, Western States Acceptance Corp. v. Bank of Italy (Cal. App.) 285 P. 340.

The burden rests upon a party asserting an estoppel to prove all of the elements constituting it. 10 Cal. Jur. 656. Manifestly, Miss Sturgis could not be induced to deal with the dealer as an apparent owner by any fact or circumstances not within her knowledge or information, mere possession of an automobile by a dealer being insufficient to establish an estoppel against his vendor in favor of a purchaser. Carter v. Rowley, supra. Does the fact that Miss Sturgis was taken to the dealer's place of business by a salesman of the dealer and there executed a conditional sale contract for the purchase of the automobile, coupled with the fact of the possession of the automobile by the dealer, constitute facts sufficient to work an estoppel in her favor as against the appellant herein?

Western States Acceptance Corp. v. Bank of Italy et al., supra, is a case where the acceptance corporation paid for an automobile for the dealer, and, as a part of the same transaction, the dealer executed a trust receipt in favor of the acceptance corporation, agreeing to hold the automobile in trust as the property of the acceptance corporation. The dealer agreed not to sell, incumber, or otherwise dispose of same except upon written consent of the acceptance corporation. The dealer sold the automobile to another dealer for cash. The purchasing dealer had no actual notice of ownership, or of possession, or any interest in the same by the acceptance corporation. The purchasing dealer sold the automobile on a conditional sale contract to one Mrs. Kennon, and then sold the contract to the Bank of Italy. The purchasing dealer caused the automobile to be registered with the motor vehicle division, and a white certificate was issued to Mrs. Kennon as registered owner and a pink certificate to the Bank of Italy as legal owner. The acceptance corporation, upon learning these facts, brought suit in replevin. On page 341 of 285 P., the court said: "There can be no question that the evidence clearly establishes an estoppel. * * * The duty rests upon one financing a retail dealer to see to it that cars upon which he has a lien or other interest are not left under the domain or control of such sale dealers on his salesroom floor, to be offered to the public. Secret arrangements which place it in the power of a dealer to deceive unsuspecting purchasers should be, and they are, condemned. General Securities Corp. v. Reo Motor Co., supra. Whether, therefore, plaintiff had or had not any interest in the car is unimportant, for if it had, it negligently permitted Ballard, a known automobile dealer in this make of car, to appear as apparent owner with the right of selling the same, and it should therefore be estopped from asserting its alleged title as against respondents, who are innocent purchasers without notice. Where one of two innocent purchasers must suffer through the act or negligence of a third person, the loss should fall upon the one who by his conduct created the circumstances which enabled the third party to perpetrate the wrong or cause the loss."

In the case at bar, as in the Western States Acceptance Corp. v. Bank of Italy et al., supra, the appellant did nothing to protect innocent purchasers, and, under the circumstances disclosed herein, it is estopped to assert its title against the respondent herein.

[12] Mr. McKay, the purchaser under conditional sale contract of the McKay car, was a salesman or sales manager for the dealer. He knew that some of the cars purchased from the Graham-Paige agency were purchased under flooring contracts executed by the dealer in favor of the appellant herein. To quote his testimony:

"Q. (Mr. Difani) Until that day (referring to the day that the respondent herein took possession of the McKay car) you knew, did you not, Mr. McKay, that this car was floored there by the California Standard Finance Company? A. No;—Well, I had an idea it was, yes.

"Q. (Mr. Difani) Well, do you know? The question is—do you know, Mr. McKay? A. Not positively; no.

"Q. (Mr. Rollinson) You knew, did you not, Mr. McKay, that the California Standard Finance Company had been flooring other cars? A. Had floored some, I don't know that they floored them all.

"Q. (Mr. Difani) Now, Mr. McKay, you said that you didn't recall using the car after you purchased it? A. Um-huh.

"Q. Can you state how that happened? A. Well, we didn't have many on the floor to show, we only had the two new cars.

"Q. Then, as a salesman, was there an agreement between you and Mr. Jenner that the car would be left on the floor, after you purchased it, for display purposes? A. No, that was more or less all of my own idea, no part of the sales—

"Q. You used your car later on to take somebody else? A. Yes."

It appears from the above-quoted testimony that McKay was in possession of enough information to have placed him upon inquiry as to the exact condition of the title to said car. If that be true, then he could not assert an estoppel as against the vendor of the dealer herein. Rogers Lamb Co. v. Coast Securities Co., 58 Cal. App. 744, 209 P. 246; General Securities Corp. v. Reo Motor Car Co., supra. Therefore, the appellant is not estopped from asserting its title as to the McKay car.

[13] The respondent further urges that, because of the fact that appellant did not register said automobile with the state motor vehicle division, it failed in a duty imposed by law, and hence is estopped to assert its title to said automobiles as against respondent. It is admitted that there was no registration made of either of the cars with the state motor vehicle division until the dealer caused the same to be registered, and a white certificate was issued to Miss Sturgis and to Mr. McKay, as registered owners of the automobiles respectively, and to the respondent as the legal owner of each of said automobiles. It appears that the Graham-Paige agency in Los Angeles was the distributor of Paige automobiles in the district in which the dealer was doing business. It further appears that the appellant herein did not sell the said automobiles for the purpose of being operated upon the public highways of this state. In fact, by the contract of the appellant herein with the dealer it appears that such was not to be done. We quote from the contract: "The purchaser hereby agrees not to drive or cause to be driven, or otherwise operate, the motor vehicle herein described without the written consent of the seller."

Section 36 of the Motor Vehicle Act, subdivision a, defines what vehicles are to be registered under the Motor Vehicle Act, and reads as follows: "Every owner of a motor vehicle * * * which shall be operated upon the public highways of this state shall for each such vehicle owned, except as herein otherwise provided, apply to the division for the registration thereof." (Amended by Stats. 1927, p. 1423 § 8.)

It appears from the said section that no registration of new automobiles is required under the terms of said act except those which are to be operated upon the public highways of this state. Section 45 of said act (amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7), subdivision a, provides, upon the transfer of title or interest of a legal owner, certain records must be made and sent to the state motor vehicle division. Subdivision b requires that the transferee shall forward both the certificate of ownership, so indorsed, and the certificate of registration to the division. Subdivision c provides that subdivision b of this section requiring a transferee to forward the certificate of ownership, after indorsement, and the certificate of registration to the division shall not apply to the transferee of a vehicle not intending to and who does not drive such vehicle or permit such vehicle to be driven upon the public highway, etc. Subdivision e of said section provides that until said division shall issue said new certificate of registration and certificate of ownership, as hereinbefore provided in subdivision d, delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made, and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed, and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose. Section 45½ of said act (added by St. 1927, p. 1424, § 10), subdivision b, provides for the giving of notice of sale and transfer as follows: "Every dealer, upon transferring a motor vehicle * * * whether by sale, lease or otherwise, to any person other than a dealer, shall immediately give written notice of such transfer to the department," etc.

Section 46 of said act permits the manufacturer or dealer in motor vehicles, having an established place of business in this state, owning any such new vehicles and operating them upon the public highways exclusively for the purpose of testing, demonstrating, or selling the same, in lieu of registering each such vehicle, may secure from the state department what is commonly known as driver's symbols or dealer's numbers. It further provides, in subdivision d thereof, that it shall be permissible for such manufacturer or dealer to operate any such vehicle without number plates attached thereto from any vessel, railroad depot or warehouse over the public highways, to the salesrooms or other place of business of such manufacturer or dealer, or to a warehouse or other place of storage under a written permit authorizing such operation first obtained from the police authorities.

It therefore appears that the only automobiles required to be registered under the California Motor Vehicle Act (amended by Stats. 1927, p. 1424, § 11) are the vehicles to be used upon the public highway. The distributing agency in Los Angeles, therefore, was not required by said act to register new automobiles in their possession not to be used upon the public highway. Appellant herein, when securing the title to said automobiles, did not procure them to be operated upon the public highway by appellant, and the dealer, by its contract with the appellant herein, expressly agreed not to operate said automobiles upon the public highway. It therefore appears that no registration of said automobiles was required by the said Motor Vehicle Act unless the fact that the appellant acquiesced in the dealer driving the said automobiles from the distributing agency in Los Angeles to his place of business in Riverside, California, with the dealer's license number displayed thereon, was such a use of said automobiles upon the public highway as to require a registration thereof. This we do not believe was such a use as to require registration of said automobiles under the Motor Vehicle Act. It will be observed that the apparent intent of the Legislature was to permit the moving of motor vehicles from one dealer's place to another and from warehouse to storage without the necessity of registration of the car so moved. Section 46, supra. The appellant therefore owed no legal duty to the respondent or any one else to cause the registration of said automobiles with the state motor vehicle division and is therefore not estopped because of failure to register said automobiles to assert its title.

[14] The appellant further urges that the pleadings are insufficient to present an issue in estoppel. The respondent in answer thereto insists that, under the circumstances presented here, it is not necessary to plead an estoppel and relies upon the rule announced in the case of Kenny v. Christianson, 200 Cal. page 419, 253 P. 715, 50 A. L. R. 1297. The rule is there declared on page 424 of 200 Cal., 253 P. 715, 717: "In making this contention plaintiff relies upon the familiar rule that the defense of an equitable estoppel is one which must be pleaded. This rule, however, has only application to cases wherein the plaintiff bases his sole reliance for his recovery in said action upon a claim of title which he is estopped to urge. Where, however, a plaintiff, as in this case, bases her alleged right to recovery in the first instance upon the original claim of ownership of the property in question and upon her contention that the person through whom the defendant acquired title to said property had no authority from her to dispose of the same, the defendant is not required in his pleadings to anticipate such other contentions as the plaintiff may seek to rely upon when her main reliance for her right of recovery has failed her, and which do not appear upon the face of her complaint. In such cases the defendant may await the assertion by the plaintiff in her proof of such additional foundation for her right of recovery and may then oppose the same with his evidence of an equitable estoppel."

In that case the complaint was in the usual form employed in actions for claim and delivery. The answer denied, for want of information and belief, that plaintiff was the owner or entitled to the possession of said personal property, and denied that he had ever taken wrongful possession of same, or that his detention thereof was unlawful; but, on the contrary, alleged that from a time prior to the commencement of the action and ever since said time he had been and continued to be the owner of and entitled to the possession thereof. The court made its findings in part showing equitable estoppel, and entered judgment in favor of the defendant.

An examination of the complaint in the action at bar shows that the complaint is one in the usual form employed in actions of claim and delivery; that the answer denied that the plaintiff was the owner entitled to the possession of the said personal property, and alleged that the defendant was the owner of said personal property entitled to possession thereof. We conclude that under such circumstances the facts constituting the equitable estoppel need not be pleaded. Kenny v. Christianson, supra.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed as to the Sturgis car, being Paige sedan, motor No. 171428, and is reversed as to the McKay car, being Paige sedan, motor No. 171994.

1. Prohibition ⚷17.

Where defendant's demurrer on ground of lack of jurisdiction was overruled, no further objection was necessary before applying for writ of prohibition.

2. Pleading ⚷418(1).

Filing of answer, after defendant's demurrer on ground of lack of jurisdiction was overruled, did not waive contention raised by demurrer.

3. Prohibition ⚷3(2).

Appeal after trial on merits held not such speedy or adequate remedy as would preclude writ of prohibition, where trial court had no jurisdiction of subject-matter.

4. Prohibition ⚷10(1).

Superior court held without jurisdiction over compensation claimant's suit for damages and for specific performance of Accident Commission's award, justifying issuance of writ of prohibition.

5. Prohibition ⚷10(1).

Writ of prohibition held proper remedy, where trial court was without jurisdiction of subject-matter.

Petition by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company for a writ of prohibition, to be directed to J. Walter Hanby, Judge, and the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, to restrain certain proceedings in a suit brought by James Steiner against petitioner.

Peremptory writ granted.

A. G. Ritter, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Norbert Savay, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J.

James Steiner commenced an action in respondent court against petitioner in this proceeding. Later he filed an amended complaint therein. This pleading was in two counts.

It was alleged in the first count, in effect and among other things, that Steiner was injured on the head by a falling steel bar while in the course of an employment under petitioner, and that the injury arose out of the employment, that the injury consisted of two depressed fractures of the skull, that on a certain date the Industrial Accident Commission gave Steiner an award against petitioner because of his injury, directing that petitioner "furnish to applicant forthwith a decompression operation together with the medical and hospital treatment reasonably necessary to cure and relieve appellant from the effects of his injury," that petitioner did furnish a decompression operation but for only one of the depressed fractures, that, therefore, petitioner did not comply with the award, although Steiner demanded from petitioner a further operation for the second depressed fracture, that as a direct consequence of the failure and refusal to furnish the second operation Steiner suffered "damage to his brain, has been injured in his health and constitution and made sick generally in [and(?)] his mental and intellectual faculties have been impaired, has suffered and continues to suffer great and agonizing pain in his head," thereby rendering him unable to pursue any occupation, all to his damage in the sum of $50,000, and that no remedy is open to him except by suit in respondent court to compel specific performance of the award and to recover the damages alleged.

The second count repeated, by reference, all the allegations of the first count, and averred in addition that ten days before the decompression operation was performed Steiner and petitioner entered into an agreement which was "as follows: That defendant shall choose and employ a surgeon to perform said decompression operation on plaintiff's head; that in consideration of plaintiff's consenting to said selection by defendant of the surgeon to perform such operation, the defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff with an operation or operations that may be necessary for the removal of all the depressed fractures on plaintiff's head, and to treat the plaintiff until reasonably cured of said injury"; that the operation was performed as alleged in the first count, that demand was thereafter made upon petitioner "to comply fully with the terms of the agreement heretofore stated, and to furnish an operation for the remaining depressed fracture," etc., that petitioner refused and still refuses to comply with the demand, "in consequence whereof plaintiff has endured and still endures great physical and mental suffering," etc., to his damage in the sum of $50,000.

At the conclusion of the amended complaint Steiner demanded judgment for specific performance of the award, for specific performance of the agreement between the parties, for damages as alleged, for costs, and for all other proper relief.

Petitioner demurred to each count of the amended complaint on the ground, among others, that it "affirmatively shows that this court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said action and that the sole jurisdiction in connection with the matters therein alleged is vested in the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California." The demurrer was overruled, and petitioner was allowed ten days within which to answer. In due time an answer was filed. Petitioner then, under appropriate allegations, asked this court to prohibit further proceedings in the action, and an alternative writ of prohibition issued.

The questions presented in the proceeding are so simple that we shall answer them with dispatch. At the conclusion of respondents' brief the points made by them are summarized in seven brief statements. In each of the ensuing seven paragraphs we shall state one of these points, immediately following the statement with our views upon it.

[1] "Petitioner failed to make objection to the ruling of the subordinate court before applying for prohibition." The position of petitioner was fully made known to the court by the demurrer. The court sufficiently indicated its intentions by overruling the demurrer and allowing petitioner time to answer. No more was necessary.

[2] "Petitioner acquiesced in the decision of the respondent, Judge Hanby, by filing his [its] answer." The filing of the answer was no waiver of the point made in the demurrer that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.

[3] "In the case under consideration an appeal would have afforded petitioner a plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law." An appeal could not have been prosecuted until after a trial of the issues of fact presented by the amended complaint and the answer. The appeal would have been neither speedy nor adequate. To remit petitioner to its right of appeal would cause the expense and the delay incident to the trial and review of an action over which respondent court had not the shadow of jurisdiction. The expense and delay entailed upon petitioner, and the activities of the courts in the attempted exercise of a wholly unwarranted jurisdiction, should be halted at once.

"It does not seem conceivable that any injury (and still less that any irreparable injury) could result to the petitioner if he [it] exercised his [its] right of appeal from the lower court—whereas, it is perfectly clear that in the event of prohibition the plaintiff might suffer an irreparable injury." A portion of this statement has been answered in the next preceding paragraph. For the remainder, it is perfectly clear that Steiner could and will suffer no injury from the peremptory writ of prohibition which we propose to issue, halting, as it will, the trial, and rendering impossible the appeal, of an action over which respondent court has no jurisdiction whatever. On the contrary, if petitioner were remitted to its right of appeal, Steiner, together with petitioner, would be injured by the expenditure of time and money incident to the trial and appeal of a wholly fruitless action.

[4] "All authorities agree that prohibition should never issue except in clear cases of judicial usurpation, or clear violation by the court of mandatory provisions of law." This is a clear case for the issuance of the writ of prohibition.

[5] "Errors of law of a subordinate tribunal cannot be corrected by prohibition." This is a general proposition which we do not endeavor to meet in terms. Certainly where, as here, a trial court threatens to continue in the attempted exercise of a jurisdiction which is absolutely nonexistent, the wheels of its unwarranted progress may be stopped by prohibition.

"The record conclusively shows that the case at bar"— counsel must mean the action heretofore pending in respondent court—"is clearly within the jurisdiction of the superior court." The record conclusively shows the contrary.

A peremptory writ of prohibition will issue as prayed.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment against plaintiff in the superior court after defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained.

Plaintiff filed his complaint to enjoin respondent city of Huntington Park, its mayor, chief of police, trustees, and councilmen from arresting or otherwise interfering with plaintiff in the distribution of an advertising publication in said city. The complaint sets out two counts, and appellant, for the purposes of this appeal, concedes the correctness of the ruling of the trial court as to the first. The second alleges, in substance, that the plaintiff at all times mentioned was the owner and publisher of an advertising publication known as "Better Home Furnishing Facts," which was distributed by plaintiff to the "homes and residences" throughout Los Angeles county and particularly in said city of Huntington Park; that plaintiff's business of distributing such publication developed into a profitable one; that said publication and the matter contained therein "are not indecent or offensive in any respect" and are identical in "form and content to a large degree with advertising matter published in a large number of newspapers distributed throughout said county and said City of Huntington Park." The complaint further alleges that on or about January 21, 1929, said city enacted an ordinance providing as follows: "Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to distribute or cause to be distributed in the City of Huntington Park any hand bill or other printed or written advertising matter by placing or causing the same to be placed in any automobile, or in any yard, or on any porch, or in any mailbox in said city, not in the possession or under the control of the party so distributing the same. Section 2. The provision of this ordinance shall not be deemed to apply to any newspaper or other publication printing news of a general nature, or keeping advertising space therein open to the public for the publication therein of general advertising matter." The ordinance ten provides that any one violating the provisions thereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $300 or imprisoned in the city or county jail for a period not exceeding three months, or both.

No question is raised as to the authority of the council to pass such an ordinance if it be free from the alleged defects.

Appellant contends that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer and entering judgment thereafter, because the ordinance is unconstitutional and void by reason of (a) its discriminating classifications and (b) because it is prohibitory. Counsel for appellant concede that there exist causes for exempting newspapers from the effect of such an ordinance, but say that in the "novel classification" excepting "other publications printing news of a general nature or keeping advertising space therein open to the public for the publication therein of general advertising matter" lies the vice of this particular enactment. The ordinance is directed against handbills and advertising matter of a particular or special nature and put out by one advertiser. Counsel argue that "if one person buys all the space in such a publication its distribution is prohibited; whereas if more than one person advertises (assuming the publication is open to the public in the latter instance), then its distribution is not prohibited," and that availability to the public of space is not a reasonable or constitutional basis for classification, as there is no inherent difference between the distribution of free publications where the content is paid for by one person and those in which the content is paid for by many persons.

[1] Section 2 of the ordinance excepts from its application newspapers, which counsel admit is a reasonable exception, and also (1), other publications "printing news of a general nature" or (2) "keeping advertising space therein open to the public for the publication therein of general advertising matter." The purpose of the ordinance is undoubtedly to prevent the littering of the streets with quantities of waste paper, which might not only occasion fire, but choke up and obstruct gutters and drains, all to the great detriment of the general welfare. It permits the distribution of advertising publications also "printing news of a general nature," and there would seem to be a very reasonable basis for such an exception, for it is reasonable to suppose that such a publication would be taken from the automobile, yard, porch, or mail box, where it was deposited in the course of distribution, into the house, by reason of the content of such a publication being of a more general interest than one consisting purely of advertising matter, and consequently that it would not be left to the caprice of the winds to litter the streets and walks. The same is true of a publication in which advertisers generally are permitted to hold out to the public the varied and general lines of merchandise they are selling. Some of the people whose private property is made the involuntary receptacle for such a publication would be interested in the attractive bargains shown in one line of merchandise and some in another, with the result that it is fair to assume that the number of copies of such a publication that would find their way into the streets would be very inconsiderable as compared to a publication advertising a more limited number of lines sold by one advertiser. And it is a matter of common knowledge that most people have a preference for trading with certain business houses and are constantly on the lookout for bargains advertised by those particular establishments, so the diversity of advertisers alone would reasonably serve to tend to prevent the very thing the ordinance is enacted to prevent. The classification made would seem to be based on reason and to be not arbitrary, and, if the ordinance discriminates against appellant's business as compared with other advertisers of the same line of merchandise, it is by reason of the nature of his publication. Such discrimination appearing to us to be based on distinctions that we cannot say are unreasonable or arbitrary, it is within the jurisdiction of the council to make. Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 32 S. Ct. 192, 56 L. Ed. 350.

[2] It might be urged that, if such a publication were deposited in a mail box, it would be beyond the reach of the wind and beyond the jurisdiction of the council to legislate against, as the act of so depositing the publication could not affect the public welfare even though it might raise the ire of the owner of the mail box. We think it also a matter of common knowledge that, when an individual finds his mail box stuffed with something in which he has no interest and which the receptacle was not made to receive, his frame of mind is such that the offending publication is usually given to the wind very promptly, resulting in the probability of its reaching a destination in the street or alley or on the sidewalk; so we cannot say that the council has gone beyond its jurisdiction in prohibiting the deposit in mail boxes of a publication that is so likely to be detrimental to the public by reason of its content.

[3] Counsel for appellant also contend that the ordinance is prohibitive. It is directed against the deposit of the proscribed publication in four places only: In an automobile, in any yard, on any porch, or in any mail box in such city not in the possession or under the control of the party distributing the same. The council has selected the four places where deposit of a publication in which the householder is not interested would most likely result in the very thing the ordinance is directed against. There is nothing to prevent distribution to the householder at the door if he is interested in the publication, or to individuals, and appellant could probably obtain the consent of interested householders to deposit the publication on their porches or in their mail boxes, or could change the form of his publication so as to bring it within the excepted classes. We therefore cannot see that distribution is prohibited.

[4-6] In our opinion the ordinance in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the city. It is not prohibitive, but regulates matters over which the council had jurisdiction; and, as the manner and extent of such regulation is for legislative determination and appears not to have been exercised in an arbitrary or unreasonable manner, we cannot interfere. In re Anderson, 69 Neb. 686, 96 N. W. 149, 5 Ann. Cas. 421.

Judgment affirmed.

DARROW v. ROBERT A. KLEIN & CO., Inc., et al.

Civ. 7715.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 26, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 25, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 26, 1931.

1. Conspiracy 🔑15.

Where conspiracy, as to defraud, is charged in civil case, gist of action is not conspiracy, but civil wrong resulting in damage.

2. Fraud 🔑7.

Constructive fraud usually arises from breach of duty, where relationship of trust and confidence exists (Civ. Code, § 1573).

Civ. Code, § 1573, defines constructive fraud as breach of duty which, without actually fraudulent intent, gains advantage for one by misleading another to his prejudice.

3. Brokers 🔑38(4).

Evidence showed that relationship of trust and confidence existed between vendor and broker, who was secretly acting as purchaser's agent, and who violated promises to vendor (Civ. Code, § 1573).

4. Principal and agent 🔑48.

Relationship of agent to principal is of fiduciary nature, analogous to relationship between trustee and beneficiary (Civ. Code, §§ 2228, 2234, 2322).

In view of Civ. Code, § 2322, forbidding agent to do any act which trustee may not do, principal agent relationship is governed by section 2234, providing that violation of duty by trustee is fraud on beneficiary, and also by section 2228, prohibiting trustee from obtaining any advantage by slightest misrepresentation or concealment, or from secretly taking part in transaction in which trustee has interest adverse to that of beneficiary.

5. Principal and agent 🔑48.

Agent must act with highest good faith, and may not obtain advantage over principal in any transaction by virtue of agency (Civ. Code, §§ 2228, 2234, 2322).

6. Brokers 🔑32.

Failure of brokers to make disclosures to vendor, or to reveal they were acting as purchaser's agents, held breach of duty, justifying vendor's recovery for constructive fraud (Civ. Code, §§ 1573, 2228, 2234, 2322).

Evidence showed that brokers, agreeing to purchase real estate from vendor, disclosed that they were making profit of $1,000 on resale to certain purchaser, but did not disclose that they were receiving $500 as commission or secret profit from purchaser, nor that, contrary to brokers' promises to vendor, purchaser was not making cash payment or procuring bond to insure completion of building which purchaser proposed to construct, and that failure to furnish such bond would make worthless the second deed of trust which vendor agreed to accept.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Marie E. Darrow against Robert A. Klein & Co., Inc., and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Henry Haves and Haves & Engelhardt, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lucius F. Chase, Lucius K. Chase, and Stanley N. Barnes, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

Plaintiff brought this action for damages based upon the alleged fraud of the defendants in a real estate transaction. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and, from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $4,215, defendants appeal.

Plaintiff was the owner of a contract for the purchase of a certain lot of land. There was a balance due upon the contract of approximately $1,185. The lot was admittedly of the value of $5.500. Defendant Robert A. Klein & Co. was a corporation engaged in the transaction of the business of a real estate broker, while defendant Fred W. Klein was an officer and acted for and on behalf of the corporation. The corporation appears to have been a family affair, defendant Fred W. Klein testifying that it consisted of his brother Robert A. Klein and himself. The defendant corporation had previously acted as agent for plaintiff in other real estate transactions and plaintiff had sought their advice on several occasions. Plaintiff had previously listed the lot in question with them for sale. About February 22, 1926, she sought their advice with respect to a proposed offer of $5,500 for the property. She talked with defendant Fred W. Klein. He informed her that he believed his brother, Robert A. Klein, would purchase the property upon terms similar to those offered. Plaintiff called at their office on February 22, 1926, and after a discussion accepted a deposit of $50 on the purchase price of $5.500 and signed a deposit agreement dictated by defendant Fred W. Klein. This deposit agreement read as follows: "In consideration of fifty dollars for which I hereby acknowledge receipt, I hereby agree to sell to Robert A. Klein & Co. or nominee lot No. 686 Tract No. 6143 for $5,500 upon the following terms and conditions, Fifteen Hundred Dollars cash including the amount receipted for. The balance of $4.000, I am to take back in the form of a trust deed payable $50 per month or more including interest at 8%. I am to allow Robert A. Klein & Co. or nominee to place a first trust deed on the above mentioned property upon which they agree to erect a four family flat of 5 rooms each. First Trust deed is not to exceed $15,000. I also agree that this lot is to be free and clear of all incumbrances. Robert A. Klein & Co. are to retain $275 out of the $1,500 down payment as their commission for services rendered."

Plaintiff was informed during the discussion that the defendant corporation had resold the lot for $6,500 to a Mr. Wallin and that the company would thereby make a profit of $1,000. To this plaintiff apparently assented. Plaintiff was further told that Wallin was to pay $2,500 down and was to put a building loan on the property in the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of erecting a building thereon and that the balance of $4,000 due to plaintiff was to be represented by a second deed of trust. There was further discussion regarding the protection which plaintiff would have in the transaction. She was assured that it would be perfectly safe, that Mr. Wallin was reliable, and that a bond would be furnished to insure the completion of the building referred to. In reliance upon these assurances, plaintiff entered into the transaction and the following day went to the Inglewood Savings Bank and signed escrow instructions dictated by defendant Fred W. Klein. These escrow instructions provided for a deed from plaintiff to Wallin and the payment by him of $2,450, being the balance of the down payment, and the execution of a $4,000 second deed of trust subject to a first deed of trust of $15,000. No mention of a bond was made in the instructions. Apparently no escrow instructions were given by Wallin. He testified that Mr. Klein acted as his agent in the transaction, which fact was unknown to plaintiff. Neither the sum of $2,450 nor any other sum was ever put up by Wallin, but he proceeded to negotiate a loan on the property in the sum of $15,000 from Golden Gate Securities Company. Upon the execution by Wallin of the instruments required, the Golden Gate Securities Company deposited $3.600 with the escrow holder as an advance on the building loan. Of this money so advanced on the building loan, approximately $1,185 was paid out by the escrow holder in obtaining the deed from plaintiff's vendor and the balance was paid over to and divided between Wallin and defendant Robert A. Klein & Co., the defendant company receiving a total of $1,775 therefrom. Defendants claimed that this sum represented the $275 commission from plaintiff, the $1,000 profit, and an additional $500 due from Wallin. Defendants did not disclose to plaintiff the fact that they were receiving this $500 from Wallin, defendant Robert A. Klein testifying that he did not believe it was necessary. Aside from receiving the second deed of trust in the sum of $4,000, the plaintiff received nothing in the transaction except the $50 deposit and one $50 monthly payment upon the second deed of trust which was advanced by the defendant company with the explanation that Wallin was up against it. Almost immediately thereafter Wallin became bankrupt. No house was built upon the property and the holder of the first deed of trust proceeded to foreclose. It developed that the only bond that existed was an indemnity bond obtained by the Golden Gate Securities Company to indemnify it against loss, which bond did not inure to the benefit of plaintiff. Wallin being bankrupt, and the second deed of trust being worthless, the damages awarded plaintiff were based upon the value of her interest, less the sum of $100 which she had received.

[1] Plaintiff's complaint appears to have been drawn upon the theory of a conspiracy to defraud charging that such conspiracy existed between defendants and Wallin. The complaint was of considerable length. It charged that all of the alleged fraudulent acts set forth were done in pursuance of such conspiracy and recited in detail the entire transaction and facts surrounding it. Respondent on this appeal refers to the action as one for damages for fraud, and we will so treat it, for, where a conspiracy is charged in a civil case, the gist of the action is not the conspiracy but the civil wrong resulting in damage. Mox, Incorporated, v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 262 P. 302; Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 135 P. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011; Dowdell v. Carpy, 129 Cal. 168, 61 P. 948.

It is contended by appellants that the evidence does not support the findings, and the findings do not support the judgment. Summarizing appellants' position, it consists of the claim that no actual fraud on the part of appellants was shown. We deem it unnecessary to determine whether the evidence was sufficient to support all of the numerous findings made or whether the evidence and findings make out a case of actual fraud on the part of the appellants. If the evidence and findings are sufficient to make out a case of constructive fraud on the part of appellants, we are satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed.

[2, 3] Constructive fraud most frequently arises from a breach of duty where a relationship of trust and confidence exists. It consists of "any breach of duty which, without an actually fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, * * * by misleading another to his prejudice. * * *" Civ. Code, § 1573. A relationship of trust and confidence existed in the present case by reason of the prior dealings of the parties and the terms of a deposit agreement providing for an agent's commission, and the findings that respondent reposed special confidence and trust in her agent are amply sustained by the evidence.

[4, 5] The duties and obligations of an agent are many. The relationship of an agent to his principal is of a fiduciary nature similar in many respects to the relationship between a trustee and his beneficiary. The relationship not only imposes upon the agent the duty of acting with the highest good faith, but likewise precludes him from obtaining an advantage over the principal in any transaction had by virtue of the agency. Langford v. Thomas, 200 Cal. 192, 252 P. 602; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486. A violation of duty on the part of a trustee is treated as a fraud upon the beneficiary (Civ. Code, § 2234), and a violation of duty on the part of an agent should be treated in the same manner (Civ. Code, § 2322; Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343, 32 P. 320). Under said section 2322, an agent may not do any act which a trustee is forbidden to do. That section, by reference to the sections relating to trustees, prohibits an agent from obtaining any advantage by the slightest misrepresentation or concealment of any kind (Civ. Code, § 2228), and prohibits an agent or those acting for him from taking part in any transaction concerning the agency in which the agent has an interest present or contingent, adverse to that of the principal, unless the principal with a full knowledge of the motives of the agent and all the facts which might affect the principal's decision permits the agent to do so (Civ. Code, § 2230).

[6] Measured by the foregoing rules, it is apparent that appellants are chargeable with a breach of duty to respondent. They failed to disclose, first, that they were acting as agents for Wallin; second, that no cash down payment was being made, but that Wallin was financing his down payment on the lot out of money advanced on the building loan; and, third, that out of money advanced on the building loan appellants were receiving, not only the commission of $275 and the profit of $1,000, but also an additional sum of $500 either as a secret profit from Wallin or as money owing from Wallin on some other transaction. The disclosure by appellants of the fact that they were participating in the transaction to the extent of a profit of $1,000 did not relieve them of their duties and obligations generally in their capacity as agents of respondent. In fact, their right to take part in the transaction to that extent depended upon their compliance with their duties as agents to fully disclose their motives and all the facts which might affect respondent's decision in assenting to such participation. Without disclosing their motives and all the facts, they obtained respondent's assent to the $1,000 profit and took part in the transaction, not only to the extent disclosed, but also to obtain the additional sum of $500. They withdrew all of the sums which they received, totaling $1,775, from the building loan money intended for the erection of a building for the protection of respondent's second deed of trust. Disregarding their duty to act with the highest good faith in respondent's interests, they acted throughout the transaction primarily, if not solely, in their own interests and to their own advantage, with the resultant loss to respondent.

Further, it has been frequently held that, where a relationship of trust and confidence exists, constructive fraud may be predicated upon a breach of duty consisting of a failure to perform a promise made. 12 Cal. Jur., p. 735, § 20, and cases cited. At the time respondent agreed to enter into the transaction appellant Fred W. Klein, both orally and in the deposit agreement dictated by him on behalf of the appellant company, promised that a building of a certain type would be erected on the premises. By his own testimony he further assured respondent that there would be a bond which would insure the completion of such a building. Relying upon these promises, respondent parted with her interest in the property. These promises were ignored by appellants and never performed.

That respondent was misled to her prejudice by the promises and concealments of appellants there can be no doubt. The nonperformance of these promises, together with the concealments practiced, constituted breaches of duty whereby appellants gained for themselves an advantage to the prejudice of respondent. We are satisfied that, aside from any question of the sufficiency of the evidence to establish conspiracy or actual fraud, the evidence established a case of constructive fraud sufficient to support all the material findings and the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

111 Cal. App. 287

WARDEN et al. v. BARNES et al.

Civ. 4237.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 22, 1931.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑527.

Statutory amendment regarding costs, on foreclosure sale for failure to pay installments on street improvement bond, did not apply to bond issued before amendment (St. 1893, p. 36, § 5, subd. c., as amended by St. 1921, p. 558).

> The statute in effect when bond was issued, St. 1893, p. 36, § 5, subd. c., as amended, provided that city treasurer must collect, in addition to amount due on bond, cost of publication of notice, and 50 cents for certificate of sale, and the amendment, St. 1921, p. 558, provides for charge of $1 for certificate of sale.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑582.

Deed under improvement bond foreclosure sale held invalid, where there was error in statement regarding amount due in certificate (St. 1893, p. 36, § 5, subd. c., as amended).

> There was an error in the statement as to the amount due because of an excessive cost charge, and record also showed an error of 87 cents in amount necessary to redeem.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑527.

Statute relating to defects and irregularities does not apply to proceedings to foreclose bond (St. 1885, p. 147).

4. Municipal corporations 🔑527.

Statute relating to defects and irregularities or informalities and omissions refers to informal proceedings which may be corrected by city council (St. 1885, p. 147).

5. Judgment 🔑356.

Order vacating judgment, findings of fact, and conclusions of law on ground same were signed and filed by inadvertence, and granting certain defendants leave to substitute modified judgment, findings of fact, and conclusions of law, held invalid (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a).

6. Municipal corporations 🔑579.

Where proceedings to foreclose improvement bond were invalid, judgment quieting title as against foreclosure purchaser's title without requiring payment of amount due held improper.

7. Equity 🔑66.

In equity action, title cannot be quieted in favor of party, extinguishing valid lien without requiring successful party to do equity.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑583.

Where proceedings to foreclose improvement bond only were invalid, property was subject to lien of bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; T. H. Selvage, Judge.

Action by Grace P. Warden and others against Walter J. Barnes and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff named appeals.

Affirmed in part, and in part reversed and remanded.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke and Charles Cassat Davis, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J.

This action was begun by the plaintiffs to quiet title to lot 115, Mortimer's East Hollywood View tract, as per map recorded in book 8, page 27, records of Los Angeles county. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff Grace P. Warden appeals.

The defendants Barnes interposed denials to the respective allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint, and in their answer, by way of further defense, alleged their ownership of the premises involved, and prayed for affirmative relief, to wit, that their title be quieted against all the demands of the plaintiffs.

The defendants Brooks denied the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint and, among other things, set up the existence of a mortgage on the premises involved in the sum of $6,000, and prayed that the plaintiffs take nothing as against them.

The record shows that the cause of action was based upon a failure to pay installments of principal in the sum of $6.08 due on a street improvement bond. The plaintiffs introduced a deed to the premises involved, executed by the city treasurer of the city of Los Angeles to Grace P. Warden, and then rested. The defendants then introduced in the first place sufficient evidence to warrant a judgment finding the defendants Barnes to be the owners of the premises involved, and then introduced the certificate of sale upon which the deed, executed in favor of the plaintiff Grace P. Warden, was based.

The record further shows that the bond for the street improvement was issued in accordance with the act of June 14, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 845 et seq.). This act prescribes the method of foreclosure of the sale of property and the items which may be included as costs. The bond in question was No. 132. The insufficiency of this certificate will be considered later on.

Appellant bases her argument in favor of reversal upon the alleged error of the trial court in admitting testimony relative to the name of the owner of the lot against which the bond was outstanding as a lien. Whether the contention of the appellant is correct or incorrect, or whether the name of the owner of the lot should be given in proceedings leading up to a sale of the lot, for failure to pay either principal or interest upon a bond issued for street improvements, need not be determined in this action, as the certificate to which we have referred shows that the plaintiff has no title to the premises. A reference to the certificate shows the following items making up the amount of $22.69 alleged to be due, to wit:

Amount of unpaid principal of bond	$ 6.08
Amount of interest on bond	.61
Costs	15.00
Certificate of sale	1.00
Total	$22.69

[1] Section 5 of the act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 36) as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 849) reads as follows: "Subdivision c. The city treasurer must collect, in addition to the amount due on such bond, the cost of publication of such notice, and fifty cents for the certificate of sale, as hereinafter provided." This section was amended in 1921 providing for a charge of $1 for the certificate of sale. However, the act of 1921 (St. 1921, p. 558) is inapplicable to the case at bar.

In Chapman v. Jocelyn, 182 Cal. 294, 187 P. 962, 963, the Supreme Court of this state definitely settles this question in the following language: "The case must be determined upon the provisions of the bond act as it existed in 1912 when the bond was issued. The act then in force was enacted in 1899. Stats. 1899, p. 40. The amendments of the act in 1913 made some material changes in the requirements concerning a sale. Stats. 1913, p. 849. (c) A street assessment is a contract, and the provisions of the statute in force at the time prescribing the manner of its enforcement are a part of such contract. Creighton v. Pragg, 21 Cal. 115; Houston v. McKenna, 22 Cal. 552. (4) The bond issued upon such assessment, by reason of the failure of the owner to pay the same within the 30 days allowed to the contractor for the work to collect the same, must therefore also constitute a contract. In effect, the bond creates a power of sale whereby the contractor may enforce the lien of the assessment against the property described in the bond. (5) The city treasurer is thereby made a special agent of the parties concerned, with authority to execute the power according to its terms, as found in the statute under which the bond is issued. The Constitution forbids the passage of a law impairing the obligation of a contract. Article 1, § 16. (6) It follows that a law enacted after such contract is made, and which materially alters the remedy of the bondholder to enforce his lien by means of a sale, or the rights of the owner under the law existing at the time the bond was issued, cannot apply to previous contracts, and can have only a prospective effect. Houston v. McKenna, supra. The case in this aspect is not distinguishable from Welsh v. Cross, 146 Cal. 621, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63, 2 Ann. Cas. 796, 81 P. 229, wherein it was held that a law extending the time for redemption from a foreclosure sale impaired the obligation of a mortgage executed before its enactment."

[2] The case of Chapman v. Jocelyn is also decisive of another point involved in this action, to wit, the failure to correctly state the amount due in the certificate. On page 300 of 182 Cal., 187 P. 962, the figures are all set forth showing a discrepancy in the statement of the amount due in the sum of $1.95. In the case at bar, as shown by the certificate, there was an error in the statement as to the amount due by reason of an excessive cost charge, and the record further shows an error of 87c in the amount necessary to redeem.

In addition to the case of Chapman v. Jocelyn, supra, showing the materiality of these discrepancies, we may cite the cases of Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 P. 761, and Landregan v. Peppin, 86 Cal. 126, 24 P. 859. Other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient to show the invalidity of the deed under which the plaintiff Grace P. Warden claims title.

[3, 4] The appellant, in answer to these discrepancies, calls our attention to section

53 of the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147), relative to defects and irregularities or informalities and omissions, contending that this section refers to foreclosure proceedings of a bond given for an assessment. This contention, however, is untenable. The section refers to such informal proceedings as may be corrected by the city council, and has no relevancy whatever to proceedings to foreclose a bond. The city council has jurisdiction only of the improvement in making the assessment, but has nothing to do with foreclosure proceedings.

[5] The record further discloses that after the making of findings, drawing conclusions and the entry of judgment herein, upon motion of the respondents the court made the following order:

"Amended Order

"The oral motion to vacate and set aside the judgment, findings of fact and conclusions of law herein, on the ground that the same were signed and filed by inadvertence and mistake, and to substitute modified judgment, findings of fact and conclusions of law therefor, being presented to the above-entitled court sitting in Department 4 thereof, Judge Thomas H. Selvage presiding, on the 23rd day of December, 1927, by Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke, by Harold H. Streight, for defendants Walter J. Barnes and Alice Barnes, there being no appearance on behalf of plaintiffs and other defendants;

"It Is Hereby Ordered that said judgment, findings of fact and conclusions of law be vacated and set aside, and that said defendants Walter J. Barnes and Alice Barnes be, and they hereby are granted leave to file herein judgment, findings of fact and conclusions of law with judgment modified to make said judgment conditional upon the payment to plaintiffs Grace P. Warden and C. P. Warden of a sum of money equal to the full amount of taxes, penalties and costs paid out by said plaintiffs;

"Further, It Is Ordered, that the foregoing order is made on condition that the same be of no effect if a notice of said motion by the moving defendants to plaintiffs is necessary to a proper hearing of said motion. Should notice be necessary and the said order be of no effect, this court will then consider that said motion of defendants has been put before this court to be heard after proper notice to said plaintiffs.

"T. H. Selvage, Judge."

This order is not supported by sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, specifying when orders may be made setting aside judgments.

[6-8] The case of Stanton v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 478, 261 P. 1001, settles the question here involved, and shows the invalidity of the order herein set forth. The judgment, however, must be reversed and sent back for the following reasons: The respondents Barnes asked for and obtained affirmative relief as against the plaintiff Grace P. Warden, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendants Barnes quieting their title as against all claims of the plaintiff. To this relief respondents Barnes are not entitled. The statutes of 1893, page 36, so far as the bond involved herein is concerned, reads as follows: "Said assessment shall be a first lien upon the property affected thereby, until the bond issued for the payment thereof, and the accrued interest thereon, shall be fully paid." While the foreclosure sale and deed based upon the proceedings therein had availed the plaintiff nothing, the lien of the bond was not extinguished. This being an action in equity, title cannot be quieted in favor of a party, extinguishing a valid lien upon real property, without requiring the person in whose favor the judgment is entered, to do equity. The foreclosure proceedings in this case only being held invalid, the property is still subject to the lien of the bond and the trial court should have entered judgment in favor of the respondents Barnes, quieting their title thereto, upon payment of the amount due the plaintiff Grace P. Warden, as the owner of the bond, including such costs as she was entitled to collect. This question is settled, we think, by the following cases: Sawyer v. Berkeley Securities Co., 99 Cal. App. 545, 279 P. 217, and the authorities there cited; Green v. Palmer, 68 Cal. App. 393, 229 P. 876.

The judgment in all particulars save as hereinafter stated, in favor of the respondents, is affirmed. The judgment in so far as it quiets the title of the respondents Barnes against all claims of Grace P. Warden, based upon the lien of the bond involved in this action, is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court to proceed and ascertain the amount due on said bond, together with such interest and costs as may properly be added thereto and charged against the respondents Barnes, and enter judgment accordingly.

It is further ordered that all of the parties herein bear their own costs.

All concur.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 26, 1931.

1. New trial 🔑6.

Matter of granting or refusal to grant motion for new trial was largely within discretion of trial court.

2. New trial 🔑159.

Trial court on motion for new trial must weigh and consider evidence of both parties and determine just conclusions to be drawn therefrom.

3. New trial 🔑72.

Trial court, if satisfied that findings of jury are contrary to weight of evidence, may grant new trial.

4. New trial 🔑159.

Probative force or evidentiary value of testimony is within determination of trial court in proceeding on motion for new trial.

5. New trial 🔑70.

Order granting new trial cannot be sustained, where there is no substantial conflict in testimony and evidence will be insufficient as matter of law to support verdict.

6. Automobiles 🔑244(7).

Evidence respecting truck driver's negligence held insufficient as matter of law to warrant recovery for injury to child.

7. Automobiles 🔑245(40).

Truck driver held not negligent as matter of law by reason of violation of statute respecting speed at time of injuring boy (St. 1923, p. 562, § 139 and p. 553, § 113(b)(2–4), as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30).

8. Automobiles 🔑162(2).

Failure of truck driver to sound horn before striking boy running across street from behind street car held not negligence (St. 1923, p. 562, § 139).

> Truck at time of accident was being driven along a one-way street within block in middle of afternoon, without pedestrians or vehicular traffic in sight, except approaching street car, and with no danger whatever apparent, so that it could not be fairly maintained that under such circumstances a duty was imposed upon driver of truck as reasonably prudent person to sound his horn.

9. Automobiles 🔑162(1).

Failure of truck driver to travel along right-hand side of one-way street was not negligence as respected injury to boy struck by truck.

> Truck driver at time of accident was about to pass between approaching street car and parked automobile, making it necessary for him to follow a course down the center of the street.

10. Trial 🔑241.

Reading to jury section of act having no bearing on facts of particular case is improper.

11. Appeal and error 🔑701(1).

Party, to avail of point that instruction is erroneous, must bring before court sufficient evidence to show that on proper instruction there might have been favorable finding.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Separate actions by Fredonia J. Moss and by David S. Pratt, a minor, suing by Fredonia J. Moss, his guardian ad litem, against A. D. Stubbs and another. Judgments for defendants, and, from subsequent orders granting plaintiffs' motions for new trials, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Thomas J. Straub, J. C. Wood, and Alden Ames, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Everette C. McKeage, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

The plaintiff David S. Pratt, 9 years of age, through his guardian ad litem, brought an action for damages on account of personal injuries he sustained as a result of being struck by a Ford truck owned by the defendant Pacific Gas & Electric Company and driven by the defendant A. D. Stubbs; and his mother, Fredonia J. Moss, brought a similar action against the same parties to recover the amount of damages she claimed to have suffered as a result of the accident, including loss of services. The actions were consolidated and tried before a jury. Motions for nonsuit and directed verdicts were made by defendants, and denied; and the jury returned separate verdicts in favor of defendants. Following the entry of judgments thereon, plaintiffs presented motions for new trial, which the court granted; and, from the orders made in that behalf, defendants have taken these appeals.

The orders are identical in form, and read in part as follows: "First: That plaintiff's instruction No. 13 was withdrawn by counsel with the understanding that the court would read from the California Vehicle Act the sections regarding the blowing of horn, referred to in said instruction which through some inadvertence the court did not do, but did read other sections of the California Vehicle Act embraced in said instructions. Second: That it is the belief of the court that the plaintiff has not had a fair trial. Third: That the court is of the opinion that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the weight of the evidence. It is therefore ordered that the motion for new trial in each case be granted, on the ground of errors of law occurring at the trial and insufficiency of the evidence to warrant the verdict."

*For opinion denying rehearing, see 296 P. 86.

[1-5] The well-settled rule is that the matter of granting or refusal to grant a motion for a new trial is largely within the discretion of the trial court (Work v. Whittington, 61 Cal. App. 302, 214 P. 474); that in passing upon such motion the trial court is not bound by the rule of conflicting evidence as is the appellate tribunal (Huckaby v. Northam, 68 Cal. App. 83, 228 P. 717; Smith v. Royer, 181 Cal. 165, 183 P. 660); but must weigh and consider the evidence for both parties and determine for itself the just conclusion to be drawn from it (Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337; Rudin v. Luman, 53 Cal. App. 212, 199 P. 874); and, if it is satisfied that the finding of the jury is contrary to the weight of the evidence, it may grant a new trial (Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 P. 288). Even where the evidence is not conflicting and all the proof seems to be favorable to one or the other of the parties litigant, the question of the probative force or the evidentiary value of the testimony is nevertheless within the determination of the trial court in a proceeding on motion for a new trial. Otten v. Spreckels, 24 Cal. App. 251, 141 P. 224; Roberts v. Southern Pacific Co., 54 Cal. App. 315, 201 P. 958. But it is equally well settled that, where there is no substantial conflict in the testimony on material issues, and the evidence as a whole would be insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict in favor of the moving party, an order granting a new trial cannot be sustained. Springer v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, 92 Cal. App. 732, 268 P. 951; Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 P. 1029; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732, 147 P. 960; Harvey v. Machtig, 73 Cal. App. 667, 239 P. 78, 82. As will hereinafter appear, there is no substantial conflict in the evidence as to any of the essential facts relating to the manner in which the accident happened; and the determinative question presented with reference to the evidence is therefore whether as a whole it would be sufficient as a matter of law to support verdicts in favor of plaintiffs, in the event that such verdicts had been found.

[6] The accident happened on the lower or westerly one-way traffic lane of Arlington avenue, some distance south of the intersecting line of San Fernando avenue, in the city of Berkeley, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Arlington avenue is constructed along the side of a hill for a considerable distance, and in the vicinity of the accident is divided by a parkway into two one-way paved traffic lanes. The lower or westerly lane accommodates the south-bound traffic, and the grade thereof, which descends slightly toward the south, is about ten feet lower than the roadbed of the upper or easterly lane, which takes care of the north-bound traffic. Both lanes are constructed on a curve. The width of the lower lane between curbs is 27 feet, and it is intersected by San Fernando avenue, which extends into but not beyond the upper lane. The parkway is 16 feet wide, and is planted to trees and shrubs, but, as indicated, it is intersected by San Fernando avenue so as to make the latter accessible to the traffic using the upper lane. Along the inside of the lower or westerly lane is laid the single track of a street car company, over which it operates its north and south bound cars. The outer or westerly rail is laid about 8 feet distant from the easterly bank, but just how close to the bank the inner rail is laid does not appear. Stubbs was traveling along the center of the lower traffic lane in a southerly direction, and was about to pass between a street car approaching in the opposite direction on his left and a parked automobile on his right, when the boy, who had just descended the hill to the street and paused at the edge of the bank to let the street car pass, suddenly ran out from behind the street car into the pathway of the on-coming truck, intending to cross the street, and was struck by the front wheel of the truck. He was knocked unconscious, and, besides being bruised about the head and face, suffered a fracture of both bones of the leg below the knee. On account of the presence of the street car, the boy and Stubbs were unable to see each other until the boy emerged from behind the street car, at which time they were within a few feet of each other. Stubbs brought his truck to a stop within a few feet beyond the point of the impact, picked up the boy, and, leaving his truck there in the street, accompanied the boy to the hospital, in an automobile belonging to another man.

The foregoing facts showing the manner in which the accident happened were established by the testimony of five witnesses, two of whom were the boy and Stubbs; the others being a man named Martin and two women, Mrs. Young and Mrs. Porter, all of whom happened to be driving along the upper or easterly lane of Arlington avenue. The boy testified that on the afternoon in question he left the private school he was attending, located up the hill above Arlington avenue, descended the steps down the hillside, crossed the upper lane of Arlington avenue, ran across the parkway, and "sort of skidded" down the bank to the curb of the lower lane, which is adjacent to the bank; that he reached the curb just as a north-bound street car was passing. Continuing, he testified as follows:

"Q. And after the car had passed, did you attempt to cross the street? A. Yes.

"Q. Were you running across the street? A. I looked first and then I ran, but because the car was there I couldn't see Mr. Stubbs coming down with his truck."

And on cross-examination, he testified:

"Q. When you left this point P-2 [the easterly curb of the lower lane] you went right across. Did you run or did you walk? A. I looked and then I ran.

"Q. So you ran right across? A. Yes.

"Q. Really in front of the automobile didn't you? A. Yes."

He further testified that he first observed the truck as he emerged from behind the street car, at which time the truck was about 6 feet away from him, but that he continued on his course across the street, and was hit.

The material portions of Martin's testimony were as follows:

"Well, when the boy ran down through this parkway space he had to slide and brace himself and wait for the car to pass. Just as this took place, I saw the Ford coming, when the boy ran down and waited for the street car, and the moment it passed him he started across the street. In darting across, which was faster than the eye almost, I saw the left wheel in the front strike the boy, roll him up, and he came out under the rear of the Ford. * * *

"Q. What the jury wants to know is what you saw? A. Well, the street car was coming parallel with me, naturally I could look down on the roof of it as there is an elevation of six feet or better. You can see practically over the roof of the car. I saw the Ford truck belonging to the Gas Company coming down. The boy could not see it. I could see it. And in looking over and seeing what was going to take place I stopped my car, because I saw exactly the position of the parties and the cars. And when the boy came around the end of the street car he was right within a few feet of the front of the Ford car.

"Q. He was exactly in front of the Ford car a few feet? A. No, I don't call it that. The boy was running and he could cover the distance between the rear of the street car and where the Ford hit him, and was so quick that it was just a flash. Therefore, it is hard for me to determine the distance between the end of the street car and the Ford car, it was so very minute."

Mrs. Young and Mrs. Porter were riding in the latter's automobile; and Mrs. Young's description of the accident was as follows:

"He [the boy] came right across a moment and waited for the car to pull down and switch here. Then he ran out from behind the car and the Ford car was coming along down in here, along the lower Arlington, when he ran out from behind the street car into the path of this Ford car.

"Q. When he ran out from behind the street car how far, as nearly as you can recollect, was the Ford car away from that particular point. A. Well, I would not say as to feet, because I was in the car. But it was right close. I could see when he darted behind the car that he was going to be hit. I could see there wasn't any way that the driver had that he could possibly avoid hitting him. * * * It all happened so quickly that by the time the child ran from behind the car he was right in front of his car. I couldn't say in feet because it all happened in a flash. I could see he was going to be hit and in the excitement and all you could not stop to figure feet. I know he just ran right in front of the car.

"Q. But the distance was very close? A. Very close. He was very close to the car, ran right into it."

Mrs. Porter testified: "Well, I didn't see a great deal of it, because I was driving; but as I came around the turn I saw the little boy run across the street. And he crossed the drive, and I didn't see anything else until I saw him fall in back of the truck."

Stubbs' testimony was to the effect that, as he was traveling southerly along the lower lane, he saw the approach of the street car more than 200 feet distant from him; that he was following a course down the center of the lane in order to pass between the car and an automobile parked along the right-hand curb; that, just as the front end of his truck reached a point opposite the rear end of the street car, he saw the boy for the first time emerging from behind the car; that the boy was then only 3 feet distant from the left front end of the truck, running across the street directly in the pathway of the truck, and that he was struck by the left front wheel.

The foregoing is, in substance, all of the evidence relating to the manner in which the accident happened, and in our opinion it would have been wholly insufficient as a matter of law to support verdicts in favor of plaintiffs, if such verdicts had been rendered, for the reason that, regardless of all question of contributory negligence, it utterly fails to establish any negligent act or omission on the part of the driver of the truck or any facts from which an inference of negligence could be fairly and reasonably drawn. As will be observed, the proof is not confined to the testimony of any particular witness. All five agree as to the essential facts; and, consequently, even though the testimony of Martin and Stubbs be disregarded entirely, as plaintiffs claim it should be, the testimony given by the remaining witnesses, including that of the boy himself, fails to establish any facts upon which a finding of negligence could be reasonably founded.

Stubbs testified that the accident happened about 200 feet south of the southerly intersecting line of San Fernando avenue, and the plaintiffs claim that on this point he was contradicted by the testimony of Mrs. Young. The record shows that on cross-examination she was asked by counsel for plaintiffs how far it was from the point where the boy was standing when the street car passed to the southerly intersecting line of San Fernando avenue, that is, the north end of the parkway, and she replied:

"Well, I don't know, because I never paid much attention to the park there, but I should imagine around 50 feet. I should think it was about that far, but I had never paid much attention.

"Q. So you would say then that the boy was struck about 50 feet or so south of this line? A. Yes."

Even assuming that the answer given was sufficiently definite to raise a substantial conflict on the point, it would seem to be entirely immaterial, so far as the cause of the accident was concerned, whether it happened 50 feet or more south of the intersecting line of San Fernando avenue.

[7] Section 113 of the California Vehicle Act (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30) provides, among other things, that it shall be unlawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed greater than 15 miles an hour; subdivision (b) (2) in traversing an intersection of highways when the driver's view thereof is obstructed in such a way that during the last 100 feet of his approach to such intersection he does not have a clear and uninterrupted view of such intersection and of the traffic entering such intersection for a distance of 200 feet from such intersection; or subdivision (b) (3), in traversing or going around curves or corners of a highway when the driver's view is obstructed within a distance of 200 feet along such highway in the direction in which he is proceeding; or subdivision (b) (4), when passing a school while persons are entering or leaving the grounds of such school. And plaintiffs contend that there is evidence to show that Stubbs violated said provisions and consequently was guilty of negligence as a matter of law. We are unable to agree to such contention. Stubbs testified that he crossed the intersection at a speed not greater than 15 miles an hour, and then increased his speed slightly so that, when he first saw the boy running out from behind the car, he was traveling 18 or twenty miles an hour; and the only other testimony as to speed was that given by Mrs. Young and Martin, which, so far as it goes, supports the statement of Stubbs. In this regard Mrs. Young testified that Stubbs was traveling "approximately around 15 miles an hour"; and Martin testified that when he first saw the truck, which was then south of the intersecting line, he "would say" that it was traveling between 18 and 20 miles an hour; but that he could not "truthfully say," because he was "not a very good judge of anything like that." Nor does the fact that Stubbs was traveling 18 to 20 miles an hour south of the intersection establish a violation of either of the other two provisions of said section 113, for the reason that the physical conditions therein described were not shown to exist at the place of the accident. True, testimony was given to the effect that there was "a radius on the street of about 126 degrees," and that, standing at a point 50 feet north of the northerly intersecting line of San Fernando avenue, it was impossible to obtain an unobstructed view 200 feet ahead; but no testimony whatever was introduced to show that from the southerly intersecting line of said avenue, from which point Stubbs stated he increased his speed to 18 or 20 miles an hour, the view ahead is obstructed within a distance of 200 feet. And, as to the second point, the evidence shows without dispute that the grounds of the private school are not adjacent to the street on which the accident occurred.

[8] Stubbs admitted that he did not sound his horn on approaching the scene of the accident, and it is claimed therefore that he violated the provisions of section 139 of said act (St. 1923, p. 562). But, as will be observed from the heading given said section, "Mountain Driving," as well as from the terms of the section itself, its provisions apply to the operation of vehicles "through defiles and canyons or over mountain highways," which is not this case. It may be conceded, of course, that, wheresoever a person may be driving, circumstances might arise which would require the driver, as a reasonably prudent person, to sound warning of his approach, but no such circumstances existed here. The truck was being driven along a one-way city street, within the block, in the middle of the afternoon, where there was no pedestrian or vehicular traffic in sight except the street car. There was no danger whatever apparent, and therefore, under such circumstances, it cannot be fairly maintained that a duty was imposed upon the driver of the truck as a reasonably prudent person to sound his horn.

[9] Plaintiffs argue also that, if Stubbs had been driving in a careful manner he doubtless would have seen the boy descending the steps; but the evidence shows that the steps were visible only from certain points along the lower lane, and no proof was introduced to show that the boy was descending the steps at the particular time the steps could have been seen from the lower lane. Moreover, it would be unreasonable to assume that a prudent and careful driver would have been looking along the side of the hill and away from the highway when he was about to pass between an approaching street car and a parked automobile in a narrow street. Plaintiffs make the further point that Stubbs was guilty of negligence in not traveling along the right-hand side of the street; but it must be remembered that this was a one-way traffic lane, and that he was about to pass between the street car and the parked automobile, which made it necessary, as he stated, for him to follow a course down the center of the street.

[10] The state of the evidence in the present case is entirely different from the one presented in Conner v. Henderson (Cal. App.) 291 P. 641, 642, cited by plaintiffs, for the reason that there the evidence as to the manner in which the accident happened was sharply conflicting. In this regard the court said: "The case presents a clear conflict in the evidence. Viewed from the standpoint of plaintiff's witnesses, the negligence of defendants was unquestioned. Viewed from the standpoint of defendants' witnesses, the plaintiff by her actions in suddenly darting from behind the truck directly into the path of the on-coming machine rendered the accident unavoidable and gave defendants no opportunity to avert the injury." The case of Off v. Crump, 40 Cal. App. 173, 180 P. 360, is cited by plaintiffs as supporting their contention that Stubbs was negligent in failing to see the boy until he was within 3 feet of him. But, unlike the facts of that case, the evidence here shows without dispute that the boy was completely hidden behind the street car until the truck was within a few feet from him. And the fact that the court inadvertently omitted to read section 139 of the California Vehicle Act to the jury did not furnish grounds for granting a new trial, for, as already pointed out, the provisions of said section were not applicable here; and it has been repeatedly held that it is improper to read to a jury a section of said act having no bearing upon the facts of the particular case. O'Meara v. Swortfiguer, 191 Cal. 12, 214 P. 975; Dewhirst v. Leopold, 194 Cal. 424, 229 P. 30; Lower v. Hughes, 80 Cal. App. 444, 251 P. 952. The case of Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066, cited by plaintiffs, is not in point for the reason that it involved the provisions of an earlier vehicle act which were different from those contained in section 139 as it stood at the time this accident happened.

[11] Plaintiffs further contend that the trial court erred during the course of the trial in commenting on the evidence in the presence of the jury, while plaintiffs' counsel was arguing the motion for a nonsuit; also in giving and refusing to give certain instructions. But, in view of the inevitable conclusion that the evidence would be legally insufficient to support verdicts in favor of plaintiffs, it is useless to inquire into or determine these latter points, because, even though the remarks complained of had not been made, and the jury had been instructed as plaintiffs claim it should have been instructed, and verdicts had been rendered in their favor, the evidence would still be insufficient as a matter of law to sustain such verdicts. In other words, the question of the legal sufficiency of the evidence cannot be affected in any manner by the trial court's comments on the evidence or its instructions as to matters of law. As held in Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 776, 89 P. 1109, 1112, cited approvingly in Mintzer v. City of Richmond, 27 Cal. App. 566, 150 P. 799, to avail himself of the point that an instruction is erroneous, a party must bring before the court sufficient evidence to show that upon a proper instruction there might have been a finding in his favor; and, if he does less than this, he presents for consideration a mere question of abstract error. In other words, to quote the language of the court, as applied to the facts of that case: "He was therefore not harmed by the action of the court in submitting this question to the jury on erroneous instructions, since there was no evidence which would have sustained a finding in his favor under the view of the law most advantageous to him."

As said by the court in Harvey v. Machtig, supra, in directing a reversal: "We are not unmindful of the reluctance with which appellate courts reverse orders granting or refusing new trials, nor of the rule that a trial court in passing upon such a motion is not bound by the findings of the jury if there is sufficient evidence to sustain a contrary finding. Huckaby v. Northam, 68 Cal. App. 83, 228 P. 717. Where, as here, however, there is no evidence upon which a contrary finding could be founded, the order granting a new trial cannot be sustained upon appeal."

The orders appealed from are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Charles Knoth was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

J. M. Lopes, of Tulare, for appellant.

U. S. Webb., Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, J.

By an information filed by the district attorney of Tulare county, appellant was charged with the crime of burglary together with one prior conviction of a felony. He entered a plea of not guilty to the charge of burglary and of a plea of guilty to the prior conviction. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of burglary in the second degree, and appellant prosecuted this appeal.

An unoccupied house belonging to J. O. Guill was located west of the town of Goshen in the county of Tulare. In it was a quantity of household furniture. E. C. Featherstone was caretaker of the property and John V. Deniz was employed to pump water for the cattle on the place. All the doors and windows of the house were closed and the exterior doors boarded up on the evening of April 11, 1930. On that date Deniz was at the Guill house and had pumped the water for the cattle. After finishing his task, and as he crossed the road in front of the house on his way home, he noticed an automobile approaching, without its headlights illuminated. It was stopped by the gate to the Guill house. Two men alighted from it and proceeded to the rear of the house. He heard noises at the back door, then saw one of the men return to the automobile, take something from it, and return to the rear of the house. He then secured his own automobile and, picking up Featherstone and a boy named Wallace Schulz, brought them back to the Guill premises. Deniz then went to call the officers. Featherstone and Schulz saw O. J. Ward come around the house from the rear and approach his parked automobile carrying a bottle or pan of water. Ward told them he was filling the radiator of his car. About the same time Featherstone noticed a man running through a field and away from the house. Schulz followed the fleeing man, but as he was unable to overtake him, fired some shots at him. Ward called to the man, saying, "Come on in Charlie." The fleeing man made good his escape.

An examination showed that the boards over the rear door of the Guill house had been torn loose, the door opened, and some household effects and a patent toilet removed from the house and placed on the ground outside the door. An iron pinchbar was found near the door.

During the month of August, 1930, appellant was arrested by the sheriff of Tulare county, in the city of Hanford. After he was confined in the Tulare county jail, he made a voluntary statement to a deputy district attorney which was taken down in shorthand by a reporter. In this statement appellant said that he paid Ward $2 to drive him from Visalia out in the country so that he might dispose of five gallons of wine which he had in his possession; that after he had disposed of the wine, Ward stated to him that he wanted to look at a house which he intended to rent and drove to the Guill place; that Ward alighted from the car and went to the rear of the house, appellant remaining seated in the automobile; that after Ward had been gone several minutes, appellant proceeded to the rear of the house and found Ward tearing boards from the door; that appellant told Ward not to do this, but that Ward made entry into the house and carried household goods and a patent toilet from the house to the yard; that about this time appellant heard an automobile drive up and stop in front of the house; that appellant told Ward they had better go and then ran across the fields as fast as he could and escaped; that he went to the state of Montana, where he remained for some time.

Ward appeared as a witness for the people. He testified that he had known appellant for several months before the burglary and met him on the evening of April 11, 1930, and they formed the plan of driving out to the Guill house to get some household goods to enable appellant to set up housekeeping. Appellant procured the pinchbar with which the boards were pried off the rear door of the house. The two drove to the Guill place and made entry; that they carried the household goods and patent toilet outside the door and were interrupted by an automobile driving up and stopping in front of the house; that Ward went to his automobile with a bottle of water and appellant ran away as described by the other witnesses.

[1-3] Appellant contends that the evidence of the accomplice Ward is not sufficiently corroborated to justify a conviction. With this we cannot agree. The law is well settled that the testimony of an accomplice may be corroborated by circumstantial evidence. The conduct of the accused may be examined for corroborating circumstances, and if from all the circumstances of the case the guilt of the accused may be fairly inferred, the corroboration is sufficient. People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40; People v. Nikolich, 93 Cal. App. 356, 269 P. 721; People v. Rodgers, 94 Cal. App. 150, 270 P. 712.

[4] Appellant offered himself as a witness in his own behalf. Upon cross-examination and over his objection, he admitted that he had been convicted of a felony. He assigns this ruling as error, but as the question was asked on cross-examination for the purpose of impeachment there is no merit in this contention. Section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Rodgers, supra.

Appellant makes complaint of other rulings of the trial court upon objections to questions propounded to various witnesses. There is no merit in any of them, and no good purpose can be served by a detailed discussion of them here.

[5] Appellant contends that the evidence showed that Ward was an accomplice and that the court should have instructed the jury to this effect. There can be no question from the evidence but that Ward was an accomplice in the commission of the crime. The failure to give such an instruction, under the circumstances of this case, was held not prejudicial to the rights of the defendant in the case of People v. Ferlin, 203 Cal. 587, 265 P. 230, 236, in which the court said:

"Complaint is made by the defendant that the lower court erred in refusing to charge the jury, as matter of law, that the witness Hill was an accomplice. It is urged that this question, in view of the evidence in the case, was not a proper one to be submitted to the jury for determination. We are of the opinion that the defendant's contention is meritorious. * * * It was the duty of the trial court, therefore, to instruct the jury, as matter of law, that Hill was an accomplice of the defendant. [Citing cases.] However, this error cannot be said to have prejudicially affected the defendant. In People v. McDermott, 75 Cal. App. 718, 243 P. 485, it is declared that: 'The jury should have been instructed that Sova must be regarded as an accomplice. That question should not have been left to it to determine. However, it must be presumed that the jurors observed and applied the instructions given them. In other instructions the definition of an accomplice was correctly stated, as also was the rule that the defendant may not be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and that the corroborating evidence is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the crime and the circumstances thereof; and further, that such corroborating evidence must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Hence it is inconceivable that the erroneous instruction given in any way prejudiced any right of the appellant.'"

[6] Appellant complains of other instructions given by the trial court, and of the refusal to give instructions proposed by him. We have examined all of these instructions and find no error in them. The instructions given fully cover the instructions proposed by the appellant which were refused and there was no error in the trial court's rejecting them.

Judgment affirmed.

BROWN et al. v. BARNETT.

Civ. 6187.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 30, 1931.

1. Trial ⚷251(2).

Trial of action for money received as action for accounting between partners held erroneous as outside issues presented by pleadings.

Complaint alleged that defendant received a named sum to and for the use of plaintiffs, and that he had refused payment after demand therefor, while answer denied that defendant at time stated or any time received sum alleged or any sum to or for the use of plaintiffs, and admitted the demand and refusal of payment.

2. Partnership ⚷108.

One partner cannot sue another upon demand arising out of partnership transactions, in absence of settlement of accounts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by Walter Brown and another against Thomas D. Barnett. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Victor Ford Collins, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur William Green, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J.

By the complaint the plaintiffs alleged that on January 12, 1925, defendant received the sum of $1,256.50 to and for the use of plaintiffs. The complaint further alleged demand for payment, refusal of payment, and nonpayment. The answer of defendant denied that at the time stated or at any time he received said alleged sum, or any sum, to or for the use of plaintiffs, and admitted the demand and refusal of payment.

The findings of fact are that all the allegations of the complaint are true and that all of the allegations of the answer are untrue. There is a further finding as follows: "That a partnership existed between the above named parties, plaintiffs and defendant, and that each was entitled to an undivided one-third interest in and to the earnings of the business, known as Thomas D. Barnett Company, as conducted at and during the times mentioned in plaintiffs' complaint and that in accordance with said partnership conditions and agreements, there is now due from defendant to plaintiffs the sum of One Thousand ($1,000.00) Dollars."

The record shows that the plaintiffs were permitted to try the case as if the complaint had alleged a partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant and a series of partnership transactions ending with a dissolution of the partnership; and as if it had been further alleged that after dissolution of the partnership the affairs thereof were in such condition as to require an accounting by the court. To all of this offered evidence relating to a partnership and to partnership transactions the defendant objected upon the ground that the evidence was not within the issues of the case, and that under the allegations of the complaint the plaintiffs did not have a right to thus present an issue of partnership and accounting. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $1,000. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

[1, 2] There are numerous assignments of error, most of which we need not discuss. We are satisfied that the court erred in trying this action as an action for an accounting between partners when, as it plainly appears, the pleadings tendered no issue of that kind. "It is well settled in this state, as elsewhere, that one partner cannot sue another upon a demand arising out of the partnership transactions, in the absence of a settlement of the accounts." Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 54, 18 P. 808, 810, 11 Am. St. Rep. 235; Jepsen v. Beck, 78 Cal. 540, 21 P. 184. See, also, 21 A. L. R., pages 34 et seq.; 58 A. L. R., pages 623 et seq.

At the trial of this action it was admitted that the accounts of the partnership remained open. The plaintiff White said: "There has not been any settlement since dissolution of partnership. Mr. Barnett refused to settle with us. * * *" The plaintiff Brown, as witness, testified to estimates, according to which the plaintiffs "figured up" the amount which, as he said, constituted an unpaid balance of $1,250.50 "coming to White and myself." It is thus admitted that at the time of commencement of this action, and at all times thereafter, there was no settlement of these accounts.

"It may not at this day be necessary, in order to maintain an action at law against a copartner, or one who had been such, to show an express promise to pay a sum of money already ascertained as the balance due, but it is necessary that the balance itself must be one which has been ascertained by the act of both parties—in other words, agreed to as constituting a balance due." Ross v. Cornell, 45 Cal. 133.

The judgment is reversed.

Action by Eddy H. Mauzy and others against J. D. Millar. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Holland & Holland, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem.

This is an action upon a note in the sum of $1,600, executed by defendant to the order of one E. H. Mauzy, one of the plaintiffs, and who assigned same to the parties bringing this suit.

The circumstances under which the note was given were, briefly, as follows:

In September, 1925, E. H. Mauzy, one of the plaintiffs, and one Darnell, as agent for the remaining plaintiffs, entered into an escrow agreement with one R. F. Crittenden, whereby the Title Insurance & Trust Company was authorized to act as escrow holder in connection with the sale of certain real estate by plaintiffs to said Crittenden, at the price of $325,000.

Shortly thereafter, a deed, duly executed and acknowledged by all of the plaintiffs, conveying said property to said Crittenden, was deposited in said escrow by said Darnell.

Apparently being unable to complete the purchase of the property within the time provided by the escrow, said Crittenden on January 21, 1926, paid to the plaintiffs the sum of $4,000 on account of said purchase, and at the same time said escrow agreement was modified so as to grant to Crittenden an extension of time to March 20, 1926, within which the balance of the purchase price might be paid, and also so as to grant to him the right to three additional extensions thereafter of thirty days each, upon the payment each month in advance of $1,600; it being agreed, however, that no part of such monthly payments should apply on the purchase price. Said escrow agreement, as thus modified, was originally signed by the plaintiff E. H. Mauzy, and the said Darnell, as agent for the remaining plaintiffs; but the latter shortly thereafter ratified such modification in writing. On or about February 17, 1926, Crittenden assigned to the defendant an undivided three-fourths interest in said property.

Being unable to pay the balance of the purchase price by March 20th, Crittenden, induced the defendant to execute and deliver the note in question, in consideration of which he secured an additional extension of thirty days.

The purchase not being completed by April 20, 1926, a further extension was granted to May 5, 1926. No further payment having been made, said E. H. Mauzy and Darnell, the latter acting as agent for the remaining plaintiffs, on July 7, 1926, gave notice to the escrow agent that the agreement would be canceled on July 20, 1926, on which last-mentioned date the plaintiffs terminated the deal.

The lower court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant has appealed and, in support thereof, has advanced the following points:

That the defendant was never a party to the contract for the sale of the property in question.

That the note executed by the defendant was offered as a guarantee for the payment of Crittenden's debt, but such offer was rejected.

That the parties to the original contract of sale, without the consent of the defendant, altered the original obligation, and thereby discharged him.

That the original parties to the said contract voluntarily released the principal charged upon said obligation and rescinded the transaction, and thereby released and effected a cancellation of the note.

That said note was tendered as a guaranty of the payment of a penalty in case the original obligor under the contract of sale should fail to carry out his engagements.

That no damage has been suffered.

In addition, appellant cites several instances—six in number—wherein it is claimed the trial court erred in overruling objections to the admission of evidence. For example, defendant objected to the introduction of letters, signed by those plaintiffs for whom Darnell acted as agent. Said letters had been addressed and delivered to the escrow holder, and recited that the signers thereof ratified the act of said agent in modifying the agreement, whereby the extension of January 21, 1926, was granted.

Another objection was to the introduction of letters of similar import, written by the same parties in April, 1926, ratifying the extension which Darnell had granted under date of April 20. Still another objection was to the introduction of the deed deposited in escrow, and which upon its face purported to be a conveyance by plaintiffs transferring the property in question to said Crittenden.

We have considered each of the points raised by appellant and find no merit in any of them.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Evidence in action for death of motorist who attempted to pass vehicle and collided with approaching motortruck justified submission of case on last clear chance doctrine.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This action was brought by the surviving husband and three minor children of Mrs. Elizabeth Pair, for damages for her wrongful death resulting from an automobile collision.

On the 10th day of April, 1928, the deceased was driving a Nash automobile south on Alameda boulevard near Bennett street, in the city of Compton; she was accompanied by Cornelia Huffman, whose husband was the owner of the machine. Immediately preceding them on the highway, and going in the same direction, was an empty truck with a trailer attached, owned by the B. & O. Truck Company; a truck and trailer, both loaded with lumber and owned by the defendant Hammond Lumber Company, was proceeding north on Alameda boulevard at the same time. Mrs. Pair attempted to pass the B. & O. truck, and just as she was in a position where she could start to turn back onto the right side of the boulevard in front of the B. & O. truck, the automobile she was operating was struck by the lumber truck going north, the left front wheel of the Nash automobile having caught on the left front wheel of the lumber truck, causing the Nash automobile to swing around at right angles to the side of the lumber truck. Instantly the B. & O. truck struck the Nash from the side and carried it forward about forty or more feet. Mrs. Huffman and the deceased were both thrown from the automobile and severely injured; they were taken to a hospital, where Mrs. Pair died in the afternoon of the same day. There was conflicting testimony as to the speed of the three vehicles; however, an eyewitness testified that none of them was exceeding twenty miles an hour. There was no dispute of this last statement.

The driver of the lumber truck testified that he was watching the Nash automobile from the time it swung out from behind the B. & O. truck; that it was 100 feet or more away from him when it started to turn out to pass the B. & O. truck; that he saw it weaving back and forth in its course; that, when he saw the Nash come out from behind the truck, in his opinion "she did not give herself ample room to pass between the two trucks" and that "he thought she was taking a chance"; that his right front wheels were about eighteen inches inside the pavement and his rear wheels about twelve; that there was nothing which would have prevented him from pulling off the pavement to the right of the road. A map introduced in evidence showed that there was a shoulder of dirt road on his right approximately five and a half feet wide. He further testified that he would not have upset his load if he had turned to the right on the dirt portion of the highway; that he put on his brakes when he saw the Nash automobile weaving, but another witness testified: "The truck traveling north, I don't believe turned either way out of its course; I didn't see him apply the brakes, but I know the truck was slowed down, turned off the highway after hitting the car, so he must have at least applied his foot brakes right after the time; I don't say he put them on before the crash, but I don't believe it was possible." There was testimony that the lumber truck was swerving also. A witness named Welch was asked the following questions:

"Q. You saw this big heavy lumber loaded truck coming north and the back of the trailer swinging backwards and forwards? A. Yes.

"Q. Then you saw a commotion of some kind like there had been an accident and heard the crash? A. Yes."

A nonsuit was ordered in favor of the defendant the B. & O. Truck Company, but the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs and against the Hammond Lumber Company. This appeal is from the judgment rendered pursuant to the verdict.

The sole question for our determination is whether the facts are sufficient to warrant the jury in returning a verdict upon the doctrine of the last clear chance. The court's instruction correctly defined the law thereof, and the appellant makes and could make no objection thereto other than to say that the evidence did not warrant the submission of the case to the jury upon that theory.

Undoubtedly, as was admitted in the trial court, the deceased was guilty of negligence when she attempted to pass the B. & O. truck without sufficient time to give her clearance, but, after putting herself in that position, was it possible for her to escape by the use of ordinary care, and did the driver of appellant's truck realize her dangerous situation and her inability to escape therefrom, and did he have a clear chance to avoid the collision by the exercise of ordinary care, and did he fail in this regard? Upon the answers to these questions hinges the outcome of this appeal. Darling v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 197 Cal. 702, 242 P. 703. From our recital of the testimony it cannot be doubted that appellant's driver realized the dangerous situation in which Mrs. Pair had placed herself and the difficulty, if not impossibility, she faced of extricating herself therefrom; nor can we escape the conclusion that the jury was entitled to say that he could have avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary care (the act of turning slightly to the right), but that he made no attempt to alter his course. That leaves but the single question of whether the deceased could have extricated herself from her predicament by the use of ordinary care. There should be added to the facts the statement that other automobiles were following the B. & O. truck, so that her escape in that direction was very doubtful. The testimony of Mrs. Huffman is capable of the construction that Mrs. Pair had no chance to turn back into her regular line of traffic until just at the moment of impact. She testified, "It seems like just as we were clearing that one" (truck and trailer) "going south, why, then, we were struck by the one going north," and again, "As near as I can tell, and as near as it seemed to me that we had just passed, we had passed the truck going south, and had just started to turn back into our own." Also she said, "The last I can remember clearly was that we were just clearing the truck nicely, and the other truck was coming faster than I expected it was coming, and I felt that Mrs. Pair felt the same way, and just why or how it was that truck struck us, I don't know," and lastly, "The last I do remember was when she was just at this point, seemed to me she was just at the point where she could slip in and clear in front of the truck we were passing, and that was the truck I had my eyes on."

Judgment affirmed.

PECOR v. NORTON-LILLY CO.

Civ. 6435.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 20, 1931.

1. Master and servant ⚿351.

Where employer carried liability insurance, but employer and insurer refused to pay compensation for injuries, employee could not bring action at law (St. 1917, p. 857, § 29(a) and (b), as amended).

> St. 1917, p. 857, § 29(b), as amended, provides that, "if any employer shall fail so to secure payment of compensation, any injured employee or his dependents may proceed against employer by filing application for compensation with commission," and, in addition, may bring action at law against employer for damages.

2. Master and servant ⚿394.

CONREY, P. J.

Judgment was entered dismissing the action after and pursuant to an order sustaining demurrer to complaint. From the complaint it appears that the plaintiff received certain injuries while engaged in work for the defendant. The facts alleged are sufficient to show that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment, although there is no direct allegation to show this fact; and there is no attempt to state a cause of action based upon negligence of any kind.

[1, 2] By section 29(a) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917 p. 857), as amended and in force at the time of the accident referred to in the complaint, it was required that every employer (with exceptions not material here) shall secure the payment of compensation either by insuring against liability with an insurance carrier duly authorized therefor or by securing from the commission a certificate of consent to self-insure. In subdivision (b) of said section 29 it is provided: "If any employer shall fail so to secure the payment of compensation, any injured employee or his dependents may proceed against such employer by filing an application for compensation with the commission, and, in addition thereto, such injured employee or his dependents may bring an action at law against such employer for damages, the same as if this act did not apply. * * *"

The complaint does not allege that the defendant did not at the time of the accident carry insurance against liability. On the contrary, the complaint admits that there was such insurance. The allegation is that "the defendant and its insurance company for such cases has failed and refused to pay him any compensation under and by virtue of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 and the amendments thereto of 1919 of the state of California for and because of such injuries and damages, though plaintiff has demanded the same." It is the contention of appellant that this failure to pay constitutes a failure "to secure the payment of compensation," as required by said section 29, and that this gives him a right to bring his action at law in the superior court instead of making application for compensation by a proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission. We are of the opinion that this contention of appellant is without merit, and that he has not alleged facts sufficient to show failure "so to secure the payment of compensation," within the meaning of that clause as found in said section 29(b).

"The California Workmen's Compensation Act provides the only means by which an injured employee can recover compensation from his employer for injuries received in the course of and arising out of his employment, and it abrogates the common-law liability of the master for such injuries in the cases to which it is applicable. * * * When the specified conditions exist, the remedy provided by the act is exclusive of all other statutory or common law remedies." Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. Industrial Accident Commission, 200 Cal. 579, 583, 253 P. 926, 928.

The judgment is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SECURITIES CO. v. STATE.

QUAKER OATS CO. v. SAME.

Civ. 7464.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 21, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 19, 1931.

1. States ⚷191(2).

In determining whether actions against secretary of state were in effect against state, substance of complaints is primarily to be considered.

2. States ⚷191(2).

Actions by corporations against secretary of state to recover taxes, paid under protest pursuant to unconstitutional law, held, in effect, actions against state (St. 1893, p. 57; St. 1917, p. 371, as amended).

> Complaints, in substance, alleged that secretary of state, as such, demanded payment pursuant to California Corporation License Tax Act (St. 1917, p. 371, as amended) on penalty of having corporations' right to transact business within state forfeited; that, to avoid such forfeitures, moneys were paid under protest to secretary of state, who paid them to state treasurer; that act is void; that demand for refund was made and refused; and that moneys were due and owing to complainants. Moreover, it appeared that Attorney General, when appearing in cases, was not misled as to his defense, for he pleaded by way of answer that actions were barred by provisions of St. 1893, p. 57, which provides for maintenance of actions against state itself.

3. States ⚷203.

In actions by corporations against secretary of state to recover taxes paid under unconstitutional law, circumstances required affirmance of orders substituting state as party; plaintiffs having been led into such form of action by appellate court decisions.

> To rule otherwise would place state in decidedly inequitable position of admittedly collecting moneys under void statute, but denying relief, notwithstanding parties entitled thereto had pursued as nearly as possible, in view of appellate court decisions at time of filing actions, remedial procedure provided for in such cases, although subsequently Supreme Court held that such actions would lie only against state itself.

4. States ⚷205.

Attorney General having voluntarily appeared and submitted to jurisdiction in actions against state, alleged noncompliance with statute was immaterial (St. 1893, p. 57).

5. States ⚷205.

Actions against state having been brought within statutory period, time of Attorney General's appearance was immaterial.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Actions by the California Securities Company and by the Quaker Oats Company against Frank C. Jordan, individually and as Secretary of State. The court ordered that the State be substituted in place of defendant, and, from judgments rendered against it, the State appeals.

John A. Sinclair, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem.

These actions were brought by plaintiffs, respondents herein, to recover certain corporation license taxes paid by them under protest to Frank C. Jordan as secretary of state, who was sued both individually and in his official capacity. The taxes were levied, assessed, and collected under the provisions of the California Corporation License Tax Act (St. 1917, p. 371, as amended), which act had, prior to the institution of these actions, been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Both complaints herein were filed on December 31, 1927. Prior to this time, and in December, 1917, the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District, in the case of McClellan v. State of California, 35 Cal. App. 605, 170 P. 662, held that an action brought directly against the state for the recovery of moneys paid under the provisions of said act would not lie, because the state could not be sued without its consent. This decision declared that the act of February 28, 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 57), did not authorize such a suit. Subsequently, however, and on February 26, 1929, the Supreme Court, in the case of Welsbach Co. v. State of California, Frank C. Jordan as Secretary of State and Charles G. Johnson as Treasurer of said State, 206 Cal. 556, 275 P. 436, held that an action to recover taxes collected under an unconstitutional statute was authorized by the said statute of 1893, and would lie against the state itself, but not against the secretary of state or the state treasurer, or either of them, in their official capacity.

On April 1, 1929, the Attorney General of the state of California filed answers to the complaints herein, denying the alleged involuntary character of the tax payments, and alleging that the actions were barred by the terms of said statute of 1893 and by section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Apparently with the Welsbach decision in mind, respondents on July 12, 1929, secured orders from the trial court reciting that the actions were in effect actions against the state of California; that the said state of California was the real party defendant; that the actions were being defended by the duly authorized attorney for the state of California, and ordering that the state of California be substituted in the place and stead of the defendants Frank C. Jordan and Frank C. Jordan as secretary of state in the same manner and to the same effect as if the state of California had been named as a party defendant in the original complaints filed herein.

Thereafter, and on July 18, 1929, the Attorney General filed on behalf of the state of California new answers denying certain allegations of said complaints, and again affirmatively alleging that the actions were barred by the terms of the said statute of 1893 and by the provisions of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The cases were tried and judgments rendered against the state of California for the amounts sued for.

The state of California now appeals, alleging as grounds of appeal: (1) That the original actions brought against the secretary of state were not in fact actions against the state of California; (2) that the order substituting the state of California in the place of the said secretary of state was void; (3) that, assuming the actions against the secretary of state to be in fact actions against the state of California, the state was not properly in court because of noncompliance by respondents with the terms of the statute of 1893; and (4) that, assuming the appearances by the Attorney General constituted waivers of the terms of the statute of 1893, the actions were barred by the statute of limitations because the appearances were made more than two years after the causes of action accrued.

We cannot agree with any of these contentions.

[1, 2] Primarily, the substance of the complaints is to be considered. An examination thereof reveals the fact that they contain every allegation necessary to constitute causes of action against the state.

Briefly, the allegations are that the secretary of state as such demanded of respondents the payment of moneys under and pursuant to the so-called California Corporation License Tax Act on penalty of having their right to transact business within the state forfeited if they failed so to do; that, in order to avoid such forfeitures, the moneys were paid under protest to the secretary of state, who in turn paid them forthwith to the state treasurer; that the act under which the moneys were collected is void; that demand for a refund was made and refused; and that the moneys were due and owing to respondents.

Furthermore, it appears that the Attorney General, when he appeared in the cases, was in no wise misled as to his defense, for he pleaded by way of answer, and before the substitution of parties was made, that the actions were barred by the provisions of the said act of 1893, which specifically provides for the maintenance of actions against the state itself, and makes available to the state a plea that actions brought under the terms of said act must be brought within a period of two years after the causes of action accrue.

In the case of Smith v. Reeves, 178 U. S. 436, 20 S. Ct. 919, 920, 44 L. Ed. 1140—an action brought against the defendant as treasurer of the state of California for the return of taxes illegally collected—Mr. Justice Harlan said: "Is this suit to be regarded as one against the state of California? The adjudged cases permit only one answer to this question. Although the state, as such, is not made a party defendant, the suit is against one of its officers as treasurer; the relief sought is a judgment against that officer in his official capacity; and that judgment would compel him to pay out of the public funds in the treasury of the state a certain sum of money. * * * The action is not one to recover specific moneys in the hands of the state treasurer, nor to compel him to perform a plain ministerial duty. It is to enforce the liability of the state to pay a certain amount of money on account of the payment of taxes alleged to have been wrongfully exacted by the state from the plaintiffs. Nor is it a suit to enjoin the defendant from doing some positive or affirmative act to the injury of the plaintiffs in their persons or property, but one in effect to compel the state, through its officer, to perform its promise to return to taxpayers such amount as may be adjudged to have been taken from them under an illegal assessment."

In commenting upon this case, appellant contends that it was a suit against the state, not because it was a suit against a state officer, but because the treasurer was authorized by the law under which the suit was brought to appear and defend such action. We find, however, nothing in the decision of the court to warrant such conclusion.

[3] On the question of the orders of substitution being void, several cases are cited which either authorize the making of such orders or approve the filing of an amended complaint properly naming the real party defendant, even after the statute of limitations has run. Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 180 Cal. 730, 183 P. 153; Walsh v. Decoto, 49 Cal. App. 737, 194 P. 298, 300; Craig v. San Fernando Furniture Co., 89 Cal. App. at 172, 264 P. 784.

In the Walsh Case the court concluded its opinion with these words: "There is abundance of authority that the court may so act on its own motion in furtherance of justice." Furtherance of justice in the instant case demands that the action of the trial court in making the orders of substitution be affirmed. To rule otherwise would place the state in the decidedly inequitable position of admittedly collecting moneys under a void statute but denying relief, although the parties entitled thereto had pursued as nearly as possible, in view of upper court decisions, the remedial procedure provided for in such cases.

[4] As to evidence of the alleged noncompliance with the terms of the act of 1893, by way of filing an undertaking and serving summons, the record before this court is entirely silent, the transcript consisting merely of the complaints, answers, orders of substitution, findings, and judgments. These matters, however, are immaterial if our first conclusion herein is correct, namely, that the actions were in effect actions against the state itself, for the Attorney General voluntarily appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court.

[5] Likewise, if our first conclusion is correct, the final point raised on appeal is without merit—that is, that the appearances having been made more than two years after the original actions were filed, such actions are barred by the statute of limitations. If the actions were, as held herein, actions against the state itself, they were not barred by the statute of limitations, because they were brought within two years from the date the causes of action accrued. The time of appearance is not material.

The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

MARKS, J.

Appellant filed this petition in the court below seeking a peremptory writ of mandate to compel respondent to issue a permit or lease to prospect for oil and gas under the provisions of an act of the Legislature approved May 25, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 404), on certain tide, overflowed, or submerged lands in the city of Huntington Beach, Cal. For brevity we will hereafter refer to this act as the Leasing Act. In each of the briefs originally filed all of the respective counsel agreed that the sole question to be determined upon this appeal was whether or not respondent was justified in refusing to issue the permit under that provision of section 4 of the Leasing Act which is as follows: "Provided further, however, that in no case shall permits or leases be granted covering tide, overflowed or submerged lands fronting on an incorporated city, or for a distance of one mile on either side thereof." It was also agreed that appellant had taken all of the steps necessary leading up to the granting of the permit or lease. At the argument, and now in supplemental briefs filed, it is urged that the provision of the Leasing Act which we have quoted is unconstitutional.

The city of Huntington Beach is a municipal corporation of the sixth class in Orange county, Cal. Its westerly boundary line is three miles out in the ocean from the coast line and corresponds with the westerly boundary line of the state of California. Const. of California, art. 21. The property upon which appellant seeks a lease is rectangular in shape, having a width of thirteen hundred and twenty feet and a length of thirty-three hundred feet. It extends from the line of mean high tide along the coast line, southwesterly for its length into the ocean. Its northwesterly line is approximately sixty-eight hundred and eight feet southeasterly from the northwestern city limits. A municipal pleasure pier of the city of Huntington Beach is constructed oceanward from the land at a point approximately thirty-eight hundred and ninety feet southeasterly from the southeasterly line of the location claimed by appellant. The business and residential portion of the city extends shoreward from the pier and centers on Main street, which ends at the foot of the pier. The land to the shoreward of appellant's location is occupied exclusively by oil wells and oil well rigs, machinery, and equipment. It was formerly fairly well covered with dwellings which were removed to make way for drilling operations. The dwellings now commence above the shore line a short distance southwesterly from the Carr location.

The proviso of the Leasing Act which we must construe divides itself into two portions, the first of which provides in effect that no permits or leases shall be granted by the state covering tidelands, overflowed lands, or submerged lands fronting on an incorporated city; and, the second, that no permits or leases shall be granted covering such lands for a distance of one mile on either side of such city. The second portion of the proviso has been construed in the case of Joyner v. Kingsbury, 97 Cal. App. 17, 275 P. 255. We will, therefore, not consider it here except in so far as may be necessary to determine the public policy of this state as declared by the Legislature in the Leasing Act and acts amendatory thereof.

[1-3] Tidelands are generally defined as those over which the neap or ordinary tide regularly ebbs and flows. Submerged land, as the term was used in the Leasing Act before the amendment thereof in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 944), and as applied to this case, must be held to mean that part of the ocean bed not uncovered by the tides. Overflowed lands, if there can be any such in connection with the ocean, must be said to be that portion of the shore line and sand bars which are not uncovered by the neap or ordinary tides, but which appear above the water during the spring tides, which occur twice each month, or during the high spring tides which happen during the equinoxes. Whether or not any of the property involved here properly can be denominated as overflowed lands seems unimportant in this case, and we will assume that it was composed of tidelands, and submerged lands only.

[4] Primarily it is the duty and function of the Legislature to declare the public policy of the state, and it may do so within the limitations provided by the Constitution, and the principles underlying and recognized by the Constitution and laws. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 P. 919, 10 P. 674; Southern Pacific Co. v. Stibbens, 103 Cal. App. 664, 285 P. 374; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 71 Cal. App. 492, 236 P. 210. Therefore we must look to the provisions of the Leasing Act itself to determine the public policy of the state in regard to the drilling of oil wells along the beach fronting the shore line of an incorporated city.

In a great majority of municipalities having an ocean frontage the line of mean high tide forms their ocean boundaries. It was stated in the argument of this case that the city of Huntington Beach is the only municipality in California with boundaries extending over the bed of the ocean. While this statement was not denied we have not verified it. If it be true, the case before us presents the only instance in California in which a similar question could be presented.

In 1921 the Legislature passed the Leasing Act which we are considering. By its terms all minerals in the public domain were reserved to the state. It contained the proviso which we have quoted, and because of the tidewater boundary line of the great majority of our coastal cities this proviso discloses the trend of the legislative mind towards the reservation of municipal beaches free from mining operation for the enjoyment and recreation of the people of the state. In 1923 (St. 1923, p. 593) the act was amended by the Legislature which attempted to give the surveyor general a discretion in granting permits or leases which would have further restricted drilling operations on the coastal tide and submerged lands. A portion of this amendment was declared unconstitutional in the case of Boone v. Kingsbury, 206 Cal. 148, 273 P. 797, because its provisions were not contained in the title of the act or of the amendatory act. Its passage, however, shows an intention on the part of the Legislature to place additional restrictions upon drilling for oil on tide or submerged lands. In 1929 the Legislature again amended the Leasing Act and added three new sections to it which prohibited the receiving of any application for a permit or lease after September 1, 1929, and the issuing of any such permit or lease after such date, except that "nothing contained in this section shall be deemed or construed with reference to the holder of a valid, uncanceled and unforfeited prospecting permit granted upon an application filed in full accordance and compliance with the provisions of this act on or prior to January 17, 1929." St. 1929, p. 945. These enactments show the legislative mind progressed from the intention to limit the drilling of oil wells on tide and submerged lands fronting on coastal cities in 1921 to the determination to declare a public policy which would prevent the removal of all hydrocarbons from such lands along the entire coast of the state when the right so to do had not already accrued.

[5-10] The word "front" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as "The beginning, * * * land which faces or abuts on a piece of water." The same authority defines "fronting": "To oppose face to face, to oppose directly." "Fronting" is defined as "adjoining, touching. Phrases: fronting, adjoining or abutting on." 27 Corp. Jur. 910. Property described in a mortgage as having a certain front to a river has been held to have a riparian estate bordering upon the river. La Branch's Heirs v. Montegut, 47 La. Ann. 674, 17 So. 247. The words "fronting" and "adjoining" have been held synonymous. Meier v. City of St. Louis, 180 Mo. 391, 79 S. W. 955. The phrase referring to lots "fronting upon a street" means the lots touching the boundary line of the street. Flynn v. Chiappari, 191 Cal. 139, 215 P. 682.

Applying these definitions to the phrase under consideration where the Legislature referred to the "tide, overflowed or submerged lands fronting on an incorporated city," we conclude that it meant to refer to the line where these lands touch the uplands of the city. We find the uplands of the city touched first by the tidelands. The tidelands are defined on the upland side by the line of the neap or ordinary high tides, and on the ocean side by the line of the same low tides. Omitting from consideration, as unnecessary, overflowed lands, we have next adjoining the tidelands oceanward the submerged lands that are not uncovered by the tides. The westward boundary of the uplands of the city is the line of neap or ordinary high tides, and the shoreward boundary of the submerged land is the line of the same low tides. We therefore have the tidelands "fronting on" (touching) the incorporated city at the line of the neap or ordinary high tides, and the submerged lands "fronting on" (touching) the incorporated city at the line of the neap or ordinary low tides. We believe that any other construction placed upon this language would do violence to the intention of the Legislature as expressed in the Leasing Act and would be contrary to the public policy which it announced in its legislative enactments. It must be borne in mind that the Legislature did not provide that the permits or leases should be granted covering tide or submerged lands fronting on the exterior boundaries of an incorporated city. To adopt the construction of the act urged by appellant we would have to read these words into it. He contends that the permits may be granted on tide, overflowed, or submerged lands within the city limits and not in an area one mile wide and three miles long outside of such limits. The effect in this case of such an interpretation of the Leasing Act would be to prohibit the leasing of the tide, overflowed, or submerged lands one mile in width lying along and adjoining and outside of the northerly and southerly city limits of Huntington Beach, and permit the leasing of such lands on both sides thereof. We do not believe that such a construction is warranted by the language of the Leasing Act, nor is it in accord with the intent and purpose of the Legislature in passing it.

If the theory of appellant were adopted, there would be no tidelands in Huntington Beach to which the terms of the Leasing Act would be applicable, as the city limits extend three miles into the ocean. Tidelands are made such by the water of the ocean flowing over them. Submerged lands are made such by the water standing over them. Their lines of meeting with the shore make their points of contact with the city. Under the theory of appellant the use of the term "tidelands" would be meaningless, useless, and without application in this case.

"It is the well-settled rule of law in this state that the courts will construe a statute so as to give it full force and effect as far as is possible so that it may stand in its entirety. Kydd v. San Francisco, 37 Cal. App. 598, 174 P. 88; Hunt v. Manning, 24 Cal. App. 44, 140 P. 39. If the language will reasonably permit, a construction will be given statutes which will sustain and render them valid and operative rather than defeat them. Section 3541, Civ. Code; Glassell Development Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 191 Cal. 375, 28 A. L. R. 1427, 216 P. 1012; Cuthbert v. Woodman, 185 Cal. 43, 195 P. 673." Chilson v. Jerome, 102 Cal. App. 635, 283 P. 862, 864. It happens that the tidelands are within the exterior boundaries of the city of Huntington Beach, but the fact remains that they are there. It is our duty to give effect to all the provisions of the Leasing Act, and, if we can do so without doing violence to its clear language, we must carry out and give effect to the intention of the Legislature in passing it. We believe that the Legislature intended to have the Leasing Act apply to all cities alike, and that when it used the term "tidelands" in the act, it referred to all such tidelands whether inside or outside of the exterior boundaries of the city, and in using the phrase "fronting on an incorporated city" it referred to the line where these tidelands touched the balance of the incorporated city whether inside or at the outside of the exterior corporate boundaries thereof. The same may be said of its use of the term "submerged lands" in this act.

The last phrase of the proviso we have been considering, namely, "or for a distance of one mile on either side thereof," has been construed in the case of Joyner v. Kingsbury, supra. The facts in the Joyner Case are identical with those of the instant case, except the dates of filings and the description of the property which lies thirty-nine hundred and sixty feet northwesterly from the Carr location. An application to have that case heard in the Supreme Court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal was denied by the Supreme Court on April 25, 1929. We are aware of the rule announced by the Supreme Court that the denial of a petition for hearing by it does not approve the rules of law announced by the District Court of Appeal in its decision, but we do feel that such action by the Supreme Court should be construed by us as an approval of the ultimate decision of the District Court of Appeal in that case. In view of the identically similar facts and questions of law presented for decision in the two cases, and the ruling of the Supreme Court on the petition for hearing in the Joyner Case, we believe that case should be followed by us in the instant case.

[11-13] During the oral arguments of this case appellant urged that the proviso in question is unconstitutional and void, first, because its subject-matter is not embraced within the title to the act, and, second, because it is legislation applying to a special class and clearly discriminatory. We cannot agree with either of these contentions. The following authorities support our conclusions as to the first contention: Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 P. 251; Ex parte Hallawell, 155 Cal. 112, 99 P. 490; People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 156 P. 451. It is too well-settled law to need the citation of authorities that an act is considered general in its effect if it applies to all cities, counties, or persons within a well-defined class. The proviso in question applies to all cities fronting on tide, overflowed, or submerged lands whether such lands be in the ocean or in the lakes or rivers of the state. Because but few of such cities now have proven oil fields within or near their exterior boundaries cannot be controlling in this case. Neither counsel nor this court can prophesy where or when the drill will find productive oil sands in fields unknown at the present time. Twenty years ago no one had the temerity to drill for oil in the now proven fields of Huntington Beach.

LOS ANGELES SURETY CO., Inc., v. MUNICIPAL COURT OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 7495.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1931.

1. Certiorari ⚷5(2).

Certiorari did not lie when matter complained of could be corrected on appeal in mandamus proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

2. Mandamus ⚷187(2).

Appeal lies from judgment in mandamus proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Application by Los Angeles Surety Company, Inc., for certiorari to review orders of the Municipal Court of the City of Los Angeles, refusing to vacate order forfeiting bail, and of the Superior Court of Los Angeles county denying writ of mandate, and from an order sustaining demurrer to a petition for writ of audita querela.

Proceeding dismissed.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents Superior Court and Edward T. Bishop.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

By this proceeding it is sought to review an order of the municipal court refusing to vacate an order forfeiting bail; and also an order of the superior court denying a peremptory writ of mandate directed to the municipal court commanding it to vacate the order forfeiting bail and lastly to review an order sustaining a demurrer to a petition for the writ of audita querela.

The facts essential to a disposition of the proceeding are as follows: The petitioner gave bond for the appearance of Earl Wilson, who had been charged with a violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), and whose trial was set for November 1, 1929. The defendant failed to appear for trial, and his bail was declared forfeited. The petitioner thereupon instituted a search to determine his whereabouts, and, if possible, to return him to the court for trial. It discovered that on November 21 of the same year Wilson had committed suicide in Port of Spain, Trinidad, British West Indies. Thereupon and within ninety days of the time bail was ordered forfeited, the petitioner made a motion in the municipal court to vacate the forfeiture on the grounds that the disappearance of the defendant was without its connivance or knowledge; that upon ascertaining his default it instituted a search to locate his whereabouts; and that the investigation had disclosed his self-destruction at the time and place already mentioned. The court found these to be the facts, but declared that there was no evidence to satisfactorily or at all excuse the neglect of the defendant to appear for trial and denied the motion. Thereafter petitioner filed a proceeding in mandate in the respondent superior court in which it sought an order commanding the municipal court to vacate the order forfeiting bail. The alternative writ was issued. The respondents appeared by demurrer and after a hearing thereon the demurrer was sustained, and the petition was denied. Subsequently the petitioner also filed in the superior court a petition in which it attempted to secure what it denominated a writ of audita querela.

The contention of the petitioner is that the death of the defendant and the resulting impossibility of complying with the provisions of section 1305 of the Penal Code excuses the bail. That section provides that, if within ninety days after entry in the minutes of the order declaring the bail forfeited the defendant and his bail appear and satisfactorily excuse the neglect of the defendant and show that his disappearance was not with the connivance of the bail, the court may direct the forfeiture of the undertaking to be set aside.

[1, 2] It is unnecessary for us at this time to pass upon the question thus tendered, for the reason that we have concluded that the writ of review is not a proper remedy or proceeding in the present instance. From a judgment in the proceeding in mandamus the petitioner has an appeal by means of which it is possible for it to present the question fully and thoroughly. In Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 65 P. 468, 469, we read: "An appeal lies from the judgment of the superior court denying the writ of mandate. Code Civ. Proc. § 939; Palache v. Hunt, 64 Cal. 474, 2 P. 245; People v. Perry, 79 Cal. 109, 21 P. 423; Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 559, 26 P. 366. This furnishes a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to the petitioner in the ordinary course of law. Santa Cruz, etc., Co. v. Supervisors, 62 Cal. 40." It is, of course, fundamental that certiorari will not lie when the matter complained of can be corrected on appeal. Baird v. Justice's Court, 11 Cal. App. 439, 105 P. 259; Southern Cal. Ry. Co. v. Superior Court, 127 Cal. 417, 59 P. 789.

Proceeding dismissed.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is a proceeding in certiorari brought for purposes identical with those in Los Angeles Surety Co. v. Municipal Court (Cal. App.) 295 P. 591, and upon the same state of facts except that in the present case the bond was given upon an appeal from a judgment punishing the defendant for another and different offense against the provisions of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79). After affirmance of that judgment the defendant failed to present himself in satisfaction thereof and the bail was declared forfeited. Like proceedings were had as in the companion case just mentioned, and for the reasons stated in the opinion this day rendered in that case we must make like disposition of the writ heretofore issued.

Writ dismissed.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1931.

1. Homicide 🔑166(5).

Admitting in evidence, for purpose of showing motive for murder, copy of indictment in liquor prosecution in which prosecution deceased turned state's evidence, held not error.

2. Criminal law 🔑400(2).

Copy of indictment for violating prohibition law held admissible as corroborative evidence in prosecution for murder of deceased who had turned state's evidence.

> Facts disclosed that the deceased and another had discussed with defendant, before the automobile ride on which deceased was killed, the prosecution for violating the federal prohibition laws and deceased's relation to it, and the copy of the indictment was merely corroborative evidence showing the nature of the case which had been discussed.

3. Criminal law 🔑400(2).

In murder prosecution, admission of minutes of federal court showing that deceased, who had turned state's evidence, had been sworn as witness in liquor prosecution, held not error.

NOURSE, P. J.

Defendant was charged with the crime of murder. He was tried before a jury which returned a verdict of guilty and he was sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

There is not, and could not well be, upon the record before us, any claim that the evidence adduced at the trial was insufficient to support the verdict, and it will, therefore, be unnecessary to state the evidence at length.

The deceased, one M. G. Sturtevant, was jointly indicted with a number of others for conspiracy to violate the federal prohibition laws in the operation of a still and in the manufacture of illicit liquor. Pending the trial of these defendants in the federal court at San Francisco the deceased turned state's evidence and voluntarily testified against his codefendants. While that trial was pending the deceased and a Mrs. Berri met the appellant in San Francisco and discussed the trial, the deceased's connection with it as a witness, and the fact that Mrs. Berri was unable to appear as a witness in that case because her husband was one of the defendants on trial, but that she had information valuable to the government which she might disclose. Two days later, at the invitation of the appellant, the deceased drove Mrs. Berri and appellant to a secluded spot on Tomales bay in Marin county on the pretense that appellant would show the deceased where illicit liquor could be hi-jacked, and upon appellant's promise that he would engage with the deceased to hi-jack liquor which was to be landed at Tomales bay by a group of bootleggers who employed appellant to protect the landings.

On the trip to Tomales bay the deceased carried a 38-caliber S. & W. pistol. The gun was lying on the floor of the car and was a topic of conversation on the way over. When the party was ready to return to San Francisco with the deceased in the driver's seat with both hands on the steering wheel, Mrs. Berri seated beside him and appellant standing on the left side of the car beside the driver, the appellant suddenly shot the deceased in the chest, and as Mrs. Berri jumped from the car he shot her. She escaped with a severe wound, but the appellant continued shooting at the deceased. When he found that his victim was dead he dragged him into an old shack, took the car of the deceased and drove to his apartment in San Francisco. When the body of the deceased was found it was badly mutilated in addition to the wounds caused by gunfire.

[1, 2] The first point raised is that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence a copy of the indictment in the federal court. The offer was made for the purpose of showing motive. Evidence had theretofore been received that the appellant had boasted that he was a gunman for a "gang" of liquor smugglers, and that, on the trip to Tomales bay, he put on a pair of dark glasses and requested the deceased to drive over a back road because "he didn't want any of his gang to recognize him." It was the theory of the state that the appellant, being a member of a gang of rumrunners, racketeers, and hi-jackers, was interested in closing the lips of another member of such a gang who was about to give damaging testimony against his associates. We are not now concerned with the weight of the evidence to prove this theory—the single question is whether it was material and competent. Upon this point the authorities support the respondent and appellant has cited none to the contrary.

The general rule applicable is stated in People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 15, 87 P. 1016, 1017, where the Supreme Court say: "Evidence having a direct tendency, in view of the surrounding circumstances, to prove motive on the part of a person for a crime, and thus to solve a doubt 'either as to identity of the slayer, the degree of the offense, the insanity of the defendant, or to the justification or excusability of his act,' is admissible against a defendant, however discreditably it may reflect on him, and even where it may show him guilty of other crimes. See People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 P. 43, 46, 50; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 363, 75 P. 1093." In People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 59, 130 P. 1042, it was held that, for the purpose of showing motive, it was competent for the state to show that the defendant was a member of a labor union on strike against a manufacturing corporation of which the deceased was a nonunion employee. To the same effect is People v. Grow, 16 Cal. App. 147, 149, 116 P. 369, and in People v. Jo Fong, 59 Cal. App. 259, 271, 272, 210 P. 548, it was held that the state could show that deceased was a member of a Chinese tong and that the defendants were members of a rival tong.

The question of the competency of the evidence presents no difficulties. The copy of the indictment was the best evidence of the charge pending in the federal court. As to the materiality of the evidence, it having been shown that the deceased and Mrs. Berri discussed the federal prosecution with appellant before the fatal ride, and had discussed the character of the case and the deceased's relations to it, the copy of the indictment was merely corroborative evidence showing the nature of the case which was under discussion.

[3, 4] The second and third objections go to the admission of the minutes of the federal court showing that deceased had been sworn as a witness in the first trial and to a portion of his testimony showing the damaging admissions he made against his associates. In both instances the evidence offered was the best evidence which could have been had for the purpose, while its materiality to the issues on trial is determined by what we have said regarding the indictment.

[5] The suggestion is made that the trial court erred in refusing appellant's request to read the cross-examination of the deceased in the federal court, but it is merely a suggestion. We have frequently said that it is incumbent upon the appellant to show both error and prejudice. Such has been the rule since People v. Brotherton, 47 Cal. 388, 404, and more particularly since the enactment of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

[6] Finally it is argued that the trial court erred in sustaining the objection to a question asked by appellant of the witness Berri on cross-examination. This witness was the same woman who accompanied appellant and the deceased on the fatal ride. Her testimony was clear and convincing. The appellant admitted the shooting and set up a wholly improbable story of self-defense. Presumably for the purpose of impeaching the witness she was asked if she had been on terms of illicit intimacy with the deceased. The objection was properly sustained. The witness had already testified that the deceased was one of her best friends, and that, as to the appellant, she had "a feeling of loathsomeness toward him for the cowardly way in which he murdered Mr. Sturtevant and tried to murder me." There could have been no doubt in the minds of the jury as to the interest or feeling of the witness, and the question objected to was designed merely to degrade her. On this point the case is in line with People v. Smith, 61 Cal. App. 259, 266, 214 P. 468.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

PACIFIC STATES FINANCE CORPORATION v. FREITAS et al.

Civ. 21.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, California.
Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Automobiles 🔑363.

Statute giving garage keeper lien, must be strictly construed in ascertaining persons to whom, and subject-matter to which, it applies (Civ. Code, § 3051).

2. Automobiles 🔑363.

Statute giving garage keeper lien, in remedial aspect, must be liberally construed in furtherance of beneficial purpose intended (Civ. Code, § 3051).

3. Automobiles 🔑376.

One claiming garage keeper's lien on automobile need not have acted at request of legal owner, but lien may attach because of debt created by conditional buyer in lawful possession (Civ. Code, § 3051).

4. Automobiles 🔑376.

Where debt was created by conditional buyer, garage keeper's lien claim was limited by statute (Civ. Code, §§ 3051, 3051a).

> Civ. Code, § 3051a (St. 1923, p. 695), limits lien given by section 3051 to $100 under any contract for work, services, care, or safe-keeping made at request of one not holder of legal title, unless such holder shall have had actual written notice from lienor.

5. Sales 🔑467.

Conditional buyer in possession of automobile could use automobile as such property is customarily used, and was under duty to give automobile proper protection.

6. Automobiles 🔑381.

Statute declaring voluntary restoration of property to owner extinguishes lien did not apply where automobile was stored in garage and removed daily by conditional buyer (Civ. Code, § 2913, and § 3051).

7. Automobiles 🔑381.

Under statute giving garage keeper lien, dependent on possession, lien for storage charges, repairs, and supplies continued as against conditional seller, notwithstanding conditional buyer in possession withdrew automobile daily (Civ. Code, § 3051).

8. Automobiles 🔑383.

Clause in conditional sales contract that buyer should not permit lien to attach to automobile did not affect garage keeper's lien for storage charges, repairs, and supplies (Civ. Code, § 3051).

9. Automobiles 🔑379.

Charge for supplies garage keeper furnished conditional buyer of automobile before statutory amendment authorizing lien for supplies was merely personal claim against buyer (Civ. Code, § 3051, as amended by St. 1877–78, p. 89, St. 1911, p. 887, and St. 1929, p. 1923).

10. Sales 🔑472(1).

Conditional seller of automobile must assert right of recaption in subordination to subsisting liens created by statute (Civ. Code, §§ 3051, 3051a).

Appeal from Justices' Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank W. Dunn, Justice.

Action by the Pacific States Finance Corporation against Tony Freitas, doing business under the firm name and style of "Motor Arms Garage," and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals.

Reversed and remanded.

Edgar C. Levey and Marvin E. Lewis, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John P. Beale, of San Francisco, for respondent.

JOHNSON, P. J.

This case presents the legal question of the right of a garage keeper to assert a lien, under section 3051 (limited somewhat by section 3051a) of the Civil Code, for accumulated compensation for storage of an automobile and for repairs made and supplies furnished therefor, when the owner or person having control of the automobile is allowed to remove it day by day for use in his own pursuits.

The defendant Freitas is the proprietor of a garage known as the Motor Arms Garage in San Francisco.

In the month of January, 1929, the defendant Bonilla, who was then in lawful possession of a De Soto sedan automobile under a contract of conditional sale, made an arrangement with Freitas whereby, in view of certain financial exigencies of Bonilla, Freitas agreed to house the car on credit until December 1, 1929, at the rate of $7 per month. During that period of time the car was in daily use by Bonilla, being returned to the garage at night and there kept until again wanted by Bonilla. On December 1st, in addition to the storage charge for approximately eleven months, there appear to have been unpaid bills amounting to $40.28 for labor performed and for gasoline and other supplies furnished for the De Soto sedan. Bonilla being still unable to pay his indebtedness, Freitas thereupon notified Bonilla that the car could not be again taken from the garage until the bills were paid, and that the charge for storage from December 1st would be 50 cents per day. No payment was made by Bonilla, and storage charges continued to accumulate until plaintiff instituted this action of claim and delivery, and caused the sheriff to take the car on February 8, 1930, from the possession of Freitas.

Plaintiff's cause of action is based on a contract in the form of a conditional sale agreement made on September 13, 1929, between Bonilla and San Francisco Sales Company, and assigned by the latter to the plaintiff. The San Francisco Sales Company seems not to have been the seller of the car to Bonilla, but by the terms of the contract Bonilla promised to make certain monthly payments; and, in case of default, the creditor was authorized to take possession of the car and sell it at public or private sale. Bonilla having made default, plaintiff acted under the authority so conferred.

Before the action was begun, plaintiff, insisting that the car had been allowed to be taken from the garage as late as December 24, 1929, tendered to Freitas $20 as the amount payable for storage from that date to the time of tender, January 31, 1930, and demanded delivery of the car. The tender having been refused, this action followed.

In his answer to the complaint Freitas asserted a lien for all the compensation owing to him by Bonilla for storage, repairs, and supplies.

In this connection it may be well to note that charges for several months had already accrued before the contract under which plaintiff claims was made on September 13, 1929, and that in that contract Bonilla undertook to house and protect the car against the elements. At the same time the contract provides that Bonilla should not create or permit any lien for storage, repairs or otherwise.

Plaintiff's contention on this appeal, and made also at the trial, is that a garage keeper's lien for accrued charges is utterly lost, if he voluntarily parts with physical possession, even though the car is to be returned after a brief interval.

The defendant Freitas contends, on the other hand, that temporary release of the car to Bonilla for daily use did not terminate the bailment or invalidate his statutory lien. The judgment of the trial court was based on acceptance of the view urged by plaintiff. Up to December 1, 1929, Bonilla was permitted to have the car by day; but Freitas contends that from that time on the car was continuously in his actual possession. While there is a conflict of evidence on this point, the trial court apparently accepted the testimony of Freitas, for, though the court, adopting plaintiff's view of the law, awarded possession of the car to plaintiff, the judgment made provision for payment to Freitas of $35, which represented the storage charge from December 1, 1929, to the time of the sheriff's seizure.

The question before us, then, is whether Freitas had a lien also for charges from January to December, which was superior to the interest of plaintiff.

An automobile is a horseless carriage; and a garage is the modern adaptation with some refinements, of the almost obsolete livery stable. The proprietors in both cases house and care for common instruments of transportation; and, in a sense, may be said to be cousins german. The ubiquitous use of automobiles necessitates a multiplicity of housing places; and, quite generally, the safeguards securing payment of compensation to keepers of livery stables have been extended to garage proprietors.

Section 3051 of the Civil Code as amended in 1878 (St. 1877–78, p. 89), provided for a lien on behalf of livery stable keepers; and in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 887), there was appended to the section the clause reading: "And keepers of garages for automobiles shall have a lien, dependent on possession, for their compensation in caring for and safekeeping such automobiles." Then by the amendment which became effective August 14, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 1923), the lien was broadened to secure also charges "for making repairs and performing any labor upon or furnishing supplies or materials for such automobiles."

[1, 2] Both in the case of proprietors of livery stables and of garages, the lien is declared to be "dependent on possession." While the statute, being in derogation of the common law, is to be strictly construed in ascertaining and determining the persons to whom, and the subject-matter to which, it is applicable, yet at the same time in its remedial aspect the enactment is to be liberally construed in furtherance of the beneficial purpose intended. Ogle v. King & Goodheart, 2 City Ct. R. (N. Y.) 83; Johanns v. Ficke, 224 N. Y. 513, 518, 121 N. E. 358.

The statute expresses a legislative intention to provide a remedy which did not inhere in the common law; and, where such statutes have been adopted in relation to stable keepers, they have been construed in the light of business usages and the customs of the people. Both in the case of draft horses and motor vehicles, temporary withdrawals from their housing places are characteristic of the stabling and garage business; and, if the continuance of the lien must be held to be dependent on actual uninterrupted physical possession, the heart is cut out of the statute.

As regards proprietors of stables, the rule has not been that uninterrupted possession must be maintained; and the court in State v. Shevlin, 23 Mo. App. 598, gives a construction to such statutes which has become almost universal. The court there says at pages 601, 602:

"* * * In the view we take of the meaning of the statute, the lien thereby conferred is not dependent upon an actual physical custody by the stable keeper at every moment of time. We think that the lien conferred by the statute subsists, even as against third persons without notice, while the horse is boarded in the stable of the lienor, although it may, with his consent, be used during the day by the owner in his business. To hold otherwise would be to construe the statute so as to deprive stable keepers of the protection which the legislature probably intended to give them; since, as is well known, in most cases where horses are boarded, the owner is allowed to use them in his business during the day. This being so, the statute could not have intended to allow the owner to destroy the lien of the stable keeper while having the possession of the horse on the street during the day, by selling or mortgaging it to a stranger without notice of the lien. On the contrary, we are of opinion that every person is bound so far to take notice of the statute, that, when he is about to become the purchaser or mortgagee of a horse found upon the street in the custody of its owner, it is incumbent upon him to make inquiry as to the place where the horse is boarded, and whether anything is due for its keeping. There is no greater hardship in this rule than there is in the general rule in respect of purchases of personal property, that the purchaser gets no better title than the seller has."

So also in Walls v. Long, 2 Ind. App. 202, page 206, 28 N. E. 101, 103, a like view is expressed in the following language:

"* * * It was a necessary part of that arrangement that the horses should be delivered to the defendant as they were needed, and this is part of the ordinary course of business of livery stable keepers, and therefore must be consistent with the right of lien that belongs to the occupation. * * * When it is considered to what extent livery stables are made use of by the public as places most suitable, in many respects and instances, for the boarding of horses in daily use, it is difficult to believe that the legislative intent or meaning is that which is contended for by the appellant's counsel. If the keepers of such stables were intended to be benefited by the statute only where the animal being fed and cared for was not taken from the stable and used by the owner or his family at all, the benefits both to the keepers and owners would be slight; for few persons would consider such an arrangement as either convenient or economical. It is obvious in our opinion, that such is not the meaning of the statute. The appellees had no knowledge or reason to believe or suspect that the horse would not be returned as usual to the stable when last taken out. While the horse was being boarded by the appellees, the appellant was at their stable, and expressed himself as pleased with the care the horse was receiving. The appellees were not required to announce, on each occasion that the horse went out, that they had a lien upon him, and that therefore he must be returned. There was nothing in the contract between them and Beal inconsistent with the existence of the lien, nor had it been terminated by the payment of the board. There is nothing in the record from which it can be inferred that the appellees intended to waive their lien, nor does the evidence furnish any ground whatever for the belief, if it exists, by either the appellant or Beal, that there was any such intent."

See, also, Young v. Kimball, 23 Pa. 193; Goldsmith v. Gensenleiter, 14 Pa. Dist. R. 516, and Id., 28 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 399; Caldwell v. Tutt, 10 Lea (78 Tenn.) 258, 43 Am. Rep. 307; Welsh v. Barnes, 5 N. Dak. 277, 278–279, 65 N. W. 675; McGlasson v. Hennessy, 161 Ill. App. 387; Heaps v. Jones, 23 Mo. App. 617; 38 C. J. 81.

In New York the Court of Appeals in Johanns v. Ficke, 224 N. Y. 513, 121 N. E. 358, had occasion to construe section 183 of the Lien Law of that state giving to stable keepers a lien "dependent on possession" for the sum due for animals kept and vehicles stored pursuant to any express or implied agreement made with the owners. In this case the owner of certain horses obtained a year's credit from plaintiff on accrued charges of $860 for boarding and keeping the animals; and additional charges incurred later increased the indebtedness in favor of plaintiff to $1,056.82. With this amount owing, the horses were removed to defendant's stable without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. In the action brought by plaintiff to enforce his lien, the defendant asserted a lien under the statute and also under a chattel mortgage. The plaintiff was held entitled to priority; and, upon the subject of maintenance of physical possession, the court, after quoting the statute, spoke thus (pages 518–520 of 224 N. Y., 121 N. E. 358, 360):

"* * * It expresses the legislative intention to give to a livery stable keeper the lien which the common law did not give. In case the lien does not arise for the reason (the other statutory essentials to the lien existing) that the possession of the livery stable keeper is not actual, continuous, and exclusive, the statute is nugatory as to the stable keeper. The temporary absences of horses and vehicles from the livery stable where there are boarded or kept is a characteristic and condition inseparable from and integral to the business. Temporary removals of the property are inherent in it. It was within the legislative comprehension that unbroken actual possession of the property by the stable keeper was impracticable. To enact that a livery stable keeper shall have the lien, provided he does not part with the actual and exclusive possession, which he gets, generally speaking, to enable the owner to take and use the property away from the stable and his control, is unreasonable and of slight effect. * * *

"Unless the language compels, we will not regard a statute as purposeless. It is always presumed, in regard to a statute, that a result reasonable and enforceable was intended by it. Travelers' Insurance Co. v. Padula Co., Inc., 224 N. Y. 397, 121 N. E. 348. The courts must, under the proper rules of construction, ascertain the intended result and enforce it if expressed. The language of the statute reveals that the word 'lien' within it was intended to have its common-law meaning, namely, the right to detain the property until the charges, in which the lien originated, are satisfied. The right to retain or detain property is exercisable only as to that possessed. The property may, however, be possessed either actually or constructively. Its owner cannot destroy the possession of the lienholder by force, trick, or fraud or against his will. Bigelow v. Heaton, 4 Denio, 496. He cannot destroy the possession, or the lien, as between himself and the lienholder, at least, by receiving the property under the agreement to use it in a certain way for a special purpose, and thereupon return it, provided the agreement be reasonably consistent with the existence of the bailment, and there is not a voluntary relinquishment of the lien."

While in New York the rights of a stable keeper are fixed by section 183 of the Lien Law, those of a garage proprietor are governed by section 184, which, as amended in 1926 (Laws 1926, c. 373), gives the garage keeper a lien for storage, repair, and supplies, with the right to detain the automobile as security "at any time it may be lawfully in his possession until such sum is paid," subject, however, to the exception, added in 1926, that, if after thirty days from the accrual of the lien the lienor allows the car to go "out of his actual possession," the lien shall become void as against conditional sales agreements and mortgages executed prior to the accrual of the lien, notwithstanding subsequent repossession by the lienor.

With the judicial construction of section 183 in mind, it is instructive to ascertain how far a like rule has been applied to section 184. There are cases dealing with this section both before and after the amendment of 1926.

In Rapp v. Mabbett Motor Car Co., 201 App. Div. 283, 194 N. Y. S. 200, 203, decided in 1922, it was said in reference to sections 183 and 184 that they had respectively changed the common law in regard to livery stable keepers and garage keepers, and that "in both cases the temporary surrender of the chattel to the owner does not terminate the bailment or invalidate the lien."

This case was followed by Willys-Overland v. Prudman Automobile Co. (Mun. Ct. N. Y.) 196 N. Y. S. 487, decided also before the addition of the exception. This latter action was brought by plaintiff as mortgagee under a purchase-money mortgage against the defendant then in possession of an automobile stored by it for the owner, and held for payment of charges for service and supplies. The automobile, while being housed by defendant, had been surrendered from time to time to the owner for his use; and the plaintiff contended that its rights under its chattel mortgage were paramount to the lien of the defendant, and also that defendant's lien had been destroyed by interruption of its possession. The trial court, besides denying priority to the mortgagee, held that the garage keeper's lien had not been forfeited; and upon this point said (page 488 of 196 N. Y. S.):

"* * * This latter contention I do not think is sound, and is authoritatively disposed of by the case of Johanns v. Ficke, 224 N. Y. 515, 519, 121 N. E. 358, 360, where the Court of Appeals, construing an identical section (183) under the Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) applicable to horses and horse-drawn vehicles stored in a livery stable, said that:

"'It was within the legislative comprehension that unbroken actual possession of the property by the stable keeper was impracticable.'

"That case determined (224 N. Y. 521, 121 N. E. page 361) that the statute quoted was intended to protect livery stable keepers against the rule of the common law that interruptions of actual, continuous, and exclusive possession were inconsistent with the existence of a lien. I conclude, therefore, that the defendant did not lose his lien because he permitted the use of the car by Schiffler."

The foregoing New York decisions were quoted, and the rule therein declared was applied, in Re Carter (D. C.) 21 F.(2d) 587, where the question arose between a garage keeper and the creditors of a bankrupt.

So far as cases are affected by the amendment of 1926, the exception then added is held to limit the garage keeper's lien as against conditional vendors and mortgagees to charges which accrued during a period of thirty days prior to the last day on which the motor vehicle was taken from the garage keeper's actual possession with his consent. Smith v. Pierce Arrow Sales Corp., 224 App. Div. 769, 230 N. Y. S. 194; C. I. T. Corp. v. Schubert, 137 Misc. Rep. 514, 243 N. Y. S. 748; Kamaran v. Sidney Garage, 137 Misc. Rep. 744, 244 N. Y. S. 337.

We have not this exception in our statute, but section 3051a, adopted in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 695), limits the lien given by section 3051 to $100 under any contract for work, services, care, or safekeeping made at the request of one not the holder of the legal title, unless such holder, if known, shall have had actual written notice from the lienor, given either by personal service or registered letter. Hessel v. Pickwick Stages System, 100 Cal. App. 682, 280 P. 1016; Lindsay v. Kleiber Motor Truck Co. (Cal. App.) 294 P. 454.

[3] Under section 3051 it is not necessary that the lien claimant should have acted at the request of the legal owner; and a preferential lien may attach by reason of a debt created by one in lawful possession under a contract of conditional sale. Davenport v. Grundy Motol Sales Co., 28 Cal. App. 409, 152 P. 932; Goodman v. Anglo-California Trust Co., 62 Cal. App. 702, 217 P. 1078.

[4] In the present case Bonilla was a lawful possessor, but was not the holder of the legal title, and therefore the restriction of section 3051a puts a limitation on the lienor's claim as against plaintiff. The plaintiff urges, however, that no lien can be asserted against it for any charges up to the time when unbroken possession began; and in support of this contention relies on Goodman v. Anglo-California Trust Co., 62 Cal. App. 702, 217 P. 1078; Davis v. Young, 75 Cal. App. 359, 242 P. 743; and Covington v. Grant, 82 Cal. App. 749, 256 P. 213. These were all cases where, after an automobile had been repaired by a mechanic at the request of a conditional vendee and surrendered to him without payment, the automobile had, some weeks or months later, been brought back for other repairs, and the mechanic then sought to detain the automobile for the earlier, as well as the later, charges. It was held in the cases cited that under such circumstances no lien on account of the earlier repairs could be asserted against the conditional vendor. In each of those cases there had been a voluntary unconditional surrender after the first repairs were made, and the lien was in consequence lost.

The distinction between such cases and those of stable keepers and garage proprietors allowing periodic removal is concisely stated in the language of the court in Gould v. Hill, 43 Idaho, 93, 107, 251 P. 167, 171, where the court, speaking of an agister's statutory lien dependent upon possession, said: "As a general rule, a common-law or a statutory lien, dependent upon possession, is waived or lost by the lienholder voluntarily and unconditionally parting with possession or control of the property to which it attaches. However, the lien is not waived or destroyed where there is an intention to preserve the same, the lienholder only conditionally parting with possession."

[5] In the arrangement made between Bonilla and Freitas for Bonilla's accommodation while in financial straits, it is manifest that neither intended a termination of the bailment in the morning followed by a renewal at night, or a daily yielding of possession by Freitas on the mere individual credit of Bonilla. The arrangement between the two had been in existence several months before Bonilla entered into his contract with plaintiff's assignor on September 13, 1929; and those making, or later becoming interested in, such contract with Bonilla, may well have been put on inquiry as to where Bonilla's automobile was kept and upon what conditions, especially as the contract imposed on Bonilla the duty to protect the car against the elements. As a conditional vendee in possession, Bonilla had the right to use the car in the way in which such property is customarily used and for all reasonable purposes; and he was under duty to give the car proper protection and maintenance.

[6] In asserting its claim to superiority, plaintiff takes the position also that by parting with possession Freitas lost his lien by virtue of section 2913 of the Civil Code, declaring that "voluntary restoration of property to its owner" causes extinguishment of a lien dependent on possession. But since Bonilla, though in lawful possession, was not the legal owner, the section cited has no application to this case. Davis v. Young, 75 Cal. App. 359, 363, 242 P. 743.

[7] The evidence shows that there was at no time any unconditional relinquishment of possession or permanent withdrawal of the automobile from the place of keeping. The very nature of the bailment required temporary release, and it must be assumed that the statute was not enacted as a piece of futile legislation. The ways of the world and the usages of business were known to the legislators, and, except for any special limitations, all classes of lienors designated in section 3051 have the same rights and remedies. First Nat'l Bank v. Silva, 200 Cal. 494, 497, 254 P. 262. Hence, when the provision in favor of garage keepers was tacked on to section 3051 in the year 1911, it is reasonable to infer that there was no more intention to require absolutely uninterrupted possession of an automobile than, under the great weight of authority, had previously been required in the case of animals housed and cared for by stable keepers, who had had the protection of that section since 1878. We are therefore of the opinion that the garage keeper's lien upon the car did not become detached when the automobile was temporarily out of the garage in Bonilla's care. There had been an inchoate lien from the beginning of the bailment, and the indebtedness had matured before plaintiff's seizure of the car in the garage where actual physical possession was then being maintained by the proprietor. His lien (subject to the limitations of section 3051a) possessed at that time, as we believe, the same inviolability as if the actual possession had been continuously preserved.

[8] Nor do we think that an impairment of the lien results from the clause in plaintiff's contract that Bonilla should not permit any lien to attach for storage, repairs, or other cause. Such a provision was under review in Albemarle Supply Co. v. Hind & Co., L. R. [1928] 1 K. B. 307; and not only was it held that such uncommunicated limitation of authority did not affect the lien of a garage keeper making repairs on taxicabs for a conditional vendee, but also that the lien persisted even though the cabs went out each day to ply for hire. Speaking on this subject, Lord Justice Scrutton said (pages 317, 318):

"The plaintiffs' first line of attack on the lien claim was a clause in their hire-purchase agreement providing that 'the hirer shall not have or be deemed to have any authority to pledge the credit of the owners for repairs to the vehicle or to create a lien upon the same in respect of such repairs.' This Court in Green v. All Motors, Ld. (1917) 1 K. B. 625, has held that the mere knowledge by the repairer that there is a hire-purchase agreement without knowledge of its exact terms relating to the car which he repairs does not deprive him of his lien. The owner leaving the cab in the hands of a man who is entitled to use it gives him an implied authority to have it repaired with the resulting lien for repairs. Rowlatt J. had held in a previous case, and the judge below in the present case followed his decision, that a contractual limitation of authority not communicated to the repairer does not limit the implied authority derived from the hirer's being allowed to possess and use the car. I agree with this view; if a man is put in a position which holds him out as having a certain authority, people who act on that holding out are not affected by a secret limitation, of which they are ignorant, of the apparent authority. The owners can easily protect themselves by requiring information as to the garage where the cab is kept, and notifying the garage owner that the hirer has no power to create a lien for repairs. They will thus escape the lien, though they may not get their cab repaired.

"The plaintiffs next contended that any lien was lost because the cabs went out of the possession of the garage each day to ply for hire. The defendant proved an agreement with Botfield at a time when the lien existed, that the cabs should go out for hire each day on the terms that they should be returned to the garage each night, the lien continuing while the cabs were in possession of the garage. I do not think any plying for hire under this agreement prevented the lien, if any, from continuing, and in my view repair of a damaged cab, though it may be described as 'maintenance,' gave rise to a repairer's lien."

[9] The bill of charges presented by the defendant Freitas at the trial of the action amounted to $183.72; but it contained certain items for which a lien did not attach to the De Soto sedan automobile. Before Bonilla acquired that car in January, 1929, he had had another car which was stored with Freitas between November, 1928, and January, 1929, and, the storage charge for that car having been included in the bill presented by Freitas at the trial, his attorney thereupon disclaimed any right to a lien for those items. The bill presented included also charges for gasoline, oil, and other supplies furnished to Bonilla from November, 1928, to December, 1929. But no lien for such supplies was authorized under section 3051 before the amendment which took effect on August 14, 1929; and accordingly the charge for supplies previously furnished was merely a personal claim against Bonilla.

There are decisions in reference to a stableman's lien in which the common-law rule of continuous possession is applied with the utmost strictness; and reference to them is to be found in the annotation in 3 A. L. R. 664, appended to the case of Clarksburg Casket Co. v. Valley Undertaking Co., 81 W. Va. 212, 94 S. E. 549. The predominant view, however, has favored a more liberal and beneficial application of the law; and, in so far as garage keepers are concerned, the modern trend is toward an extension of the remedy so as to keep the lien alive and authorize detention for sums due, if the automobile of which possession has been relinquished comes at any time thereafter into the lawful possession of the lien claimant. Such is the statutory law in New York, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, and District of Columbia.

C. I. T. Corp. v. Schubert, 137 Misc. Rep. 514, 243 N. Y. S. 748; Frank v. Daily, 92 N.

J. Law, 118, 105 A. 9; Abeytia v. Gibbons Garage, 26 N. M. 622, 195 P. 515; Courts v. Clark, 84 Or. 179, 164 P. 714; Barrett v. Commercial Credit Co., 54 App. D. C. 249, 296 F. 996.

The statute in California does not go that far; but, in our opinion, the lien of a garage keeper upon an automobile is not destroyed because of his conditional relinquishment of the possession while the car is temporarily in use by the bailor.

[10] It is urged, however, upon the authority of Thourot v. Delahaye Import Co., 69 Misc. Rep. 351, 125 N. Y. S. 827, that, whatever the rule as to constructive possession may be between the garage proprietor and the bailor, actual continuous possession is essential when other interests, such as those of a mortgagee or conditional vendor, are affected. In our opinion, no such distinction is contemplated in our statutes. Section 3052 of the Civil Code prescribes the method of foreclosing liens acquired under section 3051, and, in relation to liens on automobiles, contains specific directions concerning service of notice of sale on both the legal and the registered owner, gives the legal owner a right of redemption on payment of the lien charges and costs, and, in case of sale, a right to any surplus remaining after satisfaction of the lien and the expenses of foreclosure. In First Nat'l Bank v. Silva, 200 Cal. 494, 254 P. 262, Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann, 177 Cal. 109, 169 P. 1033, L. R. A. 1918D, 118, and Kranzthor v. Faulkner Co., 43 Cal. App. 441, 185 P. 305, the rule is promulgated that every lien claimant under section 3051 (subject now to the limitation of section 3051a) has the same rights and remedies, and that every lien so authorized is entitled to preference over the lien of a pre-existing chattel mortgage. There is no logical distinction between a lien for repairs and a lien for storage and supplies (Wolfman Co. v. Eisenberg, 116 Misc. Rep. 43, 190 N. Y. S. 259); and the provisions of section 3052 show indisputably an intention to make the lien of a garage keeper for storage, repairs, and supplies superior to the interest of a conditional vendor. Contracts of conditional sale equally with chattel mortgages must be deemed made with knowledge of the lien law; and when, for default of the vendee, the vendor asserts his right of recaption, he must do so in subordination to subsisting liens created under section 3051 as limited by section 3051a. See Singer Mfg. Co. v. London & S. W. Ry. Co., L. R. [1894] 1 Q. B. 833, 837. In our view, the lien is preserved by constructive possession, not only against the conditional vendee, but against the conditional vendor as well. Albemarle Supply Co. v. Hind & Co., L. R. [1928] 1 K. B. 307.

The judgment is reversed and the case remanded to the municipal court for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

GENERAL MOTORS ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION v. SILVA et al.

Civ. 49.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, California.

Feb. 5, 1931.

Automobiles ⚷381.

Conditional buyer's temporary conditional removal of automobile, almost daily, with garage proprietor's consent, did not work destruction of lien claim for storage, supplies, and repairs, as against conditional seller (Civ. Code, § 3051).

Appeal from Municipal Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel S. O'Brien, Judge.

Action by the General Motors Acceptance Corporation against Ruth Silva and another. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Wm. S. Downing and Philander B. Beadle, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edgar C. Levey and Marvin E. Lewis, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

JOHNSON, P. J.

This is an action in claim and delivery instituted by plaintiff on February 25, 1930, because of default in certain payments owing for a Hudson automobile, which had been delivered by plaintiff's assignor into the possession of the defendant Mrs. Ruth Silva pursuant to a contract of conditional sale made April 11, 1929.

Mrs. Silva, having the lawful possession of the automobile, kept it at the Sixth Street Garage, under an agreement with the proprietor that the storage charge should be at the rate of $6 per month, payable at the end of each month, together with charges for any supplies furnished and repairs made. All bills for storage, supplies and service up to September 16, 1929, were paid by Mrs. Silva; but between that time and the time of suit there were bills incurred by her for storage, supplies, and repairs amounting to $66.10, which remained unpaid.

From the time when the storage began, until December 25, 1929, Mrs. Silva was in the habit of taking the car almost daily from the garage, but always returned it at night. By reason, however, of the charges which had accumulated, the car was detained in the garage at all times after December 25, 1929, until it was seized in this action on February 26, 1930, by the sheriff, acting under a writ issued at the instance of plaintiff.

Before beginning suit, plaintiff tendered the garage keeper the sum of $25 on February 20; but the amount so tendered was refused, and plaintiff was notified that the car was being detained, as authorized by section 3051 of the Civil Code, as security for payment of the accrued charges of $66.10.

Mrs. Silva having made no appearance in the action, and the defendant Sixth Street Garage having by its answer asserted its claim of lien, the trial court upon the evidence presented rendered judgment establishing a lien under section 3051 in favor of the defendant Sixth Street Garage for the sum of $66.10, with interest. From this judgment, the plaintiff has appealed.

The question of law involved is the same as in the case of Pacific States Finance Corporation v. Tony Freitas et al., 295 P. 804, this day decided by this court, namely, the question whether temporary conditional removal of an automobile, with consent of the garage proprietor, works destruction of a lien claimed under section 3051 of the Civil Code. It was decided in that case that, when such temporary or periodic withdrawal is permitted, the automobile continues to be constructively in the possession of the keeper of the garage, and that his statutory lien is therefore not lost by reason of his parting conditionally with the physical possession.

The two cases are closely parallel in their facts. In this case there was a contract for storage, made with a conditional vendee in lawful possession, at an agreed rate payable monthly; in the other case mentioned a contract was made with the conditional vendee in January, 1929, for storage at a monthly rate with payment deferred to December 1, 1929. The duration of the credit granted is the only material feature distinguishing the one case from the other; and in principle the legal rights and remedies of the parties in both cases are the same.

Upon the reasoning contained in the opinion rendered in the case of Pacific States Finance Corporation v. Freitas, the judgment is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J.

This action was instituted under and pursuant to the provisions of sections 21 and 22 of title 2 of the National Prohibition Act (41 Stat. 305, 314, 27 USCA §§ 33, 34, pp. 99, 111). It terminated in the court below with the entry of a decree adjudging the "Alviso Hotel," situate in the county of Santa Clara, owned and conducted by defendant Rosa Ackerman, to be a common nuisance, and ordering the entire building closed for a period of one year. No appeal was taken by the owner of the building. Certain occupants of the hotel, none of whom had been made parties to the action, made themselves such, and moved the court below to vacate or modify its judgment on the ground, among others, that the moving parties were aggrieved by the effect of the judgment, and were materially injured as to their substantial rights. An affidavit filed in support of this motion set out that the several moving parties had been occupying rooms in the Alviso Hotel "as their private place of dwelling"; that at none of the times mentioned in the complaint had intoxicating liquors been kept or dispensed in any of their said rooms; and that by reason of the judgment and decree of abatement they had been ousted and ejected "from their several rooms and places of dwelling." From the order denying their motion to vacate or modify the judgment the moving parties prosecute this appeal.

A motion of the government to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the appellants "at no time had any interest in the subject matter of the action, for the reason that they were mere lodgers in said hotel," and were not, therefore, parties "aggrieved" within the meaning of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was denied, with leave to the respondent to renew the motion upon the final submission of the appeal, if so advised. United States v. Ackerman, 208 Cal. 99, 280 P. 359. The motion was renewed when the cause was argued.

[1] As the conclusion we have reached disposes of the cause on its merits in keeping with the intent of the motion, we will consider merely the appeal. The transcript of the evidence heard in the court below discloses that the Alviso Hotel was an ordinary hotel or rooming house. There was no showing that the building was divided into separate sets of apartments or suites of rooms intended or used as homes or for residences of persons or families living independently of one another. The essential elements constituting an apartment or home were lacking. The occupants of the hotel who made themselves parties to the action after judgment, for the purpose of making the motion, were regarded and described by the proprietors of the hotel as "roomers." Most of them "worked in a nearby cannery." In the only affidavit filed in support of the motion it is alleged that the moving parties "engaged and rented of and from Rosa Ackerman * * * their various and several rooms in said hotel." In the light of all the surroundings as disclosed by the entire record, the averment that these parties used and occupied the rooms "as their private place of dwelling" adds nothing on which the movants can predicate an interest in those parts of the premises occupied by them which would render them "aggrieved" within the meaning of the law relating to appeals. Code Civ. Proc. § 938. See, in this connection, Fox v. Windemere Hotel, etc., Co., 30 Cal. App. 162, 164, 157 P. 820. They were mere lodgers, occupying rooms or portions of the hotel which was under the control and in the occupancy of the Ackermans, who owned and conducted it. They, therefore, had no interest in the real estate of which the building was a part. McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 71, 48 P. 984.

[2] Assuming that the appellants had such an interest, the decree of the court below closing the building for one year is binding on them, notwithstanding they were not made parties defendant before the cause was heard and judgment entered. The principal purpose of an action to abate a nuisance is a proceeding in rem, primarily against the property because it is maintained and used in violation of law.

[3] It must be regarded as settled law that, whatever means are reasonably necessary to abate such a nuisance, even to the extent of taking or destroying the property of an innocent owner, may be adopted without infringing any constitutional rights. United States v. Boynton (D. C.) 297 F. 261, 266, and cases cited. The object of the proceeding to abate is preventive in its nature, and, to effect this, the interest of innocent persons in the property may be divested. Engler v. United States (C. C. A.) 25 F.(2d) 37, 39.

"In the exercise of its authority, and in compliance with the duty imposed upon it by the Eighteenth Amendment, to enforce such amendment 'by appropriate legislation,' Congress has declared that any place where intoxicating liquor is unlawfully manufactured, sold, kept, or bartered is a public nuisance, and has made suitable provisions for the abatement of such a nuisance in proper legal proceedings. One of the means adopted by Congress as advisable and appropriate for the accomplishment of that object is permissive authority in a proper court of equity to order that the place of location of the offending nuisance 'shall not be occupied or used for one year thereafter,' unless such court, in its discretion, shall permit such place to be occupied or used 'if the owner * * * shall give bond.' * * * This power to 'padlock' a place which has thus become a public nuisance is not made dependent upon a finding of knowledge or notice, on the part of any owner of such a place, of the existence of such nuisance." United States v. Boynton, supra, page 266 of 297 F.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J.

The above-entitled causes, consolidated for purposes of appeal, present appeals from judgments rendered after the overruling of general demurrers, and require determination of the single legal question as to whether or not the properties described in the respective complaints are, under the allegations thereof, exempt from taxation by the provisions of section 1b of article 13 of the state Constitution, adopted November 2, 1926. As the facts involved in these appeals differ only as to the party plaintiff and the property owned, we will set out in substance only the allegations of the complaint filed by the Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association.

It is therein alleged that the defendant was and is a municipal corporation; that the plaintiff was and is a cemetery association incorporated under sections 608 to 617, both inclusive, of the Civil Code, and has been and is maintaining a cemetery in the county of San Mateo wherein it has sold and granted the perpetual right of burial to many thousands of persons, and the bodies of many thousands of human dead have been buried; that said plaintiff has received a surplus from the sale of lots which, under sections 610 and 611 of the Civil Code, can only be used for the improvement, embellishment, and preservation of said cemetery and not for dividends; that the plaintiff, under section 616 of the same code, has received trust moneys, and under section 617 has contracted for the perpetual care of certain lots in the cemetery for which it holds trust moneys; that, at the time of the assessment hereinafter mentioned, it was the owner, by the investment of such trust moneys in accordance with said sections 616 and 617, of land, improved with a hotel then operated by it for peculiar reasons set forth, located in the city of San Francisco; that "said cemetery is used and held exclusively for the burial or other disposition of the human dead, and the said trust funds with the proceeds thereof, and the entire net proceeds and income from the whole of said trust fund is used exclusively for the care, maintenance and upkeep of said cemetery and the care of said dead; and, no part of said trust fund, nor of the proceeds or income thereof ever has been, or lawfully can be used or held for profit of said plaintiff, or its members." Then, appropriately, the taking of the various steps required by law for the assessment and levying of taxes against such property and the payment of such taxes under protest is alleged. Plaintiff seeks recovery of the amount of taxes so paid and their cancellation.

The constitutional provision here involved, and decisive of the present dispute, reads as follows: "All property used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation and local assessment." Subject to the exception, this provision exempts from taxation and local assessment two kinds of property, classified on the basis of its use, but without consideration of the status or character of its owner or possessor, to wit: (1) That "used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead"; and (2) that "used or held exclusively * * * for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property" (i. e., the first class) "or such dead" (i. e., human dead so deposited or buried). The exception "except used or held for profit" qualifies the phrase "all property," and therefore restricts or limits both classes of property. We are here concerned only with the second class as affected by the exception.

[1-3] Constitutional provisions and statutes exempting property from taxation are strictly construed. People v. Board of Directors, 174 Ill. 177, 51 N. E. 198. Grants of exemption from taxation cannot be allowed, unless the intention to do so is expressed in direct terms or is fairly inferable from the language of the instrument by which the right is claimed. Pasadena Univ. v. County of Los Angeles, 190 Cal. 786, 791, 214 P. 868. It is apparent from a reading of the above constitutional provision that property falling within the second class, to be exempt, must possess two characteristics, namely, it must fall within the limitation that it be used or held exclusively for the care, maintenance, or upkeep of burial grounds, and it must also fall without the exception that it be used or held for profit. While it may be accepted as true that the entire income derived from the hotel is devoted exclusively to the care and maintenance of respondent's cemetery, we are not prepared to say that, because of such application of the income, the hotel itself, within the meaning of the constitutional provision, is therefore exclusively appropriated to such use. Its direct and primary use is the housing of guests. The mere fact that it was purchased with cemetery or perpetual care trust funds, and that the income therefrom must, under the law, be used or held solely for the care and maintenance of the burial grounds, cannot reasonably be said to work an exemption of the hotel itself. To so hold would be to read into the constitutional provision something not there present, for the exemption, if any, is given to the property itself, without regard to its income-producing capacity or the disposition of such income. The mere fact that the disposition of the income is beneficial to the burial grounds, which are exempt, should not serve to extend that exemption through the income back to the property from which the income is derived. While the application of the income derived from the operation of the hotel undoubtedly assists, and perhaps materially so, in the proper maintenance of the nontaxable burial grounds, and lends value thereto, this alone should not work an exemption of the hotel proper. Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 149, 154. Had it been the intention to grant the exemption upon the basis of the use of the income from property rather than upon the use of the property itself, such intention could, and probably would, have been directly and positively expressed. We conclude, therefore, that the property for which the exemption is now claimed does not satisfy the constitutional requirement that it be "used or held exclusively * * * for the care, maintenance or upkeep" of respondent's cemetery grounds. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to determine whether said property falls within or without the exception which excludes from the constitutional exemption property "used or held for profit." Nor do we find it necessary to here determine the kind or character of property, in addition to burial grounds proper, intended to be included within the constitutional exemption. We expressly confine our decision to the problem now before us.

It is in accordance with the common wish of mankind that the places where the dead are buried should be protected and preserved against interference of possible sales for unpaid taxes, and be kept free from molestation or desecration. Exemptions of cemetery property from taxation are but the expression of that wish. That this is true as regards section 1b of article 13, supra, appears from the argument made in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment and sent to all of the voters prior to the election at which it was adopted. The proponents of the measure urged that it "should have been adopted long ago in order to protect the last resting place of the departed. * * * The county assessors know that they cannot under the law seize and sell a burial lot containing a body and yet under the present law, they are compelled to levy an assessment against such a plot, thereby expending the time and money of the county in bookkeeping, etc., to no avail, and jeopardizing the title to a property that may be containing the last remains of some dear one. * * *

"Finally, only the cemetery property not held for profit and owned by those exclusively for burial purposes is exempted. It will not relieve from taxation property of cemetery associations and others which is to be sold for profit, but only property to be used exclusively for the burial of the dead, and this sacred property should be kept tax free. * * *" In City of Pasadena v. Railroad Commission, 183 Cal. 526, 530, 192 P. 25, 10 A. L. R. 1425, reference is made to the argument or address of the proponents of a constitutional measure as evidence of the intention with which it was adopted. We cannot perceive how the wish to protect and preserve the resting place of the dead would be made effectual by exempting property, such as is herein involved, and which may be disposed of at any time and for any purpose. The question before us being one of constitutional construction, the holdings of other courts, though interesting and informative, have been of little assistance because of the different wording of the laws involved.

The judgments are, and each is, reversed, with instructions to the court below to sustain the respective demurrers without leave to amend the complaints, and thereupon to render judgment in favor of the defendant in each case.

Creditor's advancement to debtor, who retained trucks but conveyed title for security, held usurious loan (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3757, § 3).

> Evidence showed that creditor advanced money to pay balance due by debtor to third person for purchase of trucks under conditional sales contract, and that creditor, for security, took assignment of such contract from third person, together with bill of sale from debtor, and then issued inflated conditional sales contracts, which he immediately assigned to others, to whom debtor made payment.

PRESTON, J.

Action to recover the statutory penalty provided by section 3 of the Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, Act 3757, Deering's General Laws). Defendant had judgment; plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The transaction took the form of an advancement by defendant of the sum of $1,624.31, to discharge the final payments due from plaintiff to General Motors Acceptance Corporation for the purchase of two trucks under a conditional sales contract. Defendant to secure repayment of the sum advanced took from the Acceptance Corporation an assignment of the conditional sales contract; procured registration of the trucks in his own name as owner; then took a bill of sale of the trucks from plaintiff; then issued to plaintiff an inflated conditional sales contract, dated December 16, 1926, naming the sum of $3,531.88, reciting, however, the fictitious payment of $1,000 on account thereof, leaving the true amount claimed by defendant from plaintiff for said advancement as $2,531.88, which was to be paid in monthly installments over a period of approximately one year. Immediately upon the execution of this additional sales contract, defendant assigned it to Commercial Securities Corporation, Cons., with a written guaranty to said purchaser of all the covenants therein to be kept and performed by plaintiff. Plaintiff made all the payments due under this contract except the last one of $931.88, which fell due December 16, 1927. To take care of this payment, the above-described process was repeated; the $931.88 became $1,131.88; a new conditional sales contract to cover another twelve months' period was issued for this item and immediately assigned by defendant to the Merchants' Security Company.

It must be noted that the possession of the trucks never at any time passed from the plaintiff to defendant. Title was conveyed to the latter at all times for the purpose of security. Stripping the transaction of its entanglements, it is too clear for controversy that it was but a thinly disguised loan heavily charged with usury. Rosemead Co. v. Shipley Company, 207 Cal. 414, 278 P. 1038; Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 206 P.

*Rehearing granted 2 P.2d 144.

674; San Joaquin Finance Corp. v. Allen, 102 Cal App. 400, 283 P. 117.

[2] But the foregoing observations do not entitle plaintiff to recover from the defendant, for the evidence shows that, immediately upon execution of said two contracts, the assignments above noted were made. The evidence also shows without conflict that each and every payment called for under said contracts was made to one or the other of the above-mentioned corporations and not to the defendant. This fact prevents the plaintiff from recovering, and such holding follows from the plain construction of the act itself, which provides that the penalties may be collected from the person "who shall have taken or received" the payment. We cannot say that the written guaranty made by the defendant should alter this rule. There was no showing of collusion or relation of any other kind between defendant and either of the assignees.

Appellant urges that only three cases could be found on this subject, and that these cases hold that the penalty may be collected from the party who makes the contract; they are Sanford v. Kane, 133 Ill. 199, 24 N. E. 414, 8 L. R. A. 724, 23 Am. St. Rep. 602; Taulbee v. Hargis, 173 Ky. 433, 191 S. W. 320, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 762; Harbaugh v. Tanner, 163 Ind. 574, 71 N. E. 145. We have examined each of these cases, and, without stopping to discuss them, we would say in passing that they are not parallel to any extent with the situation we have before us. Upon our own volition, however, we have found a number of cases giving to statutes and Constitutions, which read almost identically with our statute, the construction here given. In Anderson v. Tatro, 44 Okl. 219, 144 P. 360, 361, the court construed a provision of the Constitution of that state which allowed the recovery of double the amount of interest paid "from the person, firm, or corporation taking or receiving the same" (Const. Okl., art. 14, § 3), and it was there held that, where payments were made to the assignee, such assignee alone must answer to the penalties and that the maker of the usurious obligation was not a proper party to the action.

This doctrine was followed again by the Oklahoma Court in the case of First Nat. Bank v. Sensebaugh, 58 Okl. 462, 160 P. 455, wherein the court construed section 5198 of the United States Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stats. 1913, § 9759 [12 USCA § 86]); the wording of this statute being similar to the Oklahoma constitutional provision above mentioned and to our own statute. It was there again held that, inasmuch as the interest was paid to the assignee, the maker of the contract was not a proper party to the action. To the same effect, see Webb v. Galveston, etc., Co., 32 Tex. Civ. App. 515, 75 S. W. 355, and Western Bank & Trust Co. v. Ogden, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 93 S. W. 1102.

It is proper, of course, to here note that the instrument assigned was not a negotiable instrument under the law merchant, and, if it had been, an exception to the rule above announced might be made. Schlesinger v. Lehmaier, 191 N. Y. 69, 83 N. E. 657, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626, 123 Am. St. Rep. 591. See, also, Culver v. Osborne, 231 Ill. 104, 83 N. E. 110, 121 Am. St. Rep. 302; Harbaugh v. Divorce suit by Ernest Burton Richardes against Ann Agnes Richardes. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Harold H. Price, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wal J. Tuska, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J.

This appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit.

The action was brought by plaintiff to obtain a decree of divorce from defendant on the ground of willful desertion. Said desertion is predicated on the offers of plaintiff, alleged to have been made in good faith following a long voluntary separation, to resume matrimonial relations as prescribed by the Civil Code, § 101, but which offers of reconciliation and restoration defendant refused to accept, as hereafter will appear.

Appellant and respondent intermarried at the city of Montreal, Dominion of Canada, May 22, 1894. Shortly thereafter they removed to Brighton, England. Three daughters were born in wedlock. Suspicions which lurked in the mind of appellant as to the paternity of the last child born at Brighton in 1901, two months after appellant had left the family domicile, gave rise to discord, which resulted in appellant's departure for New Zealand, leaving family and all behind. The appellant and respondent met many years thereafter in California, where he unsuccessfully prosecuted in 1922 and 1924, respectively, two divorce actions against his wife, one on the ground of cruelty, and the other on the ground of desertion. Neither the judgment rolls nor any of the pleadings or proceedings had in said other cases were offered or received in evidence in this action. No witnesses were heard in the instant case except the appellant and witnesses called on his behalf. Consequently the testimony of himself and his witnesses stands uncontradicted.

[1, 2] A motion for a nonsuit is in effect a demurrer to the evidence, and the court must assume that all the evidence received in favor of the plaintiff relevant to the issues is true. All presumptions, inferences, and doubtful questions must be construed most favorably to the plaintiff's case. The rule is so well settled that it is not necessary to enlarge upon it.

From the evidence before us, appellant was residing with his family at Brighton, England, in 1901. The wife became pregnant. From his neighbors or from some other source he became suspicious that she was intimate with a man named Gay. The matter seems to have come to a head in the shape of a personal encounter in which the three were embroiled. Gay and the wife, in turn, had the appellant arrested on separate charges of assault. The wife was a witness against appellant, but he was acquitted on both charges. She also told the head of the railroad company which employed appellant that her husband had in his possession stolen property belonging to the company. She caused his discharge. During this period of storm and stress appellant informed his wife that he was going to New Zealand where his brother was located. The wife replied that she "didn't care a damn where I went, as long as I was out of her sight." In 1901, upon his arrival at New Zealand, he write to his wife, telling her of his arrival, and also of his departure in 1904 from New Zealand for San Francisco. That appellant made an earnest effort to locate his wife after he left England is clearly shown by letters which he wrote to her attorney, her clergyman, persons likely to know of her presence, the head of the police department, and by publication, there is no dispute. That the wife did not wish her whereabouts known to him is an inference equally certain. After the passing of a number of years he got into touch with one of his daughters, who said she did not know her mother's address. He afterwards brought one of his daughters to America, and the wife seems to have arrived at Boston in 1921. Said two divorce actions referred to were brought in the county of Marin and the city and county of San Francisco. It seems that the wife asked for no counter relief except alimony, which was allowed her in the last action at the rate of $60 per month. This allowance the appellant has continuously paid. The wife claims that the separation as herein related was desertion on the part of the husband, while the husband claims that his leaving and remaining away was not only with her consent, but it was her desire, as shown by her refusal to accept a reconciliation on any reasonable terms or conditions recognized by the law. Prior to the commencement of this action, appellant offered to furnish the spouse with a comfortable home and receive her as a husband should receive and treat his wife. Others at his solicitations attempted to induce the wife to return to the matrimonial status, but she has always steadfastly refused. As a final test of her intention, the following question was put to her by the attorney for appellant when in the presence of appellant in an interview with her he offered her a fit and suitable home in which to reside: "It is not your wish either to become reconciled to or live with your husband—is that the case?" Her answer was that such was the case. She also replied to the suggestion that appellant owned an automobile which they could enjoy, that it would be his purpose to get her into the automobile and tip her out and kill her. The parties to the action have lived separate and apart for a period of approximately thirty years. More than twenty years passed before appellant filed his first action for divorce. Both are well advanced in years. The only inference that can be drawn from the separation and its long duration is that both received the hearty approval of the wife, and that there is no reasonable inducement appellant can offer that would influence her to resume matrimonial relations with him. This is affirmatively established by her last words before his departure from England and at the last attempt at a reconciliation. If respondent was in fact entitled to a divorce on the grounds of desertion, she never at any time asserted her right.

A similar situation was treated in McMullin v. McMullin, 140 Cal. 112, 73 P. 808, 809. It was there said: "Defendant never sought to obtain the divorce to which she was entitled if the separation was without her consent. * * * It is clear from the record that the declared position of defendant for certainly three years preceding the commencement of this action has been that she insisted upon living separate and apart from her husband, and would consent to nothing else. * * * The character of the separation of a man and wife is not forever established by the status at the time they cease to live together. What was originally a separation without consent may become a separation by consent, and whether or not it has become such is a question of fact, depending for its solution upon all the circumstances of the particular case. Desertion is a continuing offense, but it continues only so long as there is a want of consent to the separation on the part of the deserted party. Of course, the original offense is not destroyed by the fact that, after the desertion has continued for the period essential to make it a ground for divorce, the status of the separation changes, and the separation becomes in every way agreeable to the deserted party. She has still her right of action for a divorce because thereof. * * * But she is compelled to assert that right within a reasonable time (Civ. Code, § 124, subd. 3), and the continuance of the separation after such change in the status is not a continuance of the desertion. The parties are by the change placed in the position of living separate and apart by consent, and under the provisions of our statute (section 101, Civ. Code) either party may revoke his consent, and in good faith seek a reconciliation and restoration; and the refusal of the other to conform thereto constitutes desertion on his or her part, which, if continued for one year, becomes a ground of divorce. * * * Our statute, after providing that a divorce must be denied when the action is not brought within a specified time in cases of adultery and conviction of felony, provides that it must be denied in all other cases where there is an unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action (section 124, Civ. Code), and further provides that 'unreasonable lapse of time is such a delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same, with intent to continue the marriage relation, notwithstanding the commission of such offense' (section 125, Civ. Code). There cannot be the slightest doubt, under the circumstances appearing here, that, if it be admitted that defendant originally had a good cause of action for desertion, it is barred by the provisions of these sections. The law of this state does not contemplate the enforcement of any such condition of the parties to the marriage as that contended for by defendant—a continuance of the marriage relation with the parties living separate and apart against the will of one of them. It does not place it within the power of one of the parties to insist that he or she shall be free from the obligations of marriage, and that at the same time the other party shall be compelled to remain his or her husband or wife, simply because the other party had been guilty of some offense constituting a ground of divorce, at a time so far distant that a divorce could not now be granted therefor."

[3, 4] Whether or not appellant's offers to resume matrimonial relations were made in good faith is a question of fact which cannot be disposed of by an order of nonsuit. Besides, the testimony offered by appellant and his witnesses is not contradicted. In fact it is corroborated by the wife's express declaration and by her long acquiescence. It does not appear that she asked for a divorce from appellant in either of the two former actions brought by him against her on any grounds, but merely contented herself with contesting his right and obtaining an alimony allowance. The records in those cases, however, are not before us. The facts adduced at the trial required a decision upon the merits of the action, and the motion for a nonsuit was improperly granted.

Judgment reversed.

RELOVICH v. STUART et al.

L. A. 9849.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 28, 1931.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑158½(2).

That petition to establish easement in water prayed for mandatory injunction, but did not warrant specific performance of water contract, would not preclude equitable relief justified by facts.

> Portion of land supplied with water was conveyed to plaintiff, together with contract providing that vendor agreed to furnish purchaser water at certain rate from land retained by vendor with right of vendor to remodel or change system of water pipes furnishing water at vendor's option. Through various conveyances, land on which water system was located passed to defendants, who reconstructed water system so that no water could flow onto purchaser's land, and defendants refused to furnish water as originally contracted for. Defendants claimed that contract to furnish water was unenforceable for lack of mutuality by purchaser who was not obligated to take water.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑158(2).

Deed and contract by vendor to supply water from land retained executed at same time must be deemed one instrument in action to enforce right to water (Civ. Code, § 1642).

3. Waters and water courses 🔑158(1).

Where grantor contracted to furnish water to purchaser from land retained, right to water was substantial element in consideration passing to grantor.

4. Waters and water courses 🔑156(1).

Conveyance together with contract to furnish purchaser water from land retained by grantor created easement to take water for benefit of land conveyed (Civ. Code, § 801).

5. Waters and water courses 🔑156(5).

Purchaser's right to take water from land retained by grantor as agreed held binding on all who take with notice.

6. Waters and water courses 🔑156(1).

That purchaser agreed to pay certain price for water furnished by grantor from land retained did not prevent creation of easement in water (Civ. Code, § 801).

7. Contracts 🔑10(1).

Contract creating easement to take water is enforceable, though enjoyment of right is dependent on purchaser's payment for water.

8. Waters and water courses 🔑158½(1).

Owner of land benefited by easement to take water may sue to enforce easement if easement has attached.

9. Waters and water courses 🔑158(1).

Agreement to furnish water not specifying quantity held not void for uncertainty, where necessarily measured by requirements of land.

10. Waters and water courses 🔑158(1).

Vendor's agreement to furnish purchaser water from land retained was enforceable, though vendor reserved right to reconstruct water system.

Action by Anton Relovich against S. L. Stuart and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Superseding opinion in 286 P. 449.

Pierce & Gould, of Ventura, and J. L. Murphey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clarke & Bowker, of Los Angeles, and James C. Hollingsworth, of Ventura, for respondent Mary Perkins Raymond.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint without leave to amend. The action has been dismissed against all of the original defendants with the exception of the defendant Mary Perkins Raymond and certain fictitious defendants. Hereinafter, whenever the word "defendant" is used, it will refer to said defendant Mary Perkins Raymond.

The plaintiff in his second amended complaint alleges substantially the following:

In October, 1910, Dr. S. L. Stuart and his wife were the owners of a certain tract of land in Ventura county, Cal., containing about 130 acres. This land was waste and barren, and worthless for agricultural use without irrigation. The Stuarts had developed a water system for the purpose of supplying and distributing water thereto. Sources had been discovered and developed to supply all of said land with abundant and sufficient water for all time. On October 27, 1910, Dr. Stuart and his wife sold and conveyed by grant, bargain, and sale deed to the plaintiff, Anton Relovich, a certain described portion of said lands containing twenty acres for the sum of $400. Upon the same date and as a part of the same transaction and for the same consideration the Stuarts also executed and delivered to the plaintiff the following instrument:

"This agreement made and entered into the 27th day of October, 1910, by and between S. L. Stuart, the party of the first part, and Anton Relovich, the party of the second part, Witnesseth: Whereas the party of the first part is the proprietor of a system of water works and pipe lines for the purpose of furnishing water for the irrigation of certain lands in Section 5, Township 4, North, Range 22, West, S. B. M.

"Whereas the party of the first part has conveyed to the party of the second part twenty (20) acres of land in Lot 3, Section 5, Township 4, North, R. 22 W., S. B. M., by deed of even date herewith and intended to be forthwith recorded in the office of the County Recorder of Ventura County, State of California.

"Now therefore, this agreement witnesseth:

"That the party of the first part agrees to furnish the party of the second part for the price or sum of twenty cents (20c) for each one thousand gallons of water used by the said party of the second part upon the land particularly described in said deed of even date herewith.

"It being understood that said water is to be supplied from the system of water pipes as now constructed and maintained by the party of the first part, and that all expenses in making connections to and with said systems of pipes and conducting said water to said land, including all tanks, measuring devices or meters for measuring said water, shall be at the sole cost and expense of the party of the second part. And it is also understood that the party of the first part reserves the right and privilege of remodeling, changing and reconstructing said system of water pipes at his option."

Both instruments were duly acknowledged and were recorded in January, 1911.

Subsequently the plaintiff went into possession of the land so conveyed to him and commenced the planting and cultivation of oranges, grapes, and nursery stock, irrigating the same as the cultivation progressed from and through the connection made by the plaintiff with the irrigating system so maintained by the Stuarts.

On January 4, 1912, the Stuarts conveyed the lands retained by them and upon which the water system was located to third parties, and said lands thereupon passed through various channels until on February 6, 1919, by mesne conveyances, it became the property of one George P. Raymond. All of the intermediate holders down to George P. Raymond had recognized the right of the plaintiff to take water from the water system for irrigation on the cultivated portions of his land. It is alleged that said George P. Raymond also recognized the plaintiff's right to receive and take water through and from said system, but that said George P. Raymond did not furnish water in sufficient quantities for the complete irrigation of the plaintiff's land although the supply was sufficient and abundant and the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay for all of the water required by him. On May 1, 1922, said George P. Raymond conveyed the premises on which the water system was situated to his mother, the defendant Mary Perkins Raymond, who ever since has been the owner thereof. Subsequently said Mary Perkins Raymond continued to furnish water through said system to the plaintiff, but also in insufficient quantities and in quantities considerably less than the plaintiff's requirements although there was an abundant supply of water for all of said purposes and for all of her own uses and to spare, and although the plaintiff has at all times been ready, willing, and able to pay therefor, by reason whereof the plaintiff's orchards, vines, and nursery stock have sustained injury and the plaintiff has suffered damages. It is further alleged that in January, 1924, while this condition still existed, the defendant Mary Perkins Raymond "remodeled, changed and reconstructed her said water system so that no water did or could flow into or enter plaintiff's receiving pipes or receiving line or could reach or be conducted thereby or at all to plaintiff's said land and said defendant declared and announced that she was under no obligation to supply plaintiff or his said lands with water and that said agreement did not bind or obligate her in any manner and that she would not furnish or supply him with water at all and this refusal she has persisted in to the present time and has not since supplied or furnished plaintiff with water in any amount or at all"; that because of the defendant's refusal to supply the required water the plaintiff has suffered further damage by reason of injury to his trees, vines, etc., some of which he has been able to mitigate temporarily by acquiring limited quantities of water from other neighbors but at excessive prices; that the aggregate of such damage amounts to the sum of $30,000.

The plaintiff prays for damages, for a declaration that a perpetual right and easement to a supply of water from a water system to be maintained on the lands of the defendant exists in favor of the lands owned by the plaintiff, and for equitable relief to protect the enjoyment and exercise of said right.

The question presented is whether, assuming the facts stated to be true, the plaintiff has alleged a cause of action entitling him to damages and equitable relief, or either thereof.

Much stress is laid by both sides upon the nature of the "agreement" which was executed by the Stuarts on October 27, 1910, as a part of the transaction of the sale of 20 acres of their lands to the plaintiff. The defendant insists that the instrument is nothing more than a contract to sell water as personal property and, viewed as such, is not specifically enforceable for the reason that it lacks mutuality of obligation and of remedy, is uncertain and indefinite in its terms, and that it calls for personal services on the part of the defendant. The defendant likens the contract to that involved in the case of Schimmel v. Martin, 190 Cal. 429, 213 P. 33, 34. There the parties to the agreement owned adjoining ranches. It was agreed between them, among their things, that the first party should let the second party have the continuous flow of 150 inches of water, the full capacity of first party's pumping plant, at 1½ cents per inch, to be applied on the 20 acres of land owned by the second party, the water to be furnished whenever a specified notice is given to the first party, the second party to pay monthly for the amount of water used. Judgment for damages for alleged breach was reversed on two grounds: (1) That the contract was lacking in mutuality; and (2) that the contract was void for uncertainty. As to the first ground the court said: "Considered as a contract for the sale of personal property, as the parties to the action treated and considered it, and as the trial court in effect found it to be, there is clearly no mutuality in the absence of an agreement by the plaintiffs to buy the water offered for sale by the contract." On the second ground it was stated: "The right to water to be used for irrigation is a right in real property. Fawkes v. Reynolds, 190 Cal. 204, 211 P. 449; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 723, 725, 726, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359, 93 P. [858]; Copeland v. Fairview Land, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 148, 153, 131 P. 119. Considered as a contract for the sale of a right to the use of water for the purpose stated in the complaint, all of the elements essential to the creation of such a contract may be said to be clearly expressed, save and except the price to be paid for the water. The contract contemplates payments from time to time at the specified rate of 1½ cents per inch; but whether that is the rate to be paid per hour, per day, per month, per year, or for any other period is uncertain and incapable of ascertainment from the terms of the contract."

[1-3] The defendant also urges that this is essentially an action in specific performance and that as such it may not be maintained because the contract to provide the water lacks mutuality in that there is no agreement on the part of the plaintiff to take the water. It may be assumed that the facts stated would not warrant a decree in specific performance; but the pleading may not be relegated to that sphere in equity jurisprudence. Under the facts alleged the relief sought is by way of injunction and damages and the fact that the injunction prayed for is mandatory in character would not prevent the court from rendering such relief in equity as the facts alleged and proved would justify. Certainly the facts alleged, if proved, disclose a situation which should make a strong appeal for equitable relief. No one can read the allegations of the complaint and not be impressed with the belief that both parties to the deed and contract (which must be deemed one instrument for the purposes of this case under section 1642 of the Civil Code) understood and intended that the plaintiff acquired with the land a right to the water without which the land was worthless. That right was a substantial element in the consideration passing from the plaintiff to the grantor. Relying on that right, he made his habitation on the land and continued to improve it when the right to take the water was cut off by the defendant.

[4-6] The entire transaction and the subsequent conduct of the parties as alleged in the complaint indicate that more was intended than a mere sale of water as a personal commodity. "Moreover," as stated in Fawkes v. Reynolds, 190 Cal. 204, 211, 211 P. 449, 452, cited in Schimmel v. Martin, supra, "it is now settled that water in use for irrigation is not personal property." It is not necessary to decide that the instruments created a covenant running with the land as contemplated by the statute and decisions. Civ. Code, §§ 1460, 1462; Pomona, etc., Co. v. San Antonio, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 618, 627, 93 P. 881; Fresno Canal, etc., Co. v. Dunbar, 80 Cal. 530, 22 P. 275. But the facts alleged sufficiently establish that a property right or easement to take water for irrigation from the water system on the adjoining land retained by the grantor was created for the benefit of the land conveyed. That such a right may be so created is provided in section 801 of the Civil Code and is recognized in the case of Schimmel v. Martin, supra, relied upon by the defendant (see, also, Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 P. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Henrici v. South Feather Land, etc., Co., 177 Cal. 442, 170 P. 1135; 7 Cal. Jur., p. 749); and that the same is binding upon all who take with notice is not questioned. Henrici v. South Feather Land, etc., Co., supra; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, supra; Bryan v. Grosse, 155 Cal. 132; 26 Cal. Jur., p. 204; Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. 774, 41 Engl. Rep. 1143; 7 R. C. L. 1125. The fact that a certain price was to be paid for the water to be used for irrigation does not necessarily change the character of the agreement or the right thereby created. That factor was not considered to have such an effect in Schimmel v. Martin, supra, or Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, supra. See, also, Henrici v. South Feather Land, etc., Co., supra. No contention is or can be made that the facts alleged do not establish that the defendant, Mary Perkins Raymond, became the owner of the land upon which the water system was constructed with actual notice of the existing right and burden.

[7, 8] Viewed as contract creating a real property right or easement in favor of the land conveyed to the plaintiff, no question of mutuality of obligation or of remedy may arise even though the continued exercise and enjoyment of the right may be dependent upon the ability and readiness of the owner of that land to pay for water taken and used for irrigation at the price stipulated by the agreement. Such considerations arise only in contemplating the enforcement of executory personal contracts and have no bearing in cases where the powers of a court of equity are invoked to protect the enjoyment of an existing executed right in real property. Mutuality is supplied by the existence of an executed consideration for the agreement (Spires v. Urbahn, 124 Cal. 110, 56 P. 794; Chrisman v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 83 Cal. App. 249, 254, 256 P. 618), and if the right or easement has attached the owner or occupant of the land for the benefit of which it was created may maintain an action for its enforcement or protection (Los Robles Water Co. v. Stoneman, 146 Cal. 203, 79 P. 880).

[9] We think there is no merit to the contention that the agreement here is void for uncertainty. There is no uncertainty as to the price to be paid, viz, 20 cents per 1,000 gallons of water. No uncertainty exists by reason of the fact that a certain quantity of water for irrigation is not specified where the grant or agreement expressly or by necessary implication measures the right by the requirements of the land to which it is made appurtenant. Henrici v. South Feather Land, etc., Co., 177 Cal. 442, 448, 170 P. 1135. See, also, Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 P. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359.

[10] We do not deem it an insurmountable obstacle to the granting of relief that the deed and contract reserves to the grantor "the right and privilege of remodeling, changing and reconstructing said system of water pipes at his option." It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant has "remodeled, changed and reconstructed her said water system so that no water did or could flow into or enter plaintiff's receiving pipes or receiving line or could reach or be conducted thereby or at all to plaintiff's said land." It would be highly unreasonable to hold that the reservation in the grant was intended by the parties or contemplated that the grantor or his successors in interest with notice of the equities of the plaintiff could thereunder so modify, change, or reconstruct the system of water pipes as to deprive the plaintiff of his rights which had attached and continued as a servitude during the course of many years of operation under the grant.

It is obvious that the consideration paid by the plaintiff Relovich to the Stuarts supports both the conveyance of the twenty-acre tract sold by Dr. Stuart to Relovich and the agreement on the part of the grantor by which the plaintiff was given the right to enter the adjoining land of the Stuarts, make a connection with the water system thereon, and take therefrom sufficient water to irrigate the land conveyed. In other words, the land being worthless without water for irrigation, the agreement to furnish water therefor may be said to have been the chief inducement to the purchase by the plaintiff and an important element of consideration for the price paid.

Any defenses which the defendant may have on the merits do not, of course, now appear. We are merely passing on the sufficiency of the complaint, and we conclude that a cause of action has been stated both for equitable relief and for damages.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

MEDCRAFT v. MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE.

S. F. 13402.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 27, 1931.

1. Negligence ⟹32(2), 67.

One having business in office building and, while searching for washroom, stepping through open door into totally dark space and falling down air shaft, held contributorily negligent and not then invitee.

It appeared that visitor in office building, after transacting business with tenant, passed down corridor seeking washroom, and, finding plain door bearing no invitational sign and entering, found himself in dimly lighted antechamber with swinging door leading into larger lighted room. Thinking washroom must be at some other place, he turned to another door on his right which stood ajar, there being sufficient light to make darkness visible within area to which last-mentioned door led, and proceeding toward aperture, moving in total darkness, and in attempting to set foot on supposed floor, he plunged into air shaft and was injured.

PRESTON, J.

Action for damages for personal injuries. At the conclusion of the evidence the court, on motion of defendant, granted a nonsuit and judgment followed from which plaintiff appeals upon a full record. The facts are not in dispute and those here material may be set forth within a narrow compass:

Defendant owns a large office building in the city and county of San Francisco known as the Merchants' Exchange Building. Offices therein are rented to tenants for their own use and the use of all persons having business with them. Plaintiff, an insurance manager, on December 13, 1919, had business with the Pacific Adjustment Bureau, the offices of which were located on the tenth floor of defendant's said building. During the transaction of his business at this place, plaintiff stained his hands with ink. After concluding the business transaction, he passed down the corridor of the building seeking a washroom wherein to cleanse his hands. He was more or less familiar with the other floors of the building and knew the location thereon of the washrooms and urinals. Moving along the corridor to a point corresponding to the position of the washrooms and urinals on other floors of the building, he found a plain door, bearing no invitational sign, but, feeling that it must be the place he sought, he opened the door and found himself in a small dimly lighted antechamber with a swinging door between it and a larger room, which was lighted. The light from the larger room, shed over and under the swinging door, served to light dimly the antechamber. Plaintiff looked at the so-called usual place but saw no washbasin there and he did not seek it in the lighted room, where two urinals were located. He thought the washroom must be at some other place and recalled that upon opening the door and entering the room wherein he stood, his hand had come in contact with the bolt of another door to his right. This door was ajar. The light shed into the little room was just sufficient to make the darkness visible within the area to which this last mentioned door led. Pursuing the thought that this door must lead to a washroom, he proceeded toward the aperture, moving in total darkness, and in attempting to set foot on a supposed floor and to find a supposed electric switch button, he plunged into an air shaft some eighty feet in depth, but fortunately, after a fall of some fifteen or twenty feet, caught himself upon a ledge of some kind and was rescued, although severely and permanently injured. He thereupon brought this suit alleging negligence on the part of defendant owner of the building growing out of the above facts.

[1] In granting the nonsuit the court based its ruling upon the ground that plaintiff in the portion of the building where injured was at most a licensee and not an invitee, and upon the further ground that plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence. We see no logical escape from a full approval on both grounds of the ruling of the court below. In so doing we grant to plaintiff the status of an invitee in the building and even in the anteroom or urinal, but when he failed to enter the lighted room in search of the washbasin and proceeded to set hand and foot in a place filled with impenetrable darkness, we cannot believe that the invitation was broad enough to cover this wandering search conducted by him nor believe that he exercised ordinary care for his own safety.

Both plaintiff and defendant have marshaled a long line of cases, each contending for their applicability to the case at hand. We find none of them exactly parallel to this case; hence an extended review thereof would not be profitable. We do find, however, a case which altnough different in fact seems to be the same in principle and clearly in point. Powers v. Raymond, 197 Cal. 126, 239 P. 1069. Plaintiff there had been engaged by the proprietor of the Raymond Hotel in Pasadena to take charge of the hairdressing and manicurist department beginning work on December 22 or 23, 1923. She arrived at the hotel, however, on December 21st and was assigned to a room. The hotel was situated some distance from the Raymond Hotel Santa Fé Railway station, and in going to this station it was necessary to proceed through the hotel grounds for about three hundred feet, the remaining distance being along city streets. The hotel maintained a well-lighted and safely traversable roadway through the grounds, but there was also about fifty feet east therefrom a narrow pathway maintained for the use of guests during the season the hotel was in operation, it being closed to the general public at the time in question. Along this narrow pathway were laid three twelve-inch boards, side by side, lengthwise on the walk. The pathway was unlighted and it was impossible for any one passing along it in darkness at that time of night to discern whether or not it was passable. Plaintiff instead of following the main lighted roadway, knowingly entered the dark pathway. She admitted she could not see at all, it was so dark. Stumbling into a hole, she received severe injuries and brought suit against the hotel proprietor to recover damages therefor. She was on a mission of her own at the time. The court held that whether negligence could be inferred from the evidence was a question of law for the determination of the court, but whether it ought to be inferred was a question for the jury, and concluded that as a matter of law plaintiff was not an invitee on that particular portion of the premises; and, furthermore, that in proceeding along that particular pathway in known darkness, plaintiff, as a matter of law, was guilty of contributory negligence.

[2] It is well recognized that a person may be an invitee in a portion of a building and not enjoy that status as to other portions thereof. Powers v. Raymond, supra; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 52 P. 33, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153; Peebles v. Exchange Bldg. Co. (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 335; State Comp. Ins. Fund (Peterson, Intervener) v. Allen (Cal. App.) 285 P. 1053.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re RANDOLPH'S ESTATE.

RANDOLPH v. COLLISON.

L. A. 12577.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 29, 1931.

Proceeding by decedent's daughter attacking alleged surviving husband's petition for administration, alleging invalidity of marriage, and petitioning for probate of will executed before marriage, was "contest of will," authorizing motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 1714; Civ. Code, § 1300).

Proceeding was "contest of will" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1714, providing motion for new trial in probate proceeding can be made only in cases of contests of wills, in view of Civ. Code, § 1300, relating to revocation of will by testatrix's subsequent marriage, and that decree, finding marriage was invalid and permitting daughter, on making necessary proof, to probate will, permitted such probate on usual formal showing as to due execution, and like matters, and thus issue affecting validity of will was presented and determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Contest," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Wills ⚷317.

Statute prescribing as to which issues in will contest jury trial may be demanded does not limit issues (Code Civ. Proc. § 1312).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of May Wheeler Randolph, deceased. Petition by J. W. Randolph, alleged surviving husband, nominating and requesting the appointment of the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association as administrator, opposed by Anzonetta Lloyd Collison, who requested her own appointment and petitioned for the probate of decedent's alleged will. From an adverse decree, J. W. Randolph appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal.

WASTE, C. J.

Motion to dismiss. Claiming to be the surviving husband of May Wheeler Randolph, deceased, the appellant filed a petition in the court below nominating and requesting the appointment of the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association as administrator of her estate. The bank filed its petition requesting the issuance of letters to it as such nominee. Respondent, a daughter of the decedent, filed written objections to each of the petitions, alleging, in substance, that appellant was not legally married to the decedent at the time of her demise, and was not, therefore, in a position to nominate any one to serve as administrator of the estate. In addition, respondent requested that she be appointed administratrix of her mother's estate. She also filed a petition requesting the probate of what is alleged to be the decedent's last will and testament, and asking the appointment of an executor. These several petitions were heard together. Upon the conclusion of the evidence, the court found, among other things, that the purported marriage between decedent and appellant was illegal and void, for which reason he was not the surviving husband of the decedent, and therefore was not in a position to serve as, or to nominate any one to serve as, administrator of her estate; and that, upon making the necessary proof, respondent was entitled to have the will admitted to probate, and to be appointed administratrix of the estate. A decree in substantially the same language was accordingly entered on April 23, 1930. Appellant filed his intention to move for new trial on May 7, 1930, which was within ten days after service of notice of entry of judgment. Thereafter respondent moved to strike the motion for new trial from the files on the ground that such a motion was not available to appellant. No disposition was ever made of the motion to strike, but on June 27, 1930, the motion for new trial was denied. Thereupon, and on July 7, 1930, appellant filed his notice of appeal from the decree and each and every part thereof. It is thus apparent that the appeal was taken more than sixty days after the entry of the decree, and is therefore too late (section 1715, Code Civ. Proc.), unless the proceedings for new trial served to extend the time therefor (sections 1714 and 939, Code Civ. Proc.).

In support of her motion to dismiss, respondent urges that, under the provisions of section 1714, supra, proceedings by way of new trial were not available, and could not serve to extend the time for appeal. The section reads: "The provisions of part two of this code, relative to new trials and appeals, except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title, apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title; provided, that hereafter a motion for a new trial in probate proceedings can be made only in cases of contests of wills, either before or after probate, in proceedings under section one thousand six hundred and sixty-four of this code and in those cases where the issues of fact, of which a new trial is sought, were tried by a jury or were of such character as to entitle the parties to have them tried by a jury whether or not they were so tried." In opposition to the motion, appellant contends that the situation presented to the court below upon the hearing of the several petitions was a will "contest" within the meaning of section 1714, supra, so as to authorize the institution of new trial proceedings.

The record on appeal has not as yet been filed in this court, but, in connection with the motion to dismiss, there have been filed an affidavit, and an amended affidavit of the trial judge. In the original affidavit, he states that the "case was tried upon the theory that the court, among other things, was called upon to determine the validity or invalidity of the will presented for probate by respondent and objector Anzonetta Lloyd Collison; that in order to determine the validity or invalidity of said will and the consequent right of said respondent to probate same, it was necessary for affiant as such judge to receive evidence on and determine numerous issues of fact, among the more important of which were the following: (a) Was May Wheeler Randolph (formerly May Wheeler Moore) a bona fide resident of the county of Washoe, state of Nevada, at the time she obtained an alleged divorce from her first husband, James E. Moore? (b) Was the defendant in said divorce proceedings, to-wit, James E. Moore, duly, or at all, served with process in said divorce action? (c) Was the affidavit of service of summons filed in said divorce action fraudulent? (d) Was the petitioner, J. W. Randolph, a mulatto within the meaning of section 60 of the Civil Code of the state of California? And by reason of the determination of said issues of fact, the court was further called upon to determine whether J. W. Randolph, the petitioner, was the husband of the deceased, May Wheeler Randolph; that the petitioner, J. W. Randolph, throughout said trial contested the validity of the last will and testament of May Wheeler Winnett (Randolph) on the ground that the same was void by reason of his marriage to the said decedent after the making and execution of said will as provided by section 1300 of the Civil Code and alleged and urged that by reason thereof he was entitled to one-half of the property left by said decedent; that in order to determine the right of said J. W. Randolph to receive the said one-half of said estate, affiant was called upon to determine the validity or invalidity of the marriage of said J. W. Randolph to the deceased.

"That affiant heard testimony, received evidence and listened to argument upon all of the said issues of fact and did try the case upon the theory above set forth, and did make a final determination thereof as is more fully shown by findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment on file herein, and by the [notes] of the phonographic reporter who reported said proceedings."

The amended affidavit was made in order to more accurately state the issues before the trial court. It states in part that, "so far as I can find, no written opposition or contest to the probate of said will was filed; that at said trial proof was made by the petition of J. W. Randolph of a marriage ceremony entered into between him and the decedent, and evidence was introduced by the objector and contestant Anzonetta Lloyd Collison tending to show that said decedent had theretofore married one Moore and that a certain decree of divorce obtained in the state of Nevada by the decedent from said Moore, was void and of no effect, and that the subsequent marriage was, in consequence thereof, null and void; that the determination of this issue without question would determine the right of said petitioner to share in said estate as the surviving husband of said decedent, and also determine his right to nominate an administrator and, in view of the fact that the alleged marriage occurred after the execution of the will presented for probate, the determination of that issue would necessarily determine the validity or invalidity of said will so far as the issue of marriage is concerned. It is a fact, however, that at no time in the trial of said case was said will offered for probate or any evidence offered as to its execution, or was any proof made as to publication or notice of the probate thereof at any time. * * *

"The record further shows that thereafter the petition for probate of will was continued from time to time * * * pending the decision of the Supreme Court on the question at issue on appeal, which will determine the validity or invalidity of the will indirectly so far as the issue of marriage is concerned. * * *"

[1, 2] While this proceeding originated as one for letters of administration, there had also been filed a petition for the probate of decedent's last will, and from the foregoing affidavits it is apparent that the trial court concluded that it was required to determine under the allegations of these several petitions what effect, if any, appellant's marriage or purported marriage with the decedent had upon her previously executed will. Examination of the findings and the decree indicate that this issue was determined adversely to the appellant, and further, that respondent, upon making the usual formal showing as to due execution, etc., might thereafter have the will admitted to probate. An issue affecting the validity of the decedent's will was thus presented to, and determined by, the court below. This, in our opinion, constituted a "contest of will," at least in this particular, within the meaning of section 1714, supra, and warranted the institution of new trial proceedings. Section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not purport to define or enumerate all the issues that may be raised upon opposition to the probate of a will, but merely such issues as must be submitted to a jury if a jury is demanded. Alden v. Superior Court, 186 Cal. 309, 311, 199 P. 29. It follows, therefore, that the new trial proceedings extended the time for appeal.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

DELLEPIANI et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

S. F. 13982.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Genevieve Dellepiani and others for compensation for the death of Emilio Dellepiani, employee, opposed by the Market Street Railway Company. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation, the claimants bring certiorari.

Affirmed.

George C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J.

Emilio Dellepiani was on the 10th day of December, 1928, in the employ of the Market Street Railway Company as a car cleaner. The place of his employment was at the car barn of the company located at the southeast corner of San Jose avenue and Geneva avenue in the city of San Francisco. Dellepiani resided at 251 Tingley street, San Francisco, and in going to and from his work, he usually boarded one of the company's street cars at or near Tingley street and San Jose avenue, and traveled south on San Jose avenue some eight or nine blocks to Geneva avenue, where he would leave the street car and cross the street to his place of employment. The company permitted its employees to ride on its cars without paying fare, and for this purpose it issued to some of its employees, including Dellepiani, tickets, each one of which entitled the holder thereof to a ride free of charge. Dellepiani's work began at 5:30 in the evening and continued for ten hours. On the evening of December 10, 1928, following his usual custom, Dellepiani boarded one of the company's cars at or near Tingley street and rode therein to Geneva avenue and San Jose avenue, arriving there at about 5:28 o'clock. Upon the car stopping at that point, Dellepiani left the car and started to walk across San Jose avenue to the car barn, his place of employment, when he was run over by a passing automobile and killed. On this evening Dellepiani paid no fare for riding on the company's car. He was acquainted with the motorman, who admitted him to the car through the front door, and, when the conductor came forward to collect Dellepiani's fare, the motorman informed the conductor that Dellepiani was an employee of the company, and thereupon the conductor permitted him to ride free of charge and without collecting from him any fare or taking up his employee's ticket. Dellepiani left surviving him as dependents a wife and two minor children. An application was presented to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation by said dependents, which was denied by the commission on the ground that the injury sustained by Dellepiani and which caused his death did not arise out of or in the course of his employment with the respondent company.

The position of respondents is that Dellepiani at the time he met his death had not yet reached his employer's premises and "therefore the injury which caused his death did not arise out of or occur in the course of his employment." In other words, respondents rely upon "the coming and going rule," which denies to employees, or their dependents, any relief for an injury sustained while the employee is going to or returning from his work or place of employment.

On the other hand, petitioners contend that the facts of this case bring it within an exception to the above rule, which exception permits a recovery for an injury sustained by an employee whether going to or returning from his work, when the employer furnishes to the employee transportation to and from his place of employment. In the type of cases coming within this exception, it is held that, "where transportation is furnished by an employer, as an incident of the employment, to convey an employee to and from the place of employment, an injury suffered by the employee going or coming in the vehicle so furnished by the employer, and under the control of the employer, arises out of and is in the course of the employment within the meaning of the Compensation Act." Dominguez v. Pendola, 46 Cal. App. 220, 188 P. 1025, 1026; Harlan v. Ind. Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654.

In each of these two cases, however, the employee was injured while riding in the vehicle or conveyance provided by his employer for the express purpose of transporting the employee to the place of his employment. They differ in this respect from the present action where the facts show that the employee sustained the injury which caused his death after he had left the conveyance of his employer and while he was crossing a public street for the purpose of reaching the premises of his employer. The same may be said regarding the case of Lamm v. Silver Falls Timber Co. (Or.) 286 P. 527, cited and relied upon by petitioner. In that case the plaintiff was employed by the defendant at the latter's logging camp. The defendant maintained a logging railroad from its camp to the town of Silverton. Practically the only way to reach this camp was to take passage upon said railroad at Silverton, and to ride thereon to the logging camp. Defendant furnished free transportation on its said railroad to all of its employees. The plaintiff was a passenger on said railroad and was returning from a week-end visit with his family who resided at Silverton. The train, after moving at a speed of from fifteen to twenty miles per hour, stopped suddenly, with the result that the plaintiff was seriously injured. He instituted an action at law to recover damages sustained by reason of his injuries and recovered a judgment for $25,000. On appeal the Supreme Court of the state of Oregon reversed the judgment on the ground that the injury sustained by plaintiff was an industrial injury and one within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission of that state.

To the same effect are the Donovan Case, 217 Mass. 76, 104 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 778, and numerous other cases cited by counsel for petitioners in his points and authorities. In each and all of these cases the injury to the employee was sustained while such employee was being conveyed to or from his work in a conveyance furnished by his employer. In none of them was the question presented or decided as to the liability of the employer for an injury sustained by an employee while crossing a public street for the purpose of reaching the place of his employment, after leaving the conveyance of his employer.

Upon this latter question, and in support of their contention that the employee under such circumstances is within the protection of the Workmen's Compensation Act, petitioners have cited a large number of authorities. Among them are Cudahy Packing Co. v. Parramore, 263 U. S. 418, 44 S. Ct. 153, 68 L. Ed. 366, 30 A. L. R. 532; Le Blanc v. Ohio Oil Company, 7 La. App. 721; Lumberman's Reciprocal Ass'n v. Behnken, 112 Tex. 103, 246 S. W. 72, 28 A. L. R. 1042; and Procaccino v. E. Horton & Sons, 95 Conn. 408, 111 A. 594. A reading of these cases will show that each of them presents some special and particular feature that takes it out of the general rule applicable to injuries sustained upon public streets.

In the case of Cudahy Packing Co. v. Parramore, supra, the practicable way of ingress and egress for employees to and from the plant of the Cudahy Packing Company was along a way or road crossed by the track of the Rio Grande Western Railroad. While crossing this track in an automobile of a fellow employee, Parramore was killed. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed a judgment in favor of the dependents of Parramore. The basis of its decision may be found in the following statement found on page 426 of the opinion in 263 U. S., 44 S. Ct. 153, 155: "The railroad over which the way extended was not only immediately adjacent to the plant, but, by means of switches, was connected with it, and in principle it was as though upon the actual premises of the employer." In Le Blanc v. Ohio Oil Company, supra, the plant of the employer was bisected by a public highway. Employees were continually required in the performance of their duties to pass over this highway in going from one department of the plant to another. It was accordingly held that the employer by this peculiar location of its plant had made the intervening highway a part of its premises, and that, when an employee alighted thereon from a conveyance in which he was riding for the purpose of commencing his work, he was upon the premises of his employer, and any injury sustained while on said highway was an injury sustained while on the premises of his employer, and therefore it was an injury which arose out of and in the course of his employment. Practically the same state of facts was presented in the case of Lumberman's Reciprocal Association v. Behnken, supra. In Procaccino v. E. Horton & Sons, supra, the employee was injured while crossing over a footbridge along a path maintained by the employer over private property for the use of his employees in reaching his plant from the public highway. The Court held that, as the employer provided this means of approach to the place of employment, any injury sustained while using the same was an injury sustained on the premises of the employer and therefore compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Petitioners also cite, in support of their contention that the deceased was on the premises of his employer while crossing the street after leaving the street car of the company, the case of Howes v. Stark Bros. Nurseries & Orchards Co. (Mo. App.) 22 S.W.(2d) 839. They also rely upon Scott v. Willis, 150 Va. 260, 142 S. E. 400, 401, to support their claim that "going from street car to curb, or vice versa, is part of free transportation." Neither of these cases is applicable to the case now under consideration. They are cases in which the employer engaged to transport his employee in a private conveyance of his own to and from the place of employment. In those cases the engagement of the employer was to deliver his employees to the place of employment, and at the close of the employment to the homes of the employees. In such cases, if the employer compels or permits his employees to leave the vehicle in which they are being transported in the middle of the street, so that to reach their destination the employees are compelled to cross over a part or the whole of the street, any injury sustained by an employee while thus upon the street is compensable. This principle was aptly stated by the court in the case of Scott v. Willis, supra, in the following language: "We think it can certainly be said that the transportation of this claimant to his home was not completed until he had reached a point which exempted him from the risks incident to that particular journey. He was not relieved of the peculiar risks incident to his journey while alighting from the truck or while necessarily in that part of the highway allotted to vehicles as distinguished from the sidewalks allotted to pedestrians. As in most accidents, it is a question of seconds. We think in this case that his journey had not ended at the time of the claimant's injury; that he was in the act of leaving the vehicle of his employer, seeking a safe place on the sidewalk; and that the injury was so close in time and space as to be an incident of the transportation, and hence that it arose out of and in the course of his employment."

In the case of the deceased, the respondent railway company made no agreement to deliver him to the place of his employment, or to his home after the day's employment had ended. The agreement or undertaking between said employee and the company was that the latter would furnish free transportation to the employee on its street cars as the same were operated on and along the streets between the home of the employee and the premises of the company upon which the employee was employed. The intervening space between the employee's home and the place where he boarded said street cars and that in the street between the car tracks and the premises of his employer were not covered by or embraced within the agreement of the company to transport him on its cars. While crossing the street from the street car to his employer's premises he was not subjected to any of the hazards or dangers incident to the transportation which the company had agreed to furnish. These hazards were independent of and entirely distinct from those which might have been encountered or which might confront him after entering upon the employer's premises for the purpose of following his employment. They were hazards which the employee assumed when he entered upon the street for the purpose of reaching his place of employment, to the same extent as any other passenger who leaves a street car and crosses a public street risks the dangers of the street.

The theory upon which it is held that an injury sustained by an employee while traveling to or from work in a vehicle provided by the employer is compensable is that the transportation so furnished to the employee is an incident to his employment, and therefore the employee, while being transported, is engaged in the employer's business, and any injury sustained during said time is an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1923, p. 375). Dominguez v. Pendola, supra; Harlan v. Ind. Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654. It follows, therefore, that any injury sustained by the employee before the period of transportation has commenced, or after it has ended and before the employee has reached the employer's premises, would not be an injury arising out of or in the course of his employment. This was decided in a late case by the Supreme Court of Utah, Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., and reported in 269 P. 512, 513, 62 A. L. R. 1436. In that case the employer furnished free transportation by means of a truck operated by one of its employees from its section house to the place of employment. An employee named Massey, together with a number of his fellow workmen, lived near where the truck driver resided and kept his truck, which was about one mile from the section house. These workmen were in the habit of boarding the truck near their homes, and riding thereon to the section house. During one of these trips Massey was injured and sought to recover compensation for his injury. The Industrial Accident Commission made an award in his favor which was annulled by the court. In the course of the opinion, the court said: "Upon the facts, we think it plain that the employment in the present case included the transportation of the employee by the employer only from the section house to and from his place of work. That was the limit of the employer's engagement both with the employee and the truck driver. Before arrival at the section house in the morning, neither were under the control or direction of the employer. * * * We are led by the facts in this case to conclude that the relation or status of the parties herein as employer and employee did not exist until the employee reported for duty to the section house."

Another case with a similar ruling is that of De Voe v. New York State Rys., 218 N. Y. 318, 113 N. E. 256, 257, L. R. A. 1917A, 250. In that case the employee was furnished free transportation upon the railway of his employer. After he had finished work for the day and as he was hurrying from his place of employment to catch one of his employer's trains, which was just coming to a stop in front of the car barn in which he was employed, he was struck by an automobile while crossing the street, and sustained injuries which caused his death. It was held by the Court of Appeals of New York that the injury was not compensable, the court saying: "The question is whether death resulted from 'an accidental personal injury sustained by the employee arising out of and in the course of his employment.' * * * The employee is not insured generally against accident while working for the street railway corporation. At home or on the street he may meet with accident not arising out of or in the course of his employment. The act does not cover such cases. * * * He [the injured employee] was not injured while on duty * * * within the precincts of the company."

A third case in harmony with the two just cited is the case of Ex parte Taylor, or Taylor v. Birmingham Electric Co., 213 Ala. 282, 104 So. 527, 529. In that case Berry Taylor was an employee of the Birmingham Electric Company, and as part of his compensation received free transportation on the street cars of the company. He was fatally injured in a public street just after he had left one of the company's cars on his way from his place of employment to his home. His wife, sole dependent, was denied compensation by judgment of the circuit court, and on appeal therefrom the Supreme Court of the state of Alabama affirmed the judgment. In its opinion affirming the judgment, the court said: "The findings of fact, well supported by evidence set out in bill of exceptions, show deceased had left the street car and was in the public street when struck by a passing automobile. It was immaterial whether he alighted or was struck within the zone covered by passing street cars on the track. He was in the public street, using it as such, and such use had no relation to service for the employer, was not the premises of the employer within subd. (j) of our compensation law. We adhere fully to the principles declared in Ex parte Majestic Coal Co., 208 Ala. 86, 93 So. 728, and Ex parte Louisville & N. R. Co., 208 Ala. 216, 94 So. 289. Those cases and many others, holding that our Workmen's Compensation Law should have a liberal construction in furtherance of the humanitarian purposes leading to its enactment, are distinguishable from the case at bar."

It is our opinion that the principles announced in these three cases are sound, and that they govern the case now before us. The engagement of the employer in this case was to transport the deceased employee to a point along its line nearest his place of employment. Beyond that point and until he reached the premises of his employer, whether that distance was the width of only a part of an ordinary street, or whether it was a block or more, the employee was not under the control, direction, or protection of the employer. He could choose any route of travel, and any means of conveyance that might appear to him to be feasible or desirable to reach the premises of his employer. The latter was without any authority or right to govern or interfere with the movements of the employee during this period of time. Under this state of facts, it cannot be held that the employee had either reached his employer's premises or was being conveyed thereto by his employer. The injury thus sustained was not one which arose out of or in the course of his employment. On the other hand, it was sustained by the employee while on his way to the premises of his employer and under such circumstances as to bring him within the "coming and going rule" as announced by the court in the case of the Ocean Acc., etc., Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 173 Cal. 313, 159 P. 1041, L. R. A. 1917B, 336.

We have not attempted to analyze and distinguish all of the authorities which the industry of counsel has assembled and cited in his points and authorities in this proceeding. We have, we think, given consideration to the principal cases cited, and sufficient to indicate that the award of the commission must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

In re SHOEMAKE et al.

S. F. 13429.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1931.

1. Deeds 🔑93.

Grantor's intention must be ascertained from entire deed.

2. Remainders 🔑1.

Remainders are construed as vested rather than contingent, wherever possible.

3. Deeds 🔑97.

Where habendum clause of deed is ambiguous, granting clause controls (Civ. Code, § 1070).

> Civ. Code, § 1070, provides that if several parts of a grant are irreconcilable, the former part prevails.

4. Deeds 🔑133(1).

Where granting clause of deed to grantor's son, made while grantee had daughter living, was to grantee "and his heirs," and habendum clause was to grantee "during his natural life, and to issue and heirs" of his body, grantee took life estate, with remainder to grantee's issue who became heirs of his body, and grantee's daughter took contingent remainder.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Fresno county denying the claim of appellants to undivided interests in certain real property.

The land was originally owned by B. B. Barnett. On March 14, 1890, he executed a deed of it to his son, F. Joseph Barnett. The instrument recites that "the said party of the first part * * * doth by these presents, give, grant, alien and confirm unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs, all those certain lots. * * *" Following is a description of the property and then the habendum clause: "To have and to hold all and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, for and during his natural life, and to the issue and heirs of the body of the said party of the second part." At the time of the execution and delivery of this deed, the grantee had a daughter living, Lela Barnett. The grantor died April 17, 1891. Thereafter the grantee, F. Joseph Barnett, brought an action against his daughter, his brothers, and his sisters, claiming title to the property in fee simple. It was eventually held that the deed gave him only a life estate. Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 P. 1049. It necessarily follows from this decision that the daughter had an estate in remainder.

Lela Barnett never married, and died on March 11, 1909. F. Joseph Barnett never had any other issue. He died March 29, 1928.

[1] The appellants are the successors in interest of Lela Barnett. The respondents are the legal representatives of B. B. Barnett, the original grantor, his heirs, and successors in interest of his heirs. A single question is presented on this appeal. It is agreed by all parties that under the decision in Barnett v. Barnett, supra, Lela Barnett had an estate in remainder, but the disagreement is as to whether it was vested or contingent. If it vested in her immediately upon the execution and delivery of the deed, then she had at all times an alienable interest, and one that would descend to her heirs. If it was contingent until the death of her father, the holder of the life estate, then she never received any estate, since she predeceased her father. The claims of appellants, of course, are based upon the theory that the remainder was vested in Lela Barnett upon its creation.

The language which must be interpreted is in the granting and habendum clauses of the deed. The granting clause clearly refers "to his heirs." The habendum refers "to the issue and heirs of the body" of the grantee. If this last clause had used only the word "issue," there could be no doubt that under it, Lela Barnett, as the daughter of the grantee, would have acquired a vested remainder. See Cal. Civ. Code, § 694; In re De Vries, 17 Cal. App. 184, 119 P. 109; Miller v. Oliver, 54 Cal. App. 495, 202 P. 168; Estate of Backesto, 71 Cal. App. 409, 235 P. 670; 23 R. C. L. 533, § 77. And if it contained only the words "heirs of the body," it is equally clear that she would not have acquired a vested remainder but would have had a contingent interest only, subject to her surviving the holder of the life estate and becoming his heir. County of Los Angeles v. Winans, 13 Cal. App. 234, 109 P. 640; Hall v. Wright, 17 Cal. App. 502, 120 P. 429. The terms, used separately, have each a different legal effect, and it becomes our task to determine what can be their effect when coupled together in this manner. The question is, of course, as to the grantor's intention, which must be ascertained from an examination of the entire instrument, in the light of certain established rules of construction.

[2] There are two chief grounds upon which it is contended that the remainder vested in Lela Barnett at the time of the execution of the deed. One is that she was clearly embraced within the meaning of the term "issue" and, irrespective of other provisions in the instrument, took a vested remainder by virtue of that language. This is reinforced by the other proposition that, wherever possible, a remainder will be construed to be vested rather than contingent. In re De Vries, 17 Cal. App. 184, 119 P. 109; Estate of Washburn, 11 Cal. App. 735, 106 P. 415; 1 Tiffany, Real Property, 577; 3 Thompson, Real Property, 206.

On the other hand, it is just as clear that Lela Barnett never came within the meaning of the words "heirs of his body." In order to apply the rule of construction just referred to, it would be necessary either to ignore this language, or to consider it as the equivalent of, or at least not in conflict with, the term "issue." But it hardly appears reasonable that when the grantor referred to "issue and heirs of his body" he meant "issue or heirs of his body." The language was not aptly chosen to indicate that a person coming under either class would be sufficient. It rather appears that the words "issue and heirs of his body" were intended to be read together, and together constituted a description of the class of persons who should take the remainder. This being so, can we ignore part of the language? Is it not reasonable to conclude that he intended the property to go to such of his issue as were heirs of his body; that is, such issue as survived him?

[3] While the foregoing discussion is somewhat speculative, it cannot be denied that the interpretation sought by appellants requires, in effect, the striking out of vital words in the deed. It is also true that the interpretation of the respondent requires, if not the striking out of the word "issue," at least the modification of its ordinary meaning by reason of other language used in connection with it. We should find difficulty in supporting this latter interpretation were it not for an additional element which seems almost conclusive. The granting clause does not mention "issue"; the grant is to Barnett "and to his heirs." The word "issue" is found only in the habendum. While the habendum clause may limit the estate apparently granted, where it is itself ambiguous there is every reason for holding the granting clause as controlling. Indeed, the statute expressly provides that if several parts of a grant are irreconcilable, the former part prevails. Cal. Civ. Code, § 1070; see Barnett v. Barnett, supra.

[4] There are, moreover, certain indications of the grantor's intent to be derived from the circumstances existing at the date of the grant. At that time Lela Barnett was living and could have been specially mentioned; she was not. She might have been clearly identified as the holder of a vested remainder by the use of the term "children" without other language, but was not. What could the grantor have had in mind? Certainly not the intention to provide for Lela Barnett in particular, but in general for his descendants, including Lela Barnett. The intention to have his property go to persons in his own line of descent seems plain. If, however, a vested remainder came to Lela Barnett, it was possible for her prior to her actual possession of the property to alien her future interest so that it might go to strangers. Again, the grantor's intent that the grantee, F. Joseph Barnett, should take only a life estate, is satisfactorily established in the earlier decision of this court. Lela Barnett's heirs were her mother and F. Joseph Barnett, her father. When she died, her father became heir to half of her estate. If her interest in the property granted by B. B. Barnett, was vested, then her father had a vested remainder in fee simple in property in which the grantor intended that he should have only a life estate. Such a result would be destructive of the grantor's purposes, and an interpretation which leads to it should be avoided.

Our conclusion is that the effect of the deed was to grant a life estate to F. Joseph Barnett, with a remainder to such of his issue as became heirs of his body. Lela Barnett, as a possible heir of his body, had a contingent remainder which vanished when she predeceased the holder of the life estate. Her successors in interest therefore take nothing.

It follows that the judgment must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

WEDDLE v. HEATH.

S. F. 13382.

Supreme Court of California.
Jan. 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied and Opinion Amended Feb. 24, 1931.

1. Negligence ⚿32(1).

Owner of premises need only use ordinary care for safety of invitees.

2. Negligence ⚿134(3).

Where injured person failed to satisfactorily explain accident and admitted injury from moving belt was obvious, owner of premises was not liable to injured person as invitee.

3. Negligence ⚿67.

One injured by coming in contact with moving belt, portion of pumping machinery, held guilty of contributory negligence.

4. Master and servant ⚿296(3).

Instruction denying employer right to rely to any extent upon employee's contributory negligence if jury believed place of work was unsafe held erroneous (St. 1911, p. 796, § 1; St. 1917, p. 862, §§ 34, 35).

The instruction was, in substance, that statute law makes it unlawful for employer to permit employee to be in any employment or place of employment which is not safe, and that, if jury found employer was violating statute law at time and place employee was injured and that such violation of statute proximately caused injuries, then law conclusively presumes that employee was not guilty of contributory negligence.

5. Master and servant ⚿101, 102(1).

Statute relating to violation of statute providing for safety of employees applies to specific requirements set forth by statute imposing specific duties upon employer (St. 1911, p. 796, § 1).

6. Release ⚿12(2).

Consideration is unnecessary where writing is plain and explicit and given for express purpose of effecting complete release of obligation (Civ. Code, § 1541).

7. Release ⚿24(2).

Notice of rescission with tender back of amount received are indispensable prerequisites to successful showing that by mutual mistake or upon other grounds release should be rescinded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by E. C. Weddle against F. E. Heath. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, Frank J. Creede, and Gordon S. Keith, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

This is an action for damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff by coming into contact with a rapidly moving endless belt running on revolving pulleys, a part of certain pumping machinery located on the lands of defendant. Plaintiff had a verdict for $15,000, followed by judgment in said sum, from which defendant has appealed on a bill of exceptions.

The amended complaint is in six counts, all having for their basis the charge of negligence, in that defendant failed to properly guard the said pumping machinery or, putting it in another form, that defendant failed to furnish a safe place in which plaintiff might perform his work in connection with the use of said pump for irrigation purposes.

The first four causes of action set forth in the complaint count upon the relation of master and servant between defendant and plaintiff; the remaining counts rest upon the relation of invitor and invitee between the same parties.

It will be observed that, under the relation of employer and employee, the rule of damages and negligence is modified by the so-called Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796), the first section of which, so far as here material, is as follows: "In any action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained * * * by an employee while engaged in the line of his duty or the course of his employment as such, * * * in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of ordinary or reasonable care of the employer * * * the fact that such employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery therein where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross, in comparison * * * and it shall be conclusively presumed that such employee was not guilty of contributory negligence * * * where the violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to such employee's injury; and it shall not be a defense: (1) That the employee either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of. (2) That the injury * * * was caused in whole or in part by the want of ordinary or reasonable care of a fellow servant."

Under the relation of invitor and invitee, it is conceded that ordinary common-law rules of negligence and contributory negligence obtain. The difference between these two sets of causes of action are important in the discussion of many serious questions urged by defendant and appellant, which said questions may be summarized as follows:

(1) That the relation of employer and employee did not exist between the defendant and plaintiff, but instead that the plaintiff was the employee of the brother of defendant, who, as an independent contractor, had charge of the premises upon which the pumping machinery which caused plaintiff's injuries was located.

(2) That, conceding that plaintiff was an invitee on defendant's premises, defendant is not liable, as any danger there encountered by plaintiff was obvious and moreover was well known to and appreciated by him.

(3) That, in any event, plaintiff's own negligence defeats the cause of action resting upon the foundation of invitee and likewise the cause of action resting upon the foundation of employee, in that the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff was so gross as to overcome in comparison any negligence of any kind on the part of defendant.

(4) That plaintiff released defendant's brother from the cause of action in suit and from any standpoint defendant and his brother were joint tort-feasors, and the release of the one summarily released the other.

(5) Defendant also complains of numerous instructions, some of which are to be hereinafter mentioned.

(6) Lastly, defendant makes complaint of certain rulings of the court during the progress of the trial.

We are not required to consider all of these questions, as the course of the appeal will be determined short of this full task. The facts out of which the causes of action arose may now be set out more fully.

Plaintiff, then a man of about 28 years of age, experienced since the age of about 13 in the use of machinery similar to that in question, and familiar for several years with the specific machinery in question, was injured, as above noted, on July 14, 1926, by coming in contact with a moving belt, a portion of certain pumping machinery. The evidence fails to show with any great degree of certainty just how the accident occurred. It is, however, shown that on the day in question plaintiff had been left in charge of the ranch and of the pump used to irrigate the orange orchard thereon. He had shut the machinery down just prior to the injury and had oiled the pump, and, after starting the motor, had observed that everything was in its usual ordinary working condition except that, after starting it again, he heard what he thought was a squeak in a bearing inclosed in boxing and resting upon a cement pier. While standing in front of the wheel carrying the belt, he thinks he stooped over to listen for this noise and may have put his hand on the covering over the bearing. In turning either to the left or to the right, he does not recall which, he remembers nothing further as to what happened except that he was found a distance of some eight feet from this position badly injured in the arm, and he had evidently been unconscious for an unknown period of time. He was wearing a shirt with the sleeves rolled up rather loosely. An examination of the machinery after the accident disclosed that shreds of his shirt were embedded in the belt and also on the boxing inclosing the said bearing, and he found the right sleeve torn in shreds up to the neck of the garment. From these facts it is easily deducible that plaintiff unintentionally came in contact with the moving belt and was probably thrown against the pulley, resulting in his being hurled some eight feet to the place where he found himself upon regaining consciousness. It is useless to recount the injuries received by him except to say that they were serious and permanent, resulting among other things, in practically the entire loss of use of his right arm.

The pump was electrically driven, and was located in a house on a north and south line therein, being nearer the westerly than the easterly wall thereof. Plaintiff was injured at the northwest end, but there was a reasonable amount of space for him to stand or move about the place where he was injured without contact with the belt or machinery. It is true that the machinery was not guarded by a rail, housing, or any other method, but plaintiff, as above noted, was well acquainted with it and with dangers incident thereto. He offers as an excuse for his injury that he thought he was standing a safe distance from the endless belt. Plaintiff, over objection of appellant, introduced certain safety orders of the Industrial Accident Commission, which showed that such regulations, if applicable, would have necessitated the installation of a guard or protection of some other kind on this machinery. Expert evidence along the same line was also admitted over objection.

The relation between defendant and his brother was as follows: Defendant, F. E. Heath, about the year 1921, owned certain orange grove lands near Lindsay, Cal. At that time he induced his brother, who was then residing in Michigan, to come and reside upon one of the tracts of land. Accordingly, about 1922, defendant's brother, L. W. Heath, established a residence upon one of said tracts and he and defendant entered into a contract whereby for $50 per acre per annum he would cultivate, irrigate, and sucker said orange groves, and, as defendant sold portions of the tract or added others, the brother's contract was to contract or expand accordingly. The place where the injury occurred was known as the Decker place, which defendant acquired some years prior to 1926. This arrangement between the brothers had obtained as to management of the ranch for some time prior to the date of the accident and during all the times in question. The fertilizing of the soil, spraying of the trees, and picking of the fruit were not covered by the contract between defendant and his brother, but this work too was superintended by the brother. Over a period of years plaintiff had frequently been engaged and paid by the brother to work upon various properties owned by defendant and had worked in the various departments of the labor thereon.

For several years plaintiff had been employed at various times by the brother to work at the place in question. Likewise he had over a period of years been assisting in the use of said pumping machinery for the irrigation of said properties. He had used the pump when it was driven by gasoline and later when it was driven by electricity. He was as familiar with the pump as the brothers themselves. Just prior to the accident the brother had returned to his former home in Michigan on business and had left plaintiff in charge of the said ranch and said pump, and it was while using the pump under the above agreement that the accident occurred. Plaintiff was paid invariably with the check of the brother and never by the check of defendant. During the absence of the brother in Michigan, and during the period plaintiff was in charge of the property, defendant visited it at one time to inspect conditions on the ranch. When plaintiff received said injuries, he incurred a doctor's bill of some $325, which the brother paid, and the brother also sent plaintiff in cash the sum of $50. The exact date when the original complaint was filed does not appear in the record, but it is in evidence that plaintiff started the action prior to June 6, 1927, and that he included as defendants certain fictitious names. He approached the brother with the idea of causing summons to be served upon him as a codefendant in the action in lieu of one of said fictitious persons, whereupon the brother caused his attorney to prepare, and plaintiff executed without further consideration than the items above mentioned, the following release: "The undersigned, for and in consideration of the sum of three hundred seventy-five dollars ($375.00), does hereby release, cancel, discharge and satisfy all claims, demands, charges, sums due for any money or demands whatsoever, either for damages accruing or heretofore accrued or claimed to have accrued in favor of the undersigned and I do bind my heirs, executors and administrators by these presents. The purpose of this agreement is to show my good faith in relieving Louis W. Heath from any and all liability by reason of any damage heretofore suffered which I realize he is not responsible for. Executed at Lindsay, California, June 6, 1927, E. C. Weddle."

The court instructed the jury on both theories of plaintiff's causes of action and gave two instructions at the request of plaintiff, denominated Nos. 9 and 29, to which strenuous exception is made. One of these instructions will be made the subject of discussion hereafter.

[1] The contention that, under the evidence, plaintiff as a matter of law, was not the employee of defendant, but was the employee of the independent contractor, the brother, we are not required to resolve on appeal, as upon other grounds the case must be reversed. Defendant, of course, admits that plaintiff was an invitee upon his premises, but contends that the danger to which he was exposed was an obvious one, which position we think must be sustained. The rule in this respect is well stated in the case of Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 555, 197 P. 793, 794, where the court says: "A person so invited upon the premises of another may recover from such owner 'for any injuries received owing to the dangerous condition of the premises known' to the owner and not known to the person so invited; but such owner 'is not bound to keep his premises absolutely safe.' 29 Cyc. 453. The responsibility of such owner for the safety of such person in such a case is not absolute; he is only required to use ordinary care for the safety of the persons he invites to come upon the premises. If there is a danger attending upon such entry, or upon the work which the person invited is to do thereon, and, such danger arises from causes or conditions not readily apparent to the eye, it is the duty of the owner to give such person reasonable notice or warning of such danger. But such owner is entitled to assume that such invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses. He is not required to give to the invitee notice or warning of an obvious danger. 29 Cyc. 471, 474; 26 Cyc. 1213." See, also, Dobbie v. Pac., etc., Co., 95 Cal. App. 781, 273 P. 630; 15 Cal. Jur. 1058.

[2, 3] Plaintiff not only fails to satisfactorily explain the accident, but also admits that the injury to which he was exposed was obvious, justifying himself only by the statement that he thought he was a safe distance from the belt; therefore we conclude that the evidence fails to sustain the causes of action predicated upon the theory of invitor and invitee, and for this reason it was error to submit this issue to the jury. On the same facts it necessarily follows that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Ergo v. Merced Falls, etc., Co., 161 Cal. 334, 339, 119 P. 101, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79; Brett v. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 274, 94 P. 1051. Whether this negligence of plaintiff was slight in comparison with the negligence, if any, of the defendant need not at this time be determined, inasmuch as the facts may differ on a retrial of the cause.

[4, 5] It is here appropriate to discuss plaintiff's instruction No. 9, reading as follows: "You are instructed that the statute law of this state makes it unlawful for any employer to require, permit or suffer any employee to go or be in any employment or place of employment which is not safe, and no such employer shall fail to furnish, provide and use safety devices and safeguards or fail to adopt and use methods and processes reasonably adequate to render such employment and place of employment safe, and no such employer shall fail or neglect to do every other thing reasonably necessary to protect the life and safety of such employees, and no such employer shall occupy or maintain any place of employment that is not safe; and the statute referred to in this instruction was enacted for the safety of employees, and in this connection I charge you that if you find that defendant Frank E. Heath was the employer of E. C. Weddle and was violating such statute law at the time and place that said E. C. Weddle was injured, and you further find from the evidence that such violation of such statute proximately caused the injuries described in the complaint to the said E. C. Weddle, then and in that event the law conclusively presumes that said E. C. Weddle was not guilty of contributory negligence and you must so find."

It is manifest that this instruction is intended to apply that portion of section 1 of the Roseberry Act, relating to a violation of a statute providing for the safety of employees, to sections 34 and 35 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 862), which provide generally that the employer may not allow the employee to be in a place of employment which is not safe, but must furnish for the use of the employee safety devices and safeguards, and must adopt all methods and processes reasonably adequate to make the place of employment safe and must do every other thing reasonably necessary to protect the life and safety of the employee. The instruction does not set forth any specific requirement of any section of the law that might be here involved. It simply leaves the question to the jury as to whether or not the defendant did everything reasonably necessary to protect the life and safety of his employees, or, putting it in other language, the defendant is denied the right to rely to any extent upon the contributory negligence of plaintiff if the jury believed, for any cause, known or unknown, that the place where plaintiff performed his work was unsafe.

We cannot come to any other conclusion than that the giving of this instruction was serious and far-reaching error. The Workmen's Compensation Act followed and did not precede the Roseberry Act, and its provisions are largely a restatement of the general common-law principles applicable to the law of negligence. It has always been the duty of the employer to exercise ordinary care in providing a safe place for the servant to work and in providing all reasonable safeguards for him while engaged in such work. These sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act do little more than codify said principles. We think it must be held that the provisions of section 1 of the Roseberry Act are intended to apply to concrete and specific requirements set forth by statute entailing specific duties upon an employer. Any other construction would for all practical purposes destroy the right to rely to any extent upon the contributory negligence of the servant. No specific construction of this act has been made, but the question is inferentially discussed in Frinier v. C. J. Kubach Co., 177 Cal. 722, 726, 171 P. 952.

[6] We are next to examine the so-called release executed by plaintiff to L. W. Heath and set out above. If the release is valid as to L. W. Heath and he and the defendant are joint tort-feasors, it is clear that such release is binding on plaintiff until avoided upon some ground authorized by law for the rescission of a written instrument. In this connection, the court instructed the jury as follows: "I instruct you that if you believe from the evidence that the instrument offered by F. E. Heath as a release in his favor from the plaintiff, was not supported by a valid consideration, then and in that event said purported release is not a bar to the plaintiff's action or a defense available to the defendant F. E. Heath."

It must be admitted that, if the said L. W. Heath was an independent contractor on the property of F. E. Heath, he owed plaintiff, his employee, at least the same if not greater duty than the defendant to guard and protect the machinery in question. We think also that, even if the relation between the two brothers was only that of master and servant, in this particular case at least it was L. W. Heath's duty in any event to provide a safe place for the plaintiff to work. It is not always true that master and servant are joint tort-feasors where a tort is committed, but that may well be their relation and it is where they both participate in the commission of the tort. The rule is stated in Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 563, 204 P. 19, 22, as follows: "In the prosecution of actions for causes ex delicto all persons concerned in the commission of the tort may be joined as defendants, or either or any of them may be sued severally, and where an employer and an employee have participated in a tortious act against a third person, they may be jointly sued for damages. Rogers v. Ponet, 21 Cal. App. 577, 581, 132 P. 851."

But if either of the above propositions is sound, then the release becomes a material factor in this case, at least when weighing the above instruction given by the court. We then first inquire: Was the giving of the instruction that a consideration was required for said instrument error? If section 1541 of the Civil Code is to be respected, it must be so held. Said section reads: "An obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor, upon a new consideration, or in writing, with or without new consideration." Said section was taken from section 741 of the Field Draft of the New York Civil Code, reading as follows: "An obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor, upon a new consideration, or under seal." The Code commissioner's note recommending its adoption reads as follows: "A release under seal extinguishes the debt, notwithstanding the provision of the Revised Statutes allowing the want of consideration for a sealed instrument to be shown (Stearns v. Tappin, 5 Duer [12 N. Y. Super. Ct.] 294). But by the present law, a release, with neither a seal nor a new consideration, is void Von Gerhard v. Lighte, 13 Abb. Prac. [N. Y.] 101; Seymour v. Minturn, 17 Johns. [N. Y.] 169 [8 Am. Dec. 380]; Dewey v. Derby, 20 Johns. [N. Y.] 462; Jackson v. Stackhouse, 1 Cow. [N. Y.] 122 [13 Am. Dec. 514]. The justice of its restrictions may well be doubted. The commissioners recommend the substitution of the words 'in writing' for 'under seal'."

When our state adopted the section, we apparently accepted it by putting in effect substantially the suggested amendment of the New York Code Commissioner. It has several times been clearly intimated that a consideration is not necessary where the writing is plain and explicit and given for the express purpose of effecting a complete release of the obligation. Upper San Joaquin Canal Co. v. Roach, 78 Cal. 552, 21 P. 304; Rogers v. Kimball, 121 Cal. 247, 253, 254, 53 P. 648. The department opinion in the latter case is found in 5 Cal. Unrep. 725, 731, 49 P. 719, 721, where it is said: "This section gives to a release 'in writing' the same effect as was given at common law to a release under seal, which is in general valid without reference to the consideration." See, also, Jordan v. Scott, 38 Cal. App. 739, 742, 177 P. 504.

[7] Further considering the release in question, we cannot but say that plaintiff is estopped by his own deliberate act to deny that the $375 received by him was a proper consideration therefor, although there is evidence which supports the view that the doctor's bill was a voluntary gift, but in reality the action of the brother was an attempt to compensate the plaintiff without admitting liability to him. This being true and the claim being unliquidated, notice of rescission together with a tender back of the amount received would be indispensable prerequisites to a successful showing that by mutual mistake or upon other grounds the release should be rescinded. Garcia v. California Truck Co., 183 Cal. 767, 192 P. 708; Winstanley v. Ackerman (Cal. App.) 291 P. 273.

Discussion of many other assignments might be had, but we deem the above sufficient.

The judgment is reversed.

LOS ANGELES & WEST SIDE TRANSPORTATION CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al.

S. F. 13831.

Supreme Court of California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

Since constitutional amendment, license tax, as distinguished from property tax, may not be imposed on transportation companies operating as common carriers, as defined therein (Const. art. 13, § 15).

> Const. art. 13, § 15, adopted in 1926, provides for tax on property of those operating motor vehicles for hire in transportation of persons or property on public highways as common carriers, operating between fixed termini or over regular routes, and contemplates tax based on percentage of gross receipts, providing that such taxes shall be in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, whether state, county, or municipal, on such property.

2. Statutes 🔑250.

Where repealing act and amending statute were approved same day, repeal to be effective subsequent to amendment, amendment fell with original act on effective date of repeal (St. 1925, p. 833, amended by St. 1927, p. 1742, and repealed by St. 1927, p. 1708).

3. Licenses 🔑8(2).

Whether repeal, without saving clause, of statute imposing license tax, takes away right to collect unpaid tax, depends on legislative intention.

4. Licenses 🔑8(2).

Rule that repeal, without saving clause, of statute imposing license tax abrogates right to collect unpaid tax, does not apply, where contemporaneous enactments show intent to continue revenue from particular source in same or similar form.

> In such case, general rule would not apply, and those subject to payment under repealed act would be held for payment under continued revenue plan.

5. Automobiles 🔑74.

Unpaid license taxes held collectible by state against transportation companies operating as common carriers, notwithstanding repeal of statutes before action, in view of constitutional amendment continuing same system, as regards such carriers (St. 1923, p. 706; St. 1925, p. 833, amended by St. 1927, p. 1742, and repealed by St. 1927, p. 1708; Const. art. 13, § 15).

> State may collect such tax against such carriers as defined in constitutional amendment, notwithstanding general rule that repeal, without saving clause, of statute imposing license tax, abrogates right to collect due and unpaid tax, in view of Const. art. 13, § 15. adopted before St. 1927, p. 1708 (repealing St. 1925, p. 833), wherein is evinced clear purpose to continue state revenue exaction from such common carriers, based on fixed percentage of gross receipts.

6. Automobiles 🔑74.

Unpaid gross receipts license taxes held not collectible by state against contract carriers not included in constitutional amendment, in view of repeal of statutes before commencement of action (St. 1923, p. 706; St. 1925, p. 833, amended by St. 1927, p. 1742, and repealed by St. 1927, p. 1708; Const. art. 13, § 15).

> Such due and unpaid taxes cannot be collected by state against carriers not operating as common carriers between fixed termini and over regular routes, since Const. art. 13, § 15, does not continue such taxes against such private carriers, and hence general rule applies that repeal, without saving clause, of such statute, deprives state of right to collect such taxes.

7. Automobiles 🔑100.

Superior Court had jurisdiction of actions against motor carriers for unpaid license tax under repealed statutes, and to determine whether defendants were carriers of class subject to tax (St. 1923, p. 706; St. 1925, p. 833, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1742, and repealed by St. 1927, p. 1708; Const. art. 13, § 15).

This is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent Superior Court from proceeding with the trial of an action pending in said court to recover on behalf of the state certain license taxes imposed on motor vehicles for hire. A determination of the proceeding requires a review of the legislation on the subject.

[1, 2] At its session in 1923 the Legislature passed an act to impose a license fee, measured at 4 per cent. of the gross receipts, for the transportation of persons or property for hire by motor vehicles upon public streets, roads and highways of the state. The act was approved on June 13, 1923, and by its terms became effective on January 1, 1924. St. 1923, p. 706.

At its session in 1925 the Legislature passed an act on the same subject, and repealed the 1923 statute. St. 1925, p. 833. The 1925 statute changed the 1923 act in minor particulars, but in substance was a re-enactment and continuation of the 1923 act. Bacon Service Corporation v. Huss, 199 Cal. 21, 248 P. 235. In the 1925 act the license tax was also fixed at 4 per cent. of the gross receipts from operations.

At its session in 1925 the Legislature proposed a constitutional amendment adding section 15 to article 13 and providing for a tax on the property of persons, firms, and corporations operating motor vehicles for hire in the transportation of persons or property on the public highways of the state as common carriers operating between fixed termini or over regular routes. This proposal contemplated a tax based on 4¼ per cent. of the gross receipts in the case of common carriers of persons, and 5 per cent. on common carriers of property, subject to the power of the Legislature to change the percentage by a two-thirds vote. It also contained the following provision: "Such taxes shall be in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, state, county and municipal, upon the property above enumerated of such companies." This constitutional amendment was adopted at the general election held on November 2, 1926.

In an apparent endeavor to comply with the new constitutional scheme of providing revenue from this class of motor vehicle transportation and use of the highways of the state, the Legislature, at its session in 1927, enacted certain legislation. By an act approved March 5, 1927, effective immediately, sections 3664aa, 3670bb, and 3670cc were added to the Political Code (St. 1927, p. 17), to carry into effect the newly adopted constitutional provision in so far as the latter was not self-executing. Section 3664aa was again amended in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 1554), but in no way affecting this controversy. The license tax act of 1925 was also amended as to sections 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, and 9 thereof (St. 1927, p. 1742). This enactment was by its terms to become effective on October 1, 1927. On the same day that the latter act was approved, to wit, May 31, 1927, the Governor approved an act to repeal in toto the 1925 act. St. 1927, p. 1708. By its terms the repealing act became effective on January 1, 1928. On the same day, to wit, May 31, 1927, an act was approved amending section 77 of "The California Vehicle Act," wherein the registration fees on all motor vehicles used for the transportation of persons or property for hire were substantially increased. St. 1927, p. 1708. By the terms of this act it was to become effective when the act repealing the 1925 License Tax Act should become effective; namely, on January 1, 1928. This direction was rendered ineffective by reason of the fact that the act containing it was subjected to the referendum and its effective date was suspended until after its approval by the electors of the state at the general election held on November 6, 1928. At the same 1927 session the Legislature, in order to provide further revenue for highway purposes, increased the gasoline tax on motor vehicle consumption from two to three cents. St. 1927, p. 1565.

The foregoing review of our legislation indicates that the Legislature intended to conform to the new plan of providing revenue from the operations of motor vehicles for hire as contemplated by the constitutional amendment of 1926. From and after the adoption of that amendment, any license tax, as distinguished from a property tax, could not be imposed on common carriers as defined in the constitutional amendment. As to carriers for compensation other than common carriers, the act of 1925 was amended and continued in force to January 1, 1928, when the repealing act went into effect, on which day also the act amending the California Vehicle Act with reference to increased registration fees on all carriers for hire was intended to take effect, but, as stated, did not then become operative because of the filing of a referendum petition against it.

[3, 4] With the foregoing legislation in mind, we approach the problem affected by it and presented by the application herein, wherein it appears that the petitioner is a corporation engaged at all times involved in the controversy in the business of transporting persons and property for hire by means of motor vehicles operated on the public highways of the state.

On March 16, 1928, the Attorney General commenced an action in the respondent Superior Court to recover from the petitioner certain unpaid and delinquent license taxes alleged to have accrued to the state during the years 1924 and 1925 under the acts of 1923 and 1925 above referred to. This action was one of a hundred or more similar actions brought in the same court for the same purpose about the same time. The petitioner appeared and filed a demurrer to the complaint, asserting, among other things, that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and that the court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the action, for the reason that the legislation authorizing the collection of said license taxes had been wholly repealed by the Repealing Act effective January 1, 1928. The basis of the contention was and now is that said Repealing Act (St. 1927, p. 1708) was unqualified and contained no saving clause preserving to the state the right to pursue the collection of license taxes accrued but unpaid under the repealed legislation. The demurrer was sustained on grounds other than the jurisdictional one, an amended complaint was filed, and the state and the respondent court are proceeding to set the case for trial and to adjudicate the cause, notwithstanding the petitioner's objections of want of jurisdiction in the court so to do.

It is the contention of the petitioner that the act of 1927 repealing the act of 1925 without a saving clause rendered the cause of action on behalf of the state for the collection of the license tax unenforceable. The contention is based on the general rule stated in volume 25 of Ruling Case Law, at page 940, as follows: "The repeal, without a saving clause or provision, of a statute imposing a license tax or fee takes away the right to collect an unpaid tax which is due even though a suit to collect the tax is pending. By the repeal of statutes which authorize the making of assessments and the collection thereof, not only the remedy for the collection of an assessment but also the lien or right is taken away, although expenses have been incurred on the faith of such assessment. And nothing less than a plain exception of existing cases or claims from the operation of the Repealing Act or a continuance of the same system of taxation under new regulations will save such cases or claims from the effect of the repeal." Certain cases in this state claimed to be in accordance with the general rule are relied upon. The first in point of time is Napa State Hospital v. Flaherty, 134 Cal. 315, 66 P. 322. In that case the right conferred by statute on certain state authorities to maintain an action against a parent for the support of an adult insane child, a right which did not exist at common law was abrogated, and it was held that the remedy was lost by a repeal of the statute without a saving clause, since the right was inchoate and not reduced to possession or judgment.

The next is City of Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 P. 674. In that case a city board of trustees, acting under the authority of general law to impose a license tax for regulation and revenue, passed an ordinance imposing a license tax for revenue on persons engaging in certain business and callings, including attorneys at law. A civil action was commenced to collect a delinquent tax. Before judgment the Legislature amended the statute, without a saving clause, so as to deprive the city of the power to license for revenue. The tax was held to be a revenue measure, and that the repeal before judgment abrogated the right to enforce it. This case ruled the subsequent case in the same volume Santa Monica v. Guidinger, 137 Cal. 658, 70 P. 732. The next case is County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 758, 87 P. 909. In that case the power of counties under the County Government Act (St. 1897, p. 465, § 25, subd. 25) to impose a license tax for revenue was cut off by section 3366 of the Political Code. It was held that the enactment of the Code section abrogated the power of the county to pursue the collection of a license tax, held to be a revenue measure, for conducting a sheep-raising business. Next is People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148. In that case the Attorney General commenced an action under the Banking Act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 365) to have the defendant bank declared insolvent. Judgment to that effect was entered, and a receiver appointed to liquidate the affairs of the bank. This judgment became final, but an appeal was taken from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Pending this appeal, the cause of action on which the judgment was founded was repealed by the Banking Act of 1909. (St. 1909, p. 87). The authorities are quite extensively reviewed, and the court concluded that the judgment had become final, and that its finality was not disturbed by the pending motion for a new trial, the order denying which was affirmed.

Great reliance is also placed on Flanigan v. Sierra County, 196 U. S. 553, 25 S. Ct. 314, 49 L. Ed. 597. In that case the county brought an action in the Superior Court to collect a license tax on the business of raising sheep under the same statute involved in County of Plumas v. Wheeler, supra. The action was removed to the United States Circuit Court, which rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff after an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint and the refusal of the defendants to answer. The Circuit Court of Appeals, 122 F. 24, affirmed the judgment. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, leaning in agreement with the holding in this court in the cases relied upon by the petitioner herein to the effect that the license tax imposed by the county ordinance was a revenue measure, and that the absolute repeal of the statute abrogated the right of recovery under it.

Finally, the petitioner cites the case of Pioneer Oil & Refining Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 273 S. W. 615, 617, which followed the general rule that, "where a right given by a statute is not by nature a vested right, and at the time of the repeal of the statute has not been reduced to judgment, or otherwise executed, it will fall with the statute, unless expressly excepted," citing 36 Cyc. p. 1226, and the extensive note reporting the case of Crow v. Cartledge, 99 Miss. 281, 54 So. 947, which note is found in Ann. Cas. 1913E, p. 471 et seq.

There can be no question as to the existence of the general rule relied upon by the petitioner, but its operation in the last analysis depends on the intention of the legislative branch in dealing with the subject. This is indicated by the note in Ann. Cas. 1913E, above referred to, and cases therein cited and other cases relied upon by the respondents, such as Commonwealth v. Mortgage Tr. Co., 227 Pa. 163, 76 A. 5. The latter case recognized the existence of the general rule, but also declared the legislative intention to be the true subject of ascertainment in applying the general rule, saying, at page 182 of 227 Pa., 76 A. 5, 11: "No doubt the general rule is that, when a statute is repealed without a saving clause, it is to be considered as though it had never existed, except as to transactions past and closed. The rule, however, like any other legal principle of general application, must be understood and applied, if at all, so as to give effect to the legislative intention. It is not so much what the general rule of construction is, as, what did the Legislature intend by repealing all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the new law which did not abolish taxation on this particular class of corporations, but only provided a different method of ascertaining the taxable value."

We think it is not strictly true to say that the legislative intention must be ascertained solely from the language of the Repealing Act. Rather it should be said that, if from contemporaneous enactments it is disclosed that the Legislature did not intend to abandon the revenue from this particular source, but did intend to continue it in the same or a similar form of revenue exactions, then the general rule would not apply, and those subject to payment under the act repealed would be holden for payment under the continued revenue plan. This phase of the rule is epitomized in Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 238, as follows: "Where there is an express repeal of an existing statute and a reenactment of it at the same time, or a repeal and a reenactment of a portion of it, the reenactment neutralizes the repeal as far as the old law is continued in force. It operates without interruption when the reenactment takes effect at the same time." The rule in this respect is illustrated by decisions of this court giving effect to continuing inheritance tax laws of this state. Riley v. Havens, 193 Cal. 432, 225 P. 275; Riley v. Howard, 193 Cal. 522, 226 P. 393. The inheritance tax cases in other respects may be deemed inapplicable here in so far as they hold that upon death the right of the state to the tax becomes vested (see Trippet v. State, 149 Cal. 521, 86 P. 1084, 8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1210, affirming Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 P. 259, 58 P. 462, 45 L. R. A. 788), but the rule of continuing legislation is the same in both classes of cases.

The question then resolves itself to this: Did the system of providing state revenue under the 1923 and 1925 Highway Transportation License Tax Acts continue upon the adoption of section 15 of article 13 of the Constitution and laws enacted pursuant thereto?

A reference to the circumstances and some of the reasons for the proposal and adoption of said constitutional amendment may be helpful. The 1923 act had been attacked in 1924 in the Superior Court in and for Fresno county. The attack was made on the ground generally that certain exceptions provided for in the act rendered the entire act invalid. The Superior Court held the act unconstitutional in an injunction suit brought by Bacon Service Corporation against Fred C. Huss, a traffic enforcement officer. While the appeal from the judgment of injunction was pending, the Legislature in 1925 proposed the constitutional amendment obviously on the theory that the act of 1923 was unconstitutional. The argument to the voters in support thereof contains the following: "The nineteen twenty-three legislative effort enacting a 4 per cent. tax was declared unconstitutional. The last legislature [1925] passed a similar 4 per cent. act, to fill the gap until this proposed constitutional amendment might be adopted." But the Legislature proceeded on the erroneous assumption of the finality of the judgment declaring the 1923 act invalid, for on June 30, 1926, this court held the 1923 act valid and reversed the judgment. Bacon Service Corporation v. Huss, 199 Cal. 21, 248 P. 235.

[5-7] In the entire legislative program we find no evidence of an intention to abandon or relinquish the exaction of revenue from common carrier motor transportation companies based on a tax on their gross receipts. On the contrary, we find a determined effort on the part of the legislative branch to fasten upon and continue this source of revenue, even to the extent of proposing that it be anchored in the organic law and placed beyond the power of the Legislature to abolish.

The constitutional percentage is greater than the statutory one by one-quarter of 1 per cent. in the case of passenger carriers and 1 per cent. in the case of property carriers. But there is a compensating element under the new system which, undoubtedly, is greatly to the advantage of common carriers. By the new system they are relieved of all other taxes and licenses, both state, county, and municipal. In the aggregate, their total tax obligation is probably less than under the old system.

We deem it of no controlling importance that under the old system the revenue was called a license tax while under the new system it is designated a property tax. The constitutional tax is a lieu tax. It merges the property tax and the license tax, is based on a percentage of gross receipts, and in effect may reasonably be said to constitute a continuance of the same system of producing revenue. There has not been a moment of time since the enactment of the 1923 statute when motor transportation companies operating as common carriers for compensation on the public highways of the state between fixed termini and over regular routes were not subject to the state revenue exaction based on a fixed percentage of their gross receipts. We therefore conclude that the license taxes due from common carriers described in the constitutional amendment under the 1923 and 1925 acts may be collected by the state in the pending actions in the Superior Court.

A different situation presents itself with reference to so-called private or contract carriers; that is, those carriers not constituted by law as common carriers operating between fixed termini and over regular routes. No provision is made in the constitutional amendment of 1926, or in legislation adopted pursuant thereto, for the payment of a tax or license on their gross receipts or otherwise. The tax to which they are subject would seem to be relegated to the ad valorem tax provided for in section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution with additional revenue from them provided by the increased registration fees prescribed in chapter 844, St. 1927, p. 1708, above referred to. As to private carriers, the gross receipts tax was not continued beyond January 1, 1928, when the 1925 act was repealed without a saving clause, at which time the amendments to the 1925 act (effective October 1, 1927, St. 1927, p. 1742), fell with the act of which they were a part. As to private carriers, there is evidenced a clear intention to abandon the gross receipts tax, and the general rule of law with reference to unqualified repeal and abandonment would apply as to them.

From the foregoing discussion, it necessarily follows that the respondent court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action pending before it. In the exercise of that jurisdiction, the court has the power to decide whether the petitioner and the defendants in the other actions are common carriers, as defined by the constitutional amendment, and subject to the payment of the charges sued for, or are private carriers as to whom the state has relinquished its right to proceed.

The peremptory writ is denied, and the alternative writ is discharged.

SHARP v. JOINT HIGHWAY DIST. NO. 6 et al.

Civ. 7712.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 11, 1931.

1. Highways ⚿90.

Constitutional provision prohibiting incurring of indebtedness exceeding income and revenue for year does not apply to joint highway districts issuing revenue bonds (St. 1917, p. 46, as amended; Const. art. 11, § 18).

2. Highways ⚿99.

Power to build and pay for roads is one vested in local board of supervisors.

3. Constitutional law ⚿70(3).

Solution of doubt, if any, whether the statute respecting joint highway districts was necessary, rested with Legislature and not with court (St. 1917, p. 46, as amended).

4. Constitutional law ⚿292.

Highways ⚿90.

Statute authorizing creation of joint highway districts and issuance of revenue bonds held not invalid as depriving property owner of property without due process of law (St. 1917, p. 46, as amended).

The statute did not necessarily imply that assessment could be levied on individuals, and in instant case, in which property owner sought to restrain proceedings to issue revenue bonds, record disclosed that board had passed resolution that no assessments on individuals would be made, and statute requires, when assessments are to be made on private holdings, that notice must be given and hearing must be held to ascertain amount of benefits if any.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Action by J. M. Sharp against Joint Highway District No. 6, etc., and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edson Abel, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sheridan, Orr, Drapeau & Gardner, of Ventura, and Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J.

Claiming that the defendants were about to issue a series of illegal "revenue bonds," the plaintiff commenced this action to obtain an injunction against the defendants restraining them from further proceeding with the issue. The defendants answered and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendants, and from a judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed and has brought up typewritten transcripts.

The case arises under an act of the Legislature known as "Joint Highway District Act," chapter 52, Statutes of 1917 (page 46), as amended in 1921 (page 1111), 1925 (page 433), and 1927 (page 249). Under the statute two or more counties may create a joint highway district. The board of supervisors of one county can initiate the proceedings by adopting a resolution. That resolution can be certified to the board of supervisors therein named. The other boards may give a tentative approval and notify the board initiating the proceedings. When notices have been received from those several boards, the board initiating the proceedings shall notify the clerk of each board. Upon receipt of that notice each board shall appoint one of its members as a director of the joint highway district. Within thirty days those directors shall meet and organize and employ individuals to make preliminary surveys. The board shall tentatively fix the route of the proposed highway and determine the approximate cost and proportion to be borne by each county. A copy of the report shall be filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors of each county, and within thirty days thereafter each board shall by ordinance accept or reject the proposal. A certified copy of the ordinance shall forthwith be transmitted to the board initiating the proceedings, and when each board has acted, the one initiating the proceedings shall make a finding of the approval and notify the clerk of each of the other boards of supervisors. If the vote is in favor of the creation of the district, a certified copy of the finding shall be filed with the secretary of state, and thereupon the district shall be deemed created and shall be "a public corporation under the designation of Joint Highway District No. ——— of the State of California." The purpose for which a district may be created is to provide the necessary authority and means to construct and maintain the highway described in the initiatory resolution. The district shall be managed by a board of directors. Each board of supervisors shall select one of its members and those members shall constitute the district board. The board shall fix a place within the district for holding meetings, a majority shall constitute a quorum, and it shall have power to appoint a secretary and employ additional help. The district so formed shall have power to construct a highway, obtain property therefor, to adopt a seal, and to sue and be sued. The boards of supervisors are authorized to appropriate moneys out of funds received from the state of California as for a contingent fund for the district board. As soon as practicable after its organization, the district board shall cause a survey to be made and the engineer shall file his report thereof. When that report is received, the board shall fix a time and place for considering it, and for the purpose of making an assessment of the estimated cost "upon the State of California, the several counties composing the district, and upon lands in private ownership as may be benefited by said highway." The notice of said hearing shall be by publication in a newspaper at least two successive weeks before the hearing. The statute contains many provisions relative to assessments on private property that may be benefited. As the defendant board of directors declined to make any such assessment, that feature is not involved and those provisions need not be further mentioned. When no assessment is made on private property, the board shall make an assessment upon the several counties and upon the state of California. "Upon the conclusion of such hearing such board of directors shall make an order determining the amount of the benefits, if any, to accrue to each county comprising the district, and to the people residing therein, and to the State of California, and shall make an assessment against said counties and state in proportion to the benefits so to accrue. * * *" St. 1925, p. 438, § 9. Ordinarily, the assessments so made shall be charges on the respective entities so assessed and payable in five annual instalments, but, under certain facts, the payments may be given a longer spread. The annual installments are payable on the 1st of July of each calendar year. The statute contains provisions for the collection of the taxes at the same time and place and by the same officers as the collection of county taxes in general. It is further provided: "At any time after the assessment, either against the state, the several counties or the land within an assessment district has been made, the board of directors of the district may anticipate the payment thereof and may issue 'revenue bonds' against the fund into which shall be paid all sums paid on account of the assessments imposed. * * * The intent of the foregoing provisions is that there shall be available for the payment of the principal and interest of all bonds issued a sum sufficient to pay the same at the time such interest and principal become due, and it shall be the duty of the board of directors to make provision for the payment of all bonds issued and interest thereon prior to their sale and delivery." St. 1925, p. 441, § 21. The statute prescribes the form, denomination, etc., of the bonds. Continuing the statute provides that when the last bond has been paid the district shall be dissolved and the manner of the dissolution.

The first point which the plaintiff makes is that he adopted the proper remedy. The defendants do not dispute the claim except to assert that the plaintiff has no cause of action.

[1] In his second point the plaintiff claims that the bond issue is void because it is prohibited by the provisions of section 18, article 11, of the state Constitution. A state Legislature has such powers, in these matters, as are not prohibited by the Constitution. A bare reading of the section cited shows that it does not contain any prohibitions directed to such an entity as the defendant district. See, also, In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 342, 343, 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106.

[2, 3] In his third point the plaintiff claims that the issuance of bonds can not be justified under the authority of a special assessment district because the proceedings would deprive the plaintiff of his property without due process of law. He quotes many of the provisions of the statute which we have epitomized, and then he cites Gadd v. McGuire, 69 Cal. App. 347, 231 P. 754, and contends that the statute gives him no opportunity to state his objections, gives him no hearing, and operates to deprive him of his property without due process of law. The defendants reply that if the statute provides for due notice and a hearing at some time in the proceedings, the parties interested may not complain. Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 514, 515, 169 P. 82. They also assert that the plaintiff was represented in the Legislature that enacted the enabling act and he was represented by his supervisor, one of whom acted as a member of the local board which initiated the proceeding, and that he has had all of the notice that the law requires. Gadd v. McGuire, 69 Cal. App. 347, 363, 231 P. 754; Allied Amusement Co. v. Bryam, 201 Cal. 316, 256 P. 1097. Furthermore, the power to build and pay for roads is one of the powers which is vested in the local board of supervisors. Many county roads are built to the county line, there to be met by a road to be built by the adjoining county; however, no taxpayer would claim the right to be given any notice, regarding such construction, different than the notice regarding other road expenditures. Continuing, the defendants claim that joint highway district No. 6 is a quasi-municipal corporation and not an assessment district and therefore no additional notice was necessary. In re Orosi Public Utility District, 196 Cal. 43, 50, 235 P. 1004. With this claim we understand the plaintiff disagrees. He claims the statute is but a subterfuge, that the powers to be exercised are merely those powers which, under general statutes, now rest with the several boards of supervisors, and that the entire statute is but a sham for giving some support to the issuance of the bonds. But we cannot so hold. Let us consider a supposititious set of facts. Let us assume that the total mileage is twenty-five miles; that ten miles lie in the county of A and that the cost of construction is $5,000 per mile; that ten miles lie in the county of B and that the cost of construction is $4,500 per mile; and that five miles lie in the county of C and that the cost of construction is $150,000 per mile; and that if constructed such road would be highly valuable as an outlet to each and every one of said counties. It is clear that, as to the county of C the cost may be prohibitive. However, spreading the cost over three counties the cost may not be prohibitive, and the benefits may greatly outweigh the pro rata costs of construction. Under such facts it is clear that a statute authorizing cooperation is not necessarily a subterfuge. The solution of the doubt, if any, rested with the Legislature and not the courts. In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal., 296, 309, 310, 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106.

[4] Finally the plaintiff asserts that the defendant district has no valid existence as a taxing agency and therefore it has no authority to issue bonds based upon a nonexisting taxing power. This is not a proceeding in quo warranto and there are no allegations showing that the defendant district has not complied with every provision of the statute. The point is, therefore, but another claim that the statute is invalid. The plaintiff cites and relies on People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, 173 Cal. 792, 162 P. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255. The case is not helpful. In that case the court held that the defendant was not authorized to operate beyond the confines of certain towns and villages and that the relator's property did not lie within the confines of such towns and villages. He also quotes from Fallbrook Irrigation Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 174, 17 S. Ct. 56, 69, 41 L. Ed. 369, showing that after the organization of the Fallbrook district would be completed it would "* * * almost necessarily be followed by, and result in, an easement upon all the lands included within the boundaries of the district." That feature is not present in the instant case. The statute before us does not necessarily imply that assessments will be levied on individuals and the record discloses that the defendant board has passed a resolution that none will be made. For the purposes of this decision we must assume that said resolution is true and that it was passed and adopted in good faith. When assessments in fact are to be made on private holdings, the statute provides that notice must be given and a hearing must be held to ascertain the amounts of benefits if any.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff.

Plaintiff brought the action for damages alleged to have been sustained by her due to certain alleged fraudulent representations of the defendant in the exchange of lot 27, tract 3357, referred to at the trial as the Seaver lot, which lot and other real estate and cash were exchanged for certain property belonging to plaintiff. It was alleged in the complaint and found by the trial court that at the time of the exchange and prior thereto the defendant represented to the plaintiff that said lot contained an area of 3 acres, by erecting and maintaining on said lot two signs which stated, "This beautiful 3 acres for sale," and, "For sale this beautiful 3 acres," respectively, and otherwise representing to plaintiff that the area of said lot was 3 acres with a variation of one-sixteenth more or less. The court also found that said representations were not true and that the area of said lot was not in excess of 2.379 acres; that said representations were believed by the defendant and his agent to be true but were made in a manner not warranted or justified by their information; and that they were not made for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into said agreement of exchange. The trial court further found that plaintiff was not damaged by said representations; that she did not rely on them in making the exchange; that she did not accept said lot on a basis of $25,000 per acre; and that said lot would not have been worth any more if it had contained 3 acres instead of 2.379 acres. The plaintiff attacks these latter findings as being wholly unsupported by the evidence.

The evidence shows without contradiction that the exterior boundaries of the lot were in the shape of an irregular horseshoe, and with the exception of the boundary across the heel, the lot was surrounded by Cove way and Summit drive, a hedge clearly marking its exterior boundary, from which the lot arose rather abruptly on all sides to a summit, the building site being on the highest point, with a possible second site on a lower knoll of the summit. The property was restricted to use for residence purposes only and the topography would seem to further restrict it to two, or three such sites at the most. It also appears from the evidence that the area of 2.379 acres was inside the boundaries outlined by the hedge, although the regular lines extending to the middle of the surrounding streets embraced about 2.69 acres. In the deal the plaintiff was exchanging a property known as the Reid studio apartment building for the Seaver lot, a store building in Alhambra, and $20,000 cash. In testifying about a conversation with defendant about the area of the lot, the plaintiff said: "He just said there were three acres." "I don't remember that he said more or less." "Mr. Norton told me there was a possibility of its being a fraction more or less." She further said: "Always he (Mr. Norton) and Mr. Merwin both represented it to me as three acres, at $25,000 an acre, and the conversation going out to the piece was always a 3 acre piece, worth $25,000 an acre; that it was a good buy for me." She further testified that she would not have made the deal if she had known that there were not more than 2.69 acres in the piece. The plaintiff testified in regard to the properties she was offered: "I told Mr. Norton and Mr. Merwin that I liked the Beverly acreage very much and I really thought I could get my price out of it. I was a little doubtful about the Alhambra stores. * * * I thought I would have to take a loss on them. This was before I entered into the deal. That I would check up the Beverly acreage with Mr. Meline * * * and if he said the Beverly Hills acreage was worth $25,000 an acre I would take the deal, because I was reasonably certain that on the Alhambra stores I would have to take a loss, and was willing to take a ten or fifteen thousand dollar loss on the deal and that was all." She further testified: "If anyone had offered me $25,000 an acre, less 1/16, I would have been glad to take it." At the time referred to plaintiff did not know the exact shortage, but did know that there was a possibility that it was 1/16 of an acre short and she was being interrogated about that. So the court could very well have concluded from the testimony of the plaintiff herself that she was only interested in having the Seaver lot stand up to a value of approximately $75,000, regardless of its content and that the $25,000 per acre was all a matter of mathematical calculation based on such value and the supposed content of three acres or a little less. Mr. Norton, who represented the defendant Seaver in the deal, testified: "To the best of my remembrance in submitting this property to Mrs. Wildey I submitted it in the nature of a site rather than acreage. She asked the value of it and then analyzed its value from the point of acreage." As to the value of the property at the time, Mr. Rose (a witness for defendant) testified that the value of the lot at the time was from $75,000 to $80,000. He also said that in the sale of such a property the three main elements that gave it value were the contour of the land, the elevation "from the view point of whether we get an ocean view or a mountain view," and the area contained in it, and also that in this particular property even if the boundaries could be extended so as to make the area three acres that it would not increase either value or the salability of the lot because of the contour of the ground. Other witnesses testified to the same thing. Dr. Edwin Janss fixed the value at the time as $80,000.

[1-4] We have not attempted to quote all the conflicting evidence or all of the evidence which supports the conclusions reached by the trial court, but have quoted sufficient to show not only that there is a conflict in the evidence, but also that there is evidence to support the findings complained of by appellant and to show that even from the testimony of plaintiff herself the court could draw an adverse inference on the question of whether she relied upon the representations complained of in making the exchange or whether or not she accepted the lot on a basis of $25,000 per acre, or as a site of the value of $75,000. The court having come to this latter conclusion and there being evidence to support such value, his finding that there was no damage would seem to be supported, and of course misrepresentations without damage do not support a cause of action. Gaffney v. Graf, 73 Cal. App. 622, 238 P. 1054. Where findings are based on conflicting evidence such as we find here, they are conclusive on the appellate court, and where two or more inferences can be made from the same evidence the one drawn by the trial court must stand on appeal. COUCHMAN v. SNELLING.

Civ. 7460.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 19, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⚷245(80).

Whether motorist, seeing automobile approaching intersection 75 feet away, was contributorily negligent in proceeding to cross, held for jury.

Evidence showed that plaintiff was driving west and defendant was driving south, and that northeast corner of intersection, being occupied by apartment house, was admittedly obstructed within California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553), § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, and that plaintiff, traveling about 15 miles an hour when 20 feet from intersection, saw defendant's automobile approaching 75 feet away at about 25 miles an hour. Plaintiff did not again look directly at defendant's automobile, and was about three-quarters of way across intersection when collision occurred.

2. Negligence 🔑136(26).

Contributory negligence is usually question of fact.

3. Negligence 🔑136(9).

Contributory negligence becomes question of law only when evidence will support no other legitimate inference.

4. Negligence 🔑122(1).

Since contributory negligence is affirmative defense, defendant has burden of proof.

5. Automobiles 🔑171(13).

Motorist first entering intersection is entitled to assume he will be given right of way, and be permitted to cross without danger of collision.

6. Automobiles 🔑171(4).

Motorist approaching intersection need not yield right of way to another driver considerable distance away, whose duty it is to slow down in crossing intersection.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1053(2).

Error, if any, in admitting, contrary to statute, motorist's accident report to police, held harmless, where it was subsequently stricken and jury instructed to disregard it, and facts contained therein appeared elsewhere in evidence (St. 1923, p. 563, § 142(a), amended by St. 1929, p. 545).

California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 563), § 142(a), as amended by St. 1929, p. 545, requires driver of vehicle involved in accident to make report to police department, but declares that such report shall not be admissible in evidence except to prove a compliance with statute.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1046(5), 1060(1).

Error, if any, where court and plaintiff's counsel commented on defendant's absence, held harmless, where defendant subsequently appeared and testified, and court instructed jury that defendant, if she so desired, need not appear.

TYLER, P. J.

Action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a collision between two automobiles.

The accident occurred on September 15, 1929, between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning, at the intersection of Genoa and Aileen streets in the city of Oakland. Genoa street runs approximately north and south, and Aileen street approximately east and west, crossing each other at right angles. Plaintiff was driving west on Aileen street, and defendant was driving south on Genoa street. The northeast corner of the intersection was occupied by an apartment house, and the view of plaintiff and defendant as to each other was admittedly obstructed within the meaning of section 113 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436). The complaint charged the defendant with the usual general allegation of negligence. The answer denied the alleged negligence, and further pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. The cause was tried by the court with the aid of a jury. A verdict was returned in plaintiff's favor in the sum of $5,000, and judgment was rendered accordingly. Motion for a new trial was made and denied.

[1] This is an appeal from the judgment and order. Appellant urges several contentions for a reversal. He claims that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; that the trial court erred in the admission of evidence and committed prejudicial error by making certain remarks in the presence of the jury; that counsel for plaintiff was likewise guilty of prejudicial error by repeatedly attempting to place before the jury the fact that defendant was driving without an operator's license. It appeared in evidence that plaintiff at the time of the accident was traveling at a speed estimated at fifteen miles an hour. According to his testimony, when he was about twenty feet distant from the intersection of the streets, he observed defendant's car approaching said intersection some seventy-five feet away proceeding at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour. Believing he had time to pass the intersection without danger of a collision, he proceeded across the same without again directly looking at defendant's automobile except that he kept it in his side vision; that beyond this he did nothing to avoid a collision. When approximately three-quarters of the way across the intersection, his car was struck on the right rear wheel and overturned by defendant's automobile. Other evidence was to the effect that defendant had applied her brakes, and there was testimony to show that she had stated that she had on high-heeled shoes and would never wear them again because she knew her foot had slipped off the brake. Further recital of the evidence is unnecessary, as we are of the opinion that it sufficiently appears from what we have said that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, but the question was one of fact to be determined by the jury.

[2-4] The circumstances under which a court can declare that certain acts constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law are rare. Swartz v. Acme Express & Drayage Co., 102 Cal. App. 615, 283 P. 358. It can seldom happen that the question is so clear from doubt that the court can undertake to say as a matter of law that the jury could not fairly and honestly find for the plaintiff. Schierhold v. N. B. & M. R. Co., 40 Cal. 447, 453. The question is usually one of fact and becomes a question of law only when the evidence is of such a character that it will support no other legitimate inference. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513. Contributory negligence being an affirmative defense, the burden of proving it is on the defendant. It is necessary, therefore, for him to show that the acts of plaintiff failed to meet some standard of prudence in order to take the issue from the jury as a question of law alone.

[5, 6] Where a car has actually entered an intersection before the other approaches it, the driver of the first car has the right to assume that he will be given the right of way and be permitted to pass through the intersection without danger of collision. He has a right to assume that the driver of the other car will obey the law, slow down, and yield the right of way, if slowing down be necessary to prevent a collision. Keyes v. Hawley, 100 Cal. App. 53, 60, 279 P. 674. Nor is a plaintiff required to yield the right of way to one a considerable distance away whose duty it is to slow down in crossing an intersection. Whitelaw v. McGilliard, 179 Cal. 349, 176 P. 679. Whether or not, therefore, plaintiff, after observing the approach of defendant's car, its position, and the rate of speed it was traveling, and keeping the same within his side vision, was justified in proceeding upon his rightful way across the intersection in advance of defendant presents a question upon which reasonable minds might differ, and was therefore one for the jury to determine. Johnson v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 154 Cal. 285, 295, 97 P. 520; Kienlen v. Holt (Cal. App.) 288 P. 866; Palmer v. Schultz (Cal. App.) 290 P. 79.

[7] Appellant next complains of the action of the trial court in permitting in evidence a report of the accident made to the police department by defendant in violation of the provisions of section 142(a) of the California Vehicle Act, as amended by St. 1929, p. 545. That section provides: "The driver of any vehicle involved in any accident resulting in injuries or death to any person, shall within twenty-four hours forward a report of such accident to the division, except that when such accident occurs within an incorporated city such report shall be made within twenty-four hours to the police department of such city. * * * Such report shall be without prejudice, shall be for the information of the division and the fact that such reports have been so made shall be admissible in evidence solely to prove a compliance with this section, but no such report or any part thereof shall be admissible in evidence for any other purpose in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of such accident."

During the trial the police officer to whom defendant made her report was called by plaintiff as a witness. He testified over objection that defendant reported that she met with the accident above referred to, and that plaintiff was injured; that she took him to a hospital and left him there for treatment. He further testified that she had stated she was a student driver and had no operator's card. This in substance was the entire testimony given by the witness.

Respondent, in answer to the contention that the admission of this evidence constituted error, claims that the statute barring such evidence is invalid as being violative of section 24, article 4, of the California Constitution, because the subject embraced in said section is not expressed in its title. He further claims that, even if the attempt to alter rules of evidence under the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act be considered valid, no prejudicial error was committed in the admission of the evidence, for the reason that it was subsequently stricken from the record by the order of the court, and the jury was instructed to disregard it and not to give any consideration or weight whatever to it. We are of a like opinion. Considering the nature of the evidence, the error, if any, was cured by the act of the court, and it affords no valid ground for reversing the judgment. It simply contained evidence of the fact that an accident had occurred and that defendant was a student driver operating without a license. The fact that she was inexperienced and had no license appeared elsewhere in evidence.

[8] Appellant next complains of the action of the attorney for plaintiff and the court in making certain reference to the absence of defendant at the commencement of the trial. Defendant subsequently appeared and testified, so that any impression her absence might have had upon the jury that she was hiding to avoid testifying was dispelled. Moreover, the court instructed the jury that there was no legal duty on the part of the defendant to voluntarily appear in court and present herself, nor was there any legal obligation on her attorney to produce her in court at the trial of the case. Under these circumstances the error, if any, was harmless.

From what we have said, it follows that the judgment and order should be, and they are hereby, affirmed.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal from that portion of the judgment of the superior court which ordered the estate of said decedent distributed under the intestacy laws of this state. Separate appeals have been perfected by Helen Troy, David H. Howie, and V. H. Rossetti, as executors, David H. Howie and V. H. Rossetti, as trustees, and the Trustees of Dartmouth College.

John James Troy died in the city of Boston on the 17th day of October, 1927. He left surviving him his widow, Helen Troy, and an infant son, James Storrow Troy. In his last will and testament, bearing date of November 6, 1924, he appointed his wife, Helen Troy, David H. Howie, and V. H. Rossetti, as executors. To administer the trusts, provided for in the will, he nominated David H. Howie and V. H. Rossetti as trustees. The Trustees of Dartmouth College were included among the beneficiaries of a testamentary trust.

The will was admitted to probate in Los Angeles county on the 23d day of November, 1927. The executors qualified and fully administered the estate down to the point of distribution. The final account and report of the executors was filed on the 10th day of April, 1929. Prior to the hearing thereon, Helen Troy, individually, and as guardian of James Storrow Troy, a minor, filed exceptions to the account and to the distribution of the estate as prayed for. In excepting to distribution, Helen Troy, individually and as guardian, contended that the trust provisions of the will were void as suspending illegally the power to alien the trust estate.

At the hearing the final account of the executors was settled and confirmed, but exceptions to distribution were allowed, and the estate was directed to be distributed under the intestacy laws of this state.

After the provisions in the will directing payment of his debts and funeral expenses, the testator made two specific legacies which are here in controversy. The residuum of his estate he devised in trust as follows:

"Third: All the rest, residue and remainder of the property of every nature and description which may belong to me at my death I give, devise and bequeath to the trustees hereinafter named, in trust, to have and to hold to them and their successors in trust for the following purposes:

"(a) If my wife survive me, to pay to her, at least as often as semiannually, the entire net income of the trust fund during her lifetime.

"(b) On the death of my wife, or upon my death, if my said wife shall not survive me, if there are children of mine then living or then deceased leaving issue then living, to divide the trust property into as many equal shares as there are children of mine then living and then deceased leaving issue then living, the issue of any deceased child of mine to stand in the place of such deceased child by right of representation.

"(c) If at that time any child of mine shall have reached the age of twenty-one (21), to pay over to such child one of such shares free from all trusts. If at that time all the issue of a child of mine then deceased shall have reached the age of twenty-one (21), to pay over to such issue in equal shares one of such shares.

"(d) To retain the shares not so distributed in trust, and to expend all or so much of the net income of each of such shares as the trustees in their uncontrolled discretion shall deem best for the comfortable maintenance, support and education of each of such children or the issue of any child of mine then deceased until such child or all of the issue of any child of mine then deceased shall reach the age of twenty-one (21). When and as any child of mine shall reach the age of twenty-one (21), and when and as all of the issue of any child of mine then deceased leaving issue shall have reached the age of twenty-one (21), to pay over to such child or the issue of any child of mine then deceased leaving issue one of such shares free from all trusts.

"(e) If any child of mine surviving both my wife and me shall die before reaching the age of twenty-one (21) leaving issue, the issue of such child shall take the share such child would have taken if such child had reached the age of twenty-one (21). If any child of mine surviving both my wife and me shall die before reaching the age of twenty-one (21) leaving no issue then surviving, the share such child would have taken if he had reached the age of twenty-one (21) shall be distributed in equal shares among the children of mine then living or then deceased leaving issue, such issue to take in equal shares by right of representation.

"(f) Upon the death of my wife or upon my death, if my wife shall not survive me, if there are no children of mine then living or then deceased leaving issue then living, to pay over to David H. Howie, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, if he be then living, two-thirds of the trust property then held by them free from all trusts, and to pay over to the Trustees of Dartmouth College located at Hanover, New Hampshire, the remaining one-third of the trust property, or if said David H. Howie be then not living, all of the trust property then held by them free from all trusts, to be held by said Trustees of Dartmouth College as a separate fund to be known as the 'John J. Troy Fund.' I place no restriction upon the use which the said Trustees shall make of said fund, but it is my wish that if the income or any part of the principal thereof shall not, in the opinion of said Trustees, be required for other and better uses, the income thereof shall be used to aid needy and worthy students in college who may apply therefor or for scholarship aid generally. It is my wish, although I do not express this as a restriction, that the income be used in aid of needy and worthy students without regard to their scholastic standing provided the Trustees believe the applicant is of good moral character and is making a conscientious effort to avail himself of all the privileges and opportunities afforded him by the College."

It is contended by the respondent that the trust provisions contained in said will are not severable, and that they violate the provisions of sections 715 and 716 of the Civil Code, as construed by the Supreme Court of this state in the Estate of Whitney, 176 Cal. 12, 167 P. 399; Estate of Van Wyck, 185 Cal. 49, 196 P. 50; and Estate of Maltman, 195 Cal. 643, 234 P. 898. The appellants admit the illegality of the provisions of subdivision (d) of paragraph third of said will, but seek to avoid present intestacy on the ground that such illegality is merely a contingent illegality, contingent on James Storrow Troy predeceasing his mother, leaving issue. They also contend that the illegal provisions are severable, and that the court can construe the trust in accordance with the remaining provisions thereof, and that the trust thus provided will be in accordance with the law, as construed in the cases hereinabove mentioned, and, in addition thereto, in conformity with sections 1317 and 1326 of the Civil Code; Estate of Cavarly, 119 Cal. 406, 51 P. 629; Estate of Walkerly, 108 Cal. 627, 41 P. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97; Estate of Phelps, 182 Cal. 752, 763, 190 P. 17; Estate of Pichoir, 139 Cal. 682, 686, 73 P. 606; Nellis v. Rickard, 133 Cal. 617, 66 P. 32, 85 Am. St. Rep. 227.

It is the opinion of this court that the said invalid conditions of the trust are not severable from the others, and that, if the said provisions which are admittedly in violation of the laws of this state should be omitted, it would so affect the entire plan of the trust that the trust as contemplated by the testator would be left incomplete. To hold otherwise would be to make by decree a trust not created by the testator.

The entire trust was evidently drawn with the idea that the deceased might live a long time after the execution thereof, and that possibly he would leave several children and grandchildren. As a matter of fact, at the time of the hearing for final distribution, his only child was then of the age of 5 years, and the trust provisions of the will clearly provide that, in case of the death of said child before said child is 21 years old, and before the death of the child's mother, if the child leave issue, the entire estate, except the income thereof, shall be held and cannot be distributed until all of such children shall have reached the age of 21 years. Also it provided in said trust that, in case of the death of said mother and of said son during his minority, leaving issue, the whole estate is to be held in trust and cannot be distributed until the youngest child of such named son shall reach the age of 21 years.

Under the authority of the Code provisions and cases herein cited as being relied upon by respondent and petitioner, we think that the decree is correct.

The said order and decree are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis P. Russill, Judge.

Action of the United Security Bank & Trust Company against H. T. Haden, Peters-Rhoades Company, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last-named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and A. W. Carlson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

The defendant Peters-Rhoades Company, a corporation, appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for a balance alleged to have been due upon a promissory note secured by deed of trust, after foreclosure and sale of the real property, and application of the proceeds toward payment of the indebtedness.

It appears from the complaint that the defendants Haden were in 1919 the owners of certain realty which they deeded in trust to two named trustees as security for the payment of their promissory note to the bank in the sum of $64,000. Said note was dated September 16, 1919, was payable on November 1, 1924, and recited, in part: "* * * And in default of the payment of the interest aforesaid, or any instalment thereof, then the whole note may at the option of the holder, and without notice to the makers, become due and payable, and may be treated as collectible. * * * If this note is not paid at maturity, it is hereby renewed from year to year, at the option of the holder, until paid, and during such year the makers shall not have the right to pay the same unless by consent of holder."

The plaintiff alleged that thereafter the debtors conveyed all of their right, title, and interest in said property to their children, in trust nevertheless, and retaining full dominion and control thereof; that subsequently thereto, and at the special instance and request of the owners and for their benefit, said children deeded the same to the appellant; that in these latter deeds "it was provided that the said grantee * * * should and would assume a personal liability to pay the indebtedness against the property as evidenced by the * * * note * * * and the said grantee Peters-Rhoades Company did accept said instrument of conveyance subject to said obligation, and did thereupon and thereby assume and agree to personally pay the full amount of said indebtedness, both principal and interest."

Further allegations, briefly stated, aver that the Hadens failed and neglected to pay the interest due on November 1, 1924, and the principal due on said date, because of which the plaintiff, owner of the note, made due application to the surviving trustee for a sale of the premises, and caused notices of default to be recorded, all in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust; that thereafter said trustee published in a newspaper of general circulation in the proper town and county, and posted in three public places and on the property, notices of the time and place of sale; that at such time and place the property was offered at public auction to the highest bidder, and was sold to the plaintiff for the sum of $40,000; that, after payment of certain costs and expenses which are specifically enumerated, there remained a balance of $24,040, which was delivered to the payee of the note on account, leaving a balance of $39,060 due and unpaid.

Following the trial, and upon the evidence adduced, the trial court made its findings of fact wherein it was recited that the denials of the defendants upon each of said issues were untrue, and the allegations of the complaint were therein restated, and found to have been true. The court found that the sale of said property was fairly and regularly conducted by the trustee, in the manner provided by law, and in accordance with the provisions of the deed of trust, and that due notice of the sale was properly and legally given by publication and posting. Upon the special defenses interposed by the defendants, it was found that it was not true that the appellant agreed with the Hadens to purchase the property merely subject to the trust indebtedness, but that it agreed to assume and to pay the same; and that the provision therefor in the deeds of conveyance was inserted therein with its knowledge and consent; that the deeds were accepted by appellant, were inspected, and were recorded with its knowledge, consent, and approval; that the indebtedness had not been discharged; that on May 14, 1928, H. T. Haden was duly adjudicated a bankrupt, had been discharged therein; and that said discharge was filed in this action.

[1] Appellant's attack upon the judgment is clothed in technicalities which, when reduced to their last analysis, plainly render them suitable only for the cognizance of a trial court rather than of such character as to present grounds for relief upon appeal. This appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. The first group of asserted errors consists of complaints as to a failure to comply with assumed formalities prior to commencement of this action which the record may have fully refuted. None of the evidence is before us. We must therefore assume that it was sufficient to warrant findings of fact and the judgment as rendered. It nowhere appears, nor does appellant contend, that the payee of the note extended the time for payment "from year to year," that demand upon appellant was requisite to a legal foreclosure of the deed of trust, or that the "notice of default" did not contain all of the elements necessary to such a proceeding; it does not appear that the deed of trust was not in the usual form, empowering either or both of the trustees to enforce it and to dispose of the proceeds of sale as alleged in the complaint; nor does it appear that the deed to the Haden children as trustees was invalid, nor that it was their intent or duty, acting in the capacity of trustees, to assume any indebtedness, or that their trusteeship was of a secret character which could or did prejudice the rights of appellant, their vendee, who assumed the indebtedness. It is argued that the deed of trust was not attached to the complaint, and that appellant does "not know whether it was really a deed of trust or a mortgage or whether it contained power of sale." These and other particulars are assigned as reasons for a mere suspicion that the trustee's sale prior to the institution of this action for a deficiency may have been invalid, because, it is said, the complaint did not contain allegations that the necessities above mentioned did exist and that they had been observed to a technical nicety. But no demurrer was filed, the pleadings were accepted as sufficient, and, "the evidence being completed on said 8th day of May, 1928, and from the evidence introduced, both oral and documentary, the court finds" that said sale was fair and regular as provided by law and in accordance with the provisions of the deed of trust which appellant had assumed to pay and satisfy. That an action may be maintained for an unpaid balance after sale of trust property is unquestioned. The defendants presented the issue as to regularity of the sale by their pleadings, and in this and other respects the trial court found adversely to their contentions upon the evidence before it. It is not denied that the amount of such balance was correctly computed. Hence no error can be said to appear within the purview of this appeal for correction. Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 73 P. 745.

[2] Notwithstanding appellant's agreement with Haden to assume and satisfy the indebtedness in controversy, it is objected that a certified copy of the latter's discharge in bankruptcy was erroneously received and made the basis of a finding after the trial was concluded, "and hence there is a conclusion of law that the judgment was not enforceable against him." We are not advised, nor is it apparent to us, that such error, if committed, could have altered appellant's status, since the contractual benefits and obligations of the parties were matters over which the trial court had no control.

[3] Finally, it is contended that the findings do not support the judgment, for the reason that Haden's children as trustees and mesne conveyancers assumed no liability under the deed of trust, and that appellant was not alleged or found to have agreed with Haden so to do. It does appear by direct allegation that said children, acting merely as trustees for and on behalf of Haden, and at his special instance and for his benefit, received and conveyed to Peters-Rhoades Company all of the right, title, and interest of the owner and vendor. It further appears by unmistakable terms in the eleventh finding of the trial court that "Peters-Rhoades Company agreed with the defendants Haden [the original owners] in connection with the purchase of said real property to assume and pay the said indebtedness against said property represented by said promissory note." This being true, the allegation or proof of the duties or obligations of the vendors' agents became immaterial. In the absence of reversible error, asserted inequitable factors in personal transactions of the parties do not lie within the curative province of an appellate tribunal, as suggested by the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

SATURDAY MORNING MUSICAL CLUB v. VIAULT.

Civ. 6361.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 4, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 2, 1931.

Clubs ⚷6.

Subscription to stock in musical club "building fund," naming no payee nor showing purchase of stock in club itself, held unenforceable, absent allegations warranting reformation.

> Subscription agreement, as written, was unenforceable by musical club, which was a corporation, since contract, as written, contained no agreement to pay to such club and did not show purchase of shares of stock in such corporation or in any corporation or association; contract calling for "stock in * * * Musical Club Building Fund."

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the Saturday Morning Musical Club against Max Viault. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

YORK, J.

The plaintiff brought action for judgment on the following subscription agreement:

"Tucson, Arizona, July 12, 1922.

"I agree to pay one thousand Dollars for 200 shares of the stock in the Saturday Morning Musical Club Building Fund at $5.00 per share, to be paid when building is started. First payment $———, the balance to be paid before January 1, 1923.

"Address:
"236 South Scott. Max Viault."

General and special demurrers to the complaint and amended complaint were sustained, and upon motion for judgment on the pleadings made by defendant, the action was dismissed by the court. Plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from such judgment of dismissal.

Defendant's agreement is for stock in the Saturday Morning Musical Club building fund, and not for stock of the Saturday Morning Musical Club, a corporation, the entity seeking to enforce the agreement. Without any pleading alleging the assignment of the interest of the said building fund to the Saturday Morning Musical Club, a corporation, we are of the opinion that the demurrers were properly sustained and said cause properly dismissed. There is no allegation in the pleadings showing whether or not the said building fund was ever incorporated. It may have been incorporated and merged with the plaintiff, but there is no such allegation.

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

Concurring Opinion.

CONREY, P. J.

I concur in the judgment. The alleged contract, as signed by the defendant, fails to name any payee to whom the promised money was to be paid. If, in fact, it was the intention of the parties that the payments should be made to the plaintiff, and if the shares of stock purchased were shares of the plaintiff corporation, and if it was the intention of the parties that these terms should be contained in the written agreement, and if by mutual mistake, said terms of agreement were omitted from the writing, the plaintiff by appropriate allegations might have laid a foundation for a decree reforming the contract, so as to make it capable of enforcement. But this was not done. The action is to recover upon the contract as written. Since the contract, as written, contains no agreement to pay to the plaintiff, and does not show a purchase of shares of stock in plaintiff corporation or in any corporation or association, it is not an enforceable contract. Moreover, in relation to these same matters, the complaint was uncertain in several particulars which were covered by the demurrer. I therefore agree that there was no error in the order sustaining the demurrer to the amended complaint, and that plaintiff having failed to further amend within the time allowed by the court, or at all, the judgment should be affirmed.

Brokers ⚷60.

Although sale was never completed, broker held entitled to commission promised by written authorization, and by escrow contract between owner and purchaser.

Action by G. H. Seward against the A. C. Gage Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. G. Shelton, of Glendora, and O. T. Gilbank, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

This action was brought to recover a real estate broker's commission. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

The court found that defendant had executed a written listing and authorization for the sale of the property and agreed therein to pay a commission to plaintiff; that plaintiff procured a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase the property on the terms set forth; that said purchaser and defendant had entered into a binding written escrow contract and thereupon awarded judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the commission agreed upon.

The transaction was somewhat involved. It contemplated the sale of fifty-seven lots for building purposes for the total consideration of $91,280. In payment for the property, the purchaser was to execute in favor of defendant 28 deeds of trust on 28 lots subject to a first mortgage on each lot not exceeding 50 per cent. of the purchase price of the lot, cost of house, and financing. The various details of the transaction were set forth in the escrow instructions signed by defendant and the purchaser, and these details were also outlined in the original listing with plaintiff. This written listing and authorization signed by defendant provided "cash commission to you 5%. Amount $4,560.00 which we agree to pay you." The escrow instructions signed by defendant directed the escrow holder to pay such commission to plaintiff.

Appellant contends that the escrow instructions signed by appellant and the purchaser did not constitute a contract and that the commission did not become due to respondent as the sale was never completed. An examination of the escrow instructions signed by appellant and the purchaser convinces us that these escrow instructions did constitute a contract between the parties and that the respondent is entitled to his commission even though the sale was not completed. White v. Reskin, 90 Cal. App. 512, 265 P. 1016; Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal. 574, 229 P. 327; Thoroman v. David, 199 Cal. 286, 249 P. 513; Wood & Tatum v. Basler, 37 Cal. App. 381, 173 P. 1109; Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 147 P. 225.

Appellant concedes that as a general rule a broker is entitled to his commission when he has produced a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to purchase the property on the terms prescribed, but further contends that this case falls within an exception to this general rule, citing Houghton v. Keuhnrich, 46 Cal. App. 469, 189 P. 457; Stewart v. Bowie, 43 Cal. App. 751, 185 P. 868, and Lind v. Huene, 205 Cal. 569, 271 P. 1087. These cases do not sustain appellant's position and much that is said in the opinions is more favorable to respondent than to appellant. In the present case the agreement to pay a commission was not found solely in the contract between appellant and the purchaser. The written authorization to respondent previously executed by appellant contained the agreement to pay the commission to respondent as hereinabove set forth.

In our opinion the evidence supported the findings, and the trial court correctly concluded that respondent was entitled to judgment for the agreed amount.

The judgment is affirmed.

WESTERN LANDS CO. v. HESSE et al.

Civ. 7743.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Feb. 2, 1931.

Appeal and error ⚷1011(1).

Judgment on conflicting evidence may not be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by the Western Lands Company against Arthur T. Hesse and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hare & Walden, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Oliver O. Clark, of Los Angeles, and Loris V. Cady, of Santa Monica, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J.

As the assignee of Oliver O. Clark, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover a sum alleged to be due and unpaid for services as an attorney at law. The defendants answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed and have brought up typewritten transcripts. The appellants make one point. They claim that there was no evidence that $2,818.77, the amount contained in the judgment, was due, or that any larger sum than $318.77 was due. About the time that Mr. Clark was employed by the defendants, the latter were involved in a large amount of litigation. There were nine or more actions pending. McBryde & Wix had been acting as attorneys for the defendants. Thereafter the defendants asked Mr. Clark to associate himself with McBryde & Wix in conducting the litigation. One of the cases, entitled Hesse v. Mayell, was about to be tried. Mr. Clark proceeded to confer with McBryde & Wix and thereafter to present the defendants' case. On February 28, 1925, Mr. Clark presented to the defendants a bill for fees in the sum of $5,000. At the same time he delivered to the defendants a letter stating that he had arranged to take care of the fees of McBryde & Wix. On April 3, 1925, he rendered another bill in which the charge was stated at $7,500. The defendants earnestly contend that the latter bill was padded at defendants' request, and that it was never the intention of the attorneys nor of the client that it should be enforced as it was padded. Replying to this contention, the plaintiff does not contend to the contrary, but proceeds to show that the bill first mentioned was authentic in all respects, and that, after that bill was rendered, the plaintiff's assignor rendered many other services of great value in the other actions which were pending, and that his entire claim included the charge made in the case of Hesse v. Mayell, and his charge for additional services rendered in the other actions. These respective contentions were placed before the trial court. Mr. Clark was called as a witness and was examined and cross-examined at length. Conceding that there was some evidence to support the contention of the defendants, it must likewise be conceded that there was considerable evidence to support the contention of the plaintiff. The defendants state that they "are not unmindful of the rule of this court in regard to disturbing a judgment based on conflicting evidence, but we maintain that this is not such a case of a conflict of evidence." We think it needs no further comment than to state that the contention of the defendants just recited is not well founded.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant to recover moneys alleged to be due on an oil lease. The defendant answered, and, from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant has appealed. In their complaint the plaintiffs pleaded the lease in hæc verba, and further alleged that certain rentals had accrued and had not been paid. In their answer the plaintiffs made certain denials, but pleaded no affirmative matter.

By way of introduction, the plaintiffs call to our attention certain rules governing the construction of written instruments by the court. Civ. Code, §§ 1636, 1638, and 1641. The plaintiffs do not contend that the rules referred to are not sound, but they do contend that in the instant case they have no application. The defendant also contends that the provisions of the contract favorable to one of the parties should be considered as having been inserted and worded by him, and that, in the event any one of such provisions is ambiguous, it should be construed against him. 13 Cor. Jur. 546. In reply, the plaintiffs call to our attention the testimony of the defendant, which was to the effect that he and his associate, Mr. Wall, drew the instrument. The lease, among other things, contained the following provisions:

"Witnesseth: That the said lessors * * * do * * * grant, convey, lease, demise and let unto the said lessee, for the sole and only purpose of mining and operating for oil and gas, and the laying of pipe-lines and building tanks, stations and structures thereon to produce, save and take care of said products, all that tract of land. * * *

"It is Agreed that this lease shall remain in force for a term of five years from date, and as long thereafter as oil and gas, or either of them, is produced upon said land in paying quantities, by said lessee or his assigns. In consideration of the premises the said lessee covenants and agrees as follows:

"1. To deliver to the credit of the lessors (a royalty of ⅛) * * *

"2. If no well be commenced upon the above described land within six months from this date lessee agrees to pay the sum of One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) per month until said well shall be commenced, at which time the $100.00 per month payment ceases, provided the operations are continued faithfully and diligently until well has been drilled to a depth of 3000 feet unless oil or gas is found at a lesser depth, in paying quantities, but in no event shall the commencement be deferred for a period of more than two years."

It does not in any place contain a clause to the effect that, under certain circumstances, it is to be null and void, nor that under certain circumstances either party is to incur a forfeiture, nor does it contain the word "condition" or synonym of that word. The lease was dated May 23, 1921. No drilling whatever was done or attempted. It was not disputed that, commencing November 23, 1921, and continuously thereafter, the defendant paid the stipulated rental each month until February 24, 1924. Neither was it disputed that from that date until May 24, 1926, the defendant had paid no rental. The plaintiffs never attempted to rescind. The trial court awarded judgment for that unpaid rental and interest. The defendant claims that, under the terms of the lease, he had already paid more rental than he was bound to pay, and that no judgment should have been rendered against him. This conclusion is based on the following reasoning: The defendant says it is plain that he obligated himself to drill a well in six months. If he did not do so, then he was bound to pay $100 per month until he commenced drilling. However, he asserts that it was provided in the lease that "in no event shall the commencement (of drilling) be deferred for a period of more than two years." He says the quoted lease was a prohibition against his entry to drill. He further says that the prohibition ipso facto terminated the lease at the end of the period of two years, and he concludes with the statement that, the lease being ended, no obligation rested on him to pay a rental during the remainder of the term. He cites no authority to sustain this contention. In argument, he claims that leases of doubtful duration will be construed favorably to the tenant. 35 Cor. Jur. 974. But here there is no doubt. He claims that, whatever the term, it may be subject to a condition. Elliott on Contracts, vol. 5, p. 651; Thornton, Oil and Gas, vol. 1, p. 171. But, as we have shown above, the lease between the parties contained no condition. It might be added that, if doubtful language was contained in the lease, such doubtful language would be construed as a covenant and not as a condition. Cullen v. Sprigg, 83 Cal. 56, 64, 23 P. 222. Plaintiffs cite and rely on Allen v. Narver, 178 Cal. 202, 172 P. 980, 981. While that case is not parallel in all of its facts with the case at bar, we think it is controlling. In that case a similar contention was made. The court said: "As said by the court in discussing a like contention in Woodland Oil Co. v. Crawford, 55 Ohio St. 161, 44 N. E. 1093, 34 L. R. A. 62, where a great number of cases in support of the proposition are cited: 'A promise to drill a well cannot be satisfied by a failure to drill such well. The proper construction to be placed upon such an agreement is, that upon failure of the lessee to drill a well, or pay the rental, * * * the lessor may elect to put an end to the lease, * * * or he may elect to have the lease continue in force to the end of the term, and enforce * * * the payment of rentals, as provided in the lease.'" In the instant case the plaintiffs did not rescind, but they kept the contract alive and sued thereon.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 4009.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 3, 1931.

1. Judgment ⚷153(5).

Refusal to open default judgment held not abuse of discretion, where defendants took no action for over fifty-two days after learning of execution levied thereon (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Though record showed there was some attempt to make settlement, and that delay was in part due to that fact, record further disclosed that defendants' counsel was twice advised by plaintiff's counsel of intention to take default judgment, and that defendants made no real attempt to file answer, and, according to their own testimony, defendants knew of entry of default judgment when execution was levied, but even then took no action whatever, and waited for practically fifty-two or fifty-three days before their affidavit to open default was made.

2. Judgment ⚷145(2).

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by W. W. Sharp against Owen E. Paulson and another. From an order denying defendants' motion to set aside default judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

J. T. Sharp, of Alturas, for appellants.

Hardin Barry, of Susanville, for respondent.

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from an order denying the defendants' motion to set aside a default judgment.

[1] The transcript in this cause, among other things, sets forth a copy of the opinion of the trial court, stating the reasons why the appellants' motion was and should be denied. An examination of the record discloses that everything contained in the opinion of the trial court is amply supported and that no other conclusion could be reasonably drawn from the facts presented for our consideration. For this reason we have adopted the opinion of the trial court as our own opinion, as follows:

"This cause is before the court upon defendants' motion to vacate and set aside a default judgment herein. The motion is made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the ground of inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect. The matter was submitted to the court upon the affidavit of merits of Owen E. Paulson, the proposed answer of the defendants, the records and files in the case, and oral and documentary evidence.

"The record shows that the action was commenced on June 14, 1928; that the demurrer of the defendants was filed June 22, 1928. Upon stipulation of counsel to that effect, the court, on June 17, 1928, overruled said demurrer, and allowed the defendants twenty days to answer. The default of the defendants for failure to appear and answer was entered October 9, 1928. On October 26, 1928, upon evidence submitted by the plaintiff, a judgment against said defendants was entered. Notice of entry of this judgment was served on counsel for defendants October 30, 1928. Execution was issued and levied on property belonging to the defendants on November 30, 1928. The property was sold, and return of sale made by the sheriff December 12, 1928. Defendants' application to open the default was dated January 29, 1929. The affidavit of merits by Owen Paulson was executed January 22, 1929.

"It appears from the oral testimony that a settlement was being negotiated between the parties, but was ineffectual. On August 29, 1928, counsel for defendants notified them that he was unable to settle the case except upon certain conditions, and that he must have a reply from them by Friday morning, or one of them must be in Susanville at that time.

"It appears that on Friday morning, the time stated, counsel for defendants was in San Francisco, but he left a notice on his door for the defendants to call at the office of Mr. B. V. Curler, an attorney with offices located in the same building as the offices of counsel for the defendants. At that time one of the defendants appeared and met Mr.

Curler, and Mr. Curler at that time advised them of Mr. Julian's absence from town, and further advised them that the time had run by to answer, and that Mr. Julian had advised that they settle the case. The defendant left the office of Mr. Curler, and shortly thereafter again came to the office of Mr. Julian, at which time Mr. Julian informed them that he was being pressed for an answer, and that the time had run by, but that certain figures could be obtained from a Mrs. Hall relative to the basis of the settlement proposed by Sharp. Neither of the defendants made any further appearance in the matter.

"On October 2, 1928, counsel for defendants wrote a letter to them at Standish, Lassen county, inclosing a statement from Mr. Sharp relative to the credits he allowed them. He further said in the letter that he wanted the defendants to come to Susanville as soon as possible, and that, if they were to get out without a judgment against them on the one hand or a trial on the other hand, it would be necessary to get an answer at once.

"It is claimed by the Paulsons that they did not receive this letter. However, the letter was inclosed in an envelope with Mr. Julian's return marks upon it, and it never came back to him. But, waiving the question of whether or not they received this letter, it appears that they were informed that the time was up for an answer, and they failed to make any further appearance. It also appears that, according to their own testimony, they knew of the entry of this judgment on November 30, 1928, when the execution was levied, but even then they took no action whatever, and waited for a period of practically fifty-two or fifty-three days before their affidavit to open the default was made.

[2] "It is true that courts are liberal in opening defaults, but at the same time it has been strictly held that there must be a real showing of merit to entitle a party to have a default set aside. In this case the Paulsons had counsel. They had been informed their time to answer had expired, and, even after their own statement of knowledge, they made no effort to have the default set aside until January 23d, when the affidavit of merits was made.

"There must be some finality to judgments, and they cannot be set aside except upon a meritorious showing."

In addition to what is stated by the trial court, we may add that the record discloses that the defendants' counsel was twice advised by the plaintiff's counsel of the intention to take judgment by default; also that the record shows no real attempt whatever by the appellants to file an answer herein. The argument of appellants' counsel really discloses the whole intent or purpose of the appellants was to secure delay, as upon the hearing of the motion to vacate the judgment by default it appears that the appellants, as a part of their case, presented what took place at an interview with their attorney, in which "they were advised by him that the proper thing to do at that time was to file a demurrer; that oftentimes a demurrer would hold a case in court for a year or two."

While the record shows that there was some attempt made at settlement, it absolutely fails to show that the respondents made any representations whatever which misled the appellants, to their disadvantage.

There being nothing in the record to indicate that the trial court abused its discretion, it follows that the order appealed from should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

Action by A. W. Ellington against L. Raymond Freer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Marcus C. Clark, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. P. Babson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought suit against the defendant on a promissory note for $10,000, dated May 28, 1925, and, from a judgment thereon against him, defendant appeals.

[1] The answer of defendant admitted the execution of the note by defendant to plaintiff, but denied the other allegations of the complaint, and also alleged as a separate defense that there was no consideration for the note as well as a total failure of consideration therefor. A further separate defense alleged on information and belief that a partnership existed between plaintiff and one Hallward, and that said Hallward, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, induced defendant, by certain alleged false and fraudulent statements, to execute and deliver his note for $10,000, dated August 24, 1924, to said Hallward for an assignment by Hallward to defendant of a one-third interest in a sales agreement theretofore made between Hallward and plaintiff and certain associates; that such agreement was not made in good faith and that all representations concerning the same, as well as said assignment, were made with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff; that said note was hypothecated to a certain bank by the aid of plaintiff and was afterwards surrendered and the note in question here executed as a renewal thereof; that said Hallward and plaintiff received the proceeds of said original note, applied the same to their own use, and that plaintiff took $4,000 of such proceeds for his own use and benefit; that defendant received nothing of value and did not discover the falsity of said representations until after the execution and delivery of the note sued on. At the trial plaintiff proved the execution and delivery of the note sued on, its negotiation to the bank, and the payment to the bank by plaintiff of principal and interest when the same became due. The answer does not deny the allegation of the complaint that no part of said note had been paid to plaintiff, but does deny "that this defendant is indebted to plaintiff in any sum of money whatsoever." The possession of the note by plaintiff, however, raised the presumption of nonpayment (Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 76 P. 497), although plaintiff did not introduce any other proof of nonpayment, all of which made a prima facie case for him. Plaintiff then rested, and defendant offered evidence in support of his affirmative defenses, after which rebuttal evidence was offered. The court found, among other things, that it is not true that the note was given without consideration or that there was a total or any failure of consideration, and found affirmatively that defendant received a valuable consideration therefor. The court also found that the original note was based on a valuable consideration, viz. the assignment to defendant by said Hallward of a one-third interest in the sales contract. It is appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support such findings; that the sales contract was of no value and so known to be by plaintiff at the time he took the note.

[2-4] Plaintiff in proving his prima facie case offered in evidence the promissory note sued on. There was a presumption of consideration arising from the writing itself, which is evidence, and which raised a conflict sufficient to support the finding questioned, notwithstanding evidence produced by defendant was contrary thereto. Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 91 P. 616.

The court further found that it is not true that Hallward made the representations alleged to have been made by him to defendant; that the sales contract was a valuable contract; that plaintiff was not a partner of Hallward and knew nothing about the sale of the interest in the Hallward contract to defendant until the deal was completed and Hallward went to plaintiff (as the evidence shows, after defendant and Hallward had themselves been unsuccessful in negotiating the $10,000 note given Hallward) to induce plaintiff to aid them in negotiating said note; that plaintiff indorsed the Hallward note and the same was then negotiated at the Security Trust & Savings Bank. The court found further that, at the time the note set out in plaintiff's complaint was executed and delivered to plaintiff (which was about nine months after the Hallward note was negotiated, and which note was a second renewal of the Hallward note), "defendant was in possession of all the facts regarding said sales agreement and all transactions and matters connected therewith which were known to any of the parties thereto, and particularly all the facts which were known to the said Hallward and to the said plaintiff." None of such findings is questioned by defendant, and it is sufficient to say that there is evidence in the record which supports them all.

The evidence further shows that Hallward and defendant "were pretty close old friends," and that Hallward was discussing the financing of his sales contract with defendant, who said "he thought there was a man in Pasadena * * * who resided quite close to his place, who would buy a one-third interest for $7,500"; that defendant was not successful in closing the deal with his friend and told Hallward that he (Freer) "would like to take it." It was then agreed between defendant and Hallward "to put the negotiation through on the basis of a note from him (Freer) to me (Hallward) for $7,500." As to how the note came to be made for $10,000, Hallward testified as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Babson: 'Tell what was said regarding the purchase price; the amount of the note.' A. Well, it was suggested—

"Q. Who suggested? A. By Mr. Freer, that we should make it a larger sum than $7,500, because he needed some money, and if the note was discounted he should get a portion of that money."

The evidence further shows, and the court found, that the defendant actually received about $2,000 of the proceeds of the note.

[5] There seems to be evidence to support not only the findings complained of but all the other findings which are contrary to the allegations contained in defendant's separate defenses; and, while there is evidence to the contrary, yet, the trial court having decided the facts on conflicting testimony, its determination will not be disturbed on appeal. King v. Cave, 182 Cal. 523, 188 P. 986.

Judgment affirmed.

FRANK GRAVES SASH, DOOR & MILL CO. v. ORANGE COUNTY BOND & MORTGAGE CORPORATION.

Civ. 6465.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 2, 1931.

1. Guaranty 🔑43.

Materialman held entitled to agreed price of materials from guarantor, where building was completed within six months, notwithstanding contractor subsequently removed some of closet beds.

> Defendant mortgage company by indenture separate from building contract agreed, in consideration of materialman furnishing materials to owner for construction of building, that, "conditioned upon the completion of the building on or before six months from date," defendant would "irrevocably guarantee payment of materials purchased from you for said purpose." All materials were delivered and work was completed within time specified, but thereafter building contractor ordered removal of closet beds, and trial court found that such removal was in bad faith and that materialman was not involved in such bad faith and had no knowledge thereof.

2. Appeal and error 🔑768.

Statement of facts in appellant's brief was accepted as correct by appellate court, where respondent filed no brief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by the Frank Graves Sash, Door & Mill Company against the Orange County Bond & Mortgage Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and rendered.

Glen Behymer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

CRAIG, J.

In accordance with the terms and provisions of a contract in writing between the parties hereto, the plaintiff in this action furnished materials for the construction of certain apartment houses. In an action for the agreed price of the materials plaintiff was denied judgment upon the ground that forty-eight closet beds were thereafter removed from the premises by third parties.

[1] The facts material to this appeal are undisputed. Certain contractors known as Yale Brothers entered into an agreement with Paul R. Machtolff and Masie G. Machtolff to "well and truly erect and construct" two three-story apartment houses, and to "find and provide such good, proper and sufficient materials of all kinds whatsoever as shall be proper and sufficient for completing and finishing" the same. The respondent by separate and independent indentures in writing agreed with appellant, in consideration of the latter furnishing to the owners and to the contractors materials for said structures, that "conditioned upon the completion of the building on or before six months from date," it would "irrevocably guarantee payment of material purchased from you for said purpose." All of the materials were delivered and the work was completed within the time specified. A. M. Yale, one of the contractors, testified that thereafter he gave the order for removal of the beds; "in one instance the owner requested me, and in the other instance I was becoming the owner. I was negotiating a purchase; I was the owner to all intents and purposes. * * * Mr. Machtolff requested me to take the beds out of his job, * * * around the latter part of June." The findings of the trial court in this respect recite that "said closet beds were furnished and installed in said premises as required by the plans and specifications for said building, within said six months period, but that said installation thereof was not in good faith, but that in bad faith said Yale Brothers installed said closet beds within said six months period, but shortly thereafter and before the expiration of said period, * * * the said Yale Brothers in bad faith removed said closet beds from said premises, and that the same have never been replaced therein; that the plaintiff, Frank Graves Sash, Door & Mill Company, had no part in the removal of said beds or in said bad faith on the part of Yale Brothers, no knowledge of the removal thereof, and did not in any way participate in the bad faith of said Yale Brothers; that said beds were among the items of merchandise furnished by said Frank Graves Sash, Door & Mill Company and were by them furnished and were caused to be furnished and installed in good faith, but that by reason of the bad faith of the said Yale Brothers with respect to the removal of said beds from said premises almost immediately after the installation thereof, as aforesaid, the court finds that said building was not in good faith completed within six months."

[2] The evidence and findings bear strong witness to the fact that appellant fulfilled and performed all conditions precedent to its right to compensation for the specified equipment. Respondent has filed no brief, and we therefore accept the statement of facts contained in appellant's brief as correct. This is related above, and contains no evidence whatever of bad faith of either the plaintiff or the defendant. Since the judgment rendered was based solely upon the quoted finding of bad faith, plaintiff's case is clear, and it follows that the judgment must be reversed.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed, and that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiff and appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Melissa Bailer against A. E. Yewell, Alice K. Yewell, and A. O'Connell. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants first and second named appeal.

Affirmed.

Hoye & Boehler, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to impress a trust on a lot in Los Angeles county. The defendants A. E. Yewell and Alice K. Yewell answered. The defendant A. O'Connell did not answer, and her default was entered. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed. The defendants make several attacks on the findings, but all of those attacks are but different methods of presenting their contention that plaintiff's money did not go into that portion of the land called by the defendants the key lot. The record discloses that the plaintiff and the defendants had been friends for several decades. The plaintiff resided in the East. The defendant A. E. Yewell resides at Southgate in Los Angeles county, and is engaged in the real estate business. In July, 1924, the plaintiff sent her draft in the sum of $900 to Mr. Yewell, with directions to invest the same in real estate. Thereafter he made two executory purchases. Under one contract he undertook the purchase of the south 115 feet of the lands described in the complaint, and in the other contract he undertook the purchase of what he calls the key lot, the north 40 feet of said lands. He made his contracts with Clark and Wagner. They held an executory contract to purchase both lots, described as one, from Bessie Spring, who was the owner. At the trial it was admitted by the defendants that the plaintiff's money was received and was used in making payments under the first contract. However, it was the contention of the plaintiff that said moneys were used in making both purchases.

[1-3] The plaintiff contends that the total payments made aggregated exactly $900 and no more. The defendants claim that the payments aggregated $1,242.64. If the contention of the plaintiff can be sustained by the evidence contained in the record, in support of the judgment of the trial court, we are bound to adopt her contention. The plaintiff called the defendant, and, under a searching examination the witness produced three checks which represented moneys paid out on the purchase of the lots. On the first contract he claimed that he paid down $50. On the second contract he claimed that he paid down $150. The latter sum was also evidenced by one of the checks just mentioned. He testified that he had no checks or receipts showing the disbursement of the $900, except payments indorsed on the back of the contracts, and the checks introduced in evidence. He testified that the most of the payments made by him were paid in cash, and were indorsed on the executory contracts as the payments were made. His two executory contracts hereinabove mentioned were both introduced in evidence. The executory contract from Bessie Spring to Clark and Wagner was also introduced in evidence. The latter contract shows that $900 was paid on that contract as for principal. It also shows that, before the defendant entered into his executory contracts, his vendors had paid $200. In passing, it may be noted that $200 is also the sum of the two down payments which the defendant Yewell paid his vendors. After the defendant entered into his executory contracts, he paid many of his payments to the owner as distinguished from his vendors. Defendants' first contract of purchase shows a down payment August 12, 1924, of $50 and January 8, 1925, a further payment of $125, or a total of $175. The second one shows a down payment August 23, 1924, of $150, a cash payment of $20, and there is a check payment on this contract of $75 which was paid to Wagner, or a total of $245. The owner indorsed her contract January 1, 1925, showing taxes and interest paid to date, and thereafter the defendant paid her, or her assigns, $480, being twenty payments each of $20 in cash and a balance of $80 by check. The grand total is $900, and no more. The summary, made by the defendant, $1,242.64, contains many patent duplications, and is clearly inaccurate.

That the defendant invested the plaintiff's money in lands in the particular block of land was an admitted fact. Whether such moneys were invested in the entire lot described in the complaint or only in the southerly 115 feet thereof was the sole issue. The plaintiff's proof showed a set of facts from which the trial court could infer that plaintiff's moneys were used in the purchase of the entire lot, not a part only thereof. We cannot, on this record, say it erred.

The summary of the defendants leads nowhere. It includes: (1) Moneys paid to the vendors of the defendants, and (2) moneys paid to the owner. Some of these moneys went into the lot—not necessarily all. As stated above, it was stipulated that plaintiff's money went into at least a part of the land described in the complaint. The defendants' summary shows $50, the down payment, went into the southerly end of the lot; that is, was paid on the first contract. Then it shows that a check for $80 and cash payments $520 went into the purchase of the entire lot. How much went into the north end and how much went into the south end does not appear. Nor does it show what was done with the balance of plaintiff's money. Such facts do not dispute the stipulated fact, but are in accord therewith.

We have shown no more than $900 was paid by defendant in the purchase of the entire lot as described in the complaint. He made no claim that he used the plaintiff's moneys for any other purchase. To assume that he did is to impute to him the commission of a crime. But the law presumes that he committed no crime. It is therefore clear that the findings are supported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

STURTEVANT, J.

The district attorney filed an information against the defendant charging him with having committed three felonies: (1) An assault with intent to commit rape; (2) an assault with intent to commit the crime of kidnapping; and (3) a charge of grand theft. The defendant appeared and pleaded not guilty. A trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. During the trial, the second count was, on motion of the district attorney dismissed. From a judgment entered on that verdict, the defendant has appealed, and has brought up typewritten transcripts.

[1] The defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and that the verdict was the result of prejudice. In so far as he claims prejudice, he bases it on the statement that the complaining witness was a beautiful young girl, and that the defendant is not prepossessing in appearance. The record before us does not disclose the appearance of the complaining witness nor the appearance of the defendant. As to whether the evidence is sufficient or insufficient rests on the fact that there were no other witnesses than the complaining witness who saw the acts done which the complaining witness charged against the defendant. However, she took the stand and testified as to a set of facts which, if believed by the jury, entirely supported the verdict. There were some elements in the evidence on which counsel could have and doubtless did rely when arguing the case to the jury that the evidence was insufficent. But this court is quite unable to say that there was not evidence sufficient to support the verdict. We think the record brings the case well within the rule in the case of People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389.

[2, 3] The acts complained of occurred on the streets in Oakland. Some of the acts occurred where the street lights were bright and the view of the complaining witness was entirely clear. The defendant's offense was committed on the 1st day of June, 1930. About one week later the defendant entered the theater in which the complaining witness was employed as an usherette. He was conducted to a seat, and thereupon the complaining witness reported the fact of the defendant's presence to her employer. Her employer called a policeman. The policeman and the complaining witness approached within four or five feet of the defendant, and in an audible voice the policeman asked the complaining witness if the person who had assaulted her was in the room, and, if so, to go and put her hand on him. She turned and walked up and put her hand on the defendant. The defendant made no statement to the effect that he was innocent. These facts were introduced in evidence. The defendant contends that they were inadmissible because the police officer was speaking directly to the complaining witness, and she in turn was speaking directly to the police officer, and the defendant was not called upon to interrupt and make any statement. These matters were properly gone into. The objection goes to the weight, not the admissibility, of the evidence. But the power to weigh the evidence rested with the jury. People v. Ong Mon Foo, 182 Cal. 697, 703, 189 P. 690.

When instructing the jury, the trial court gave, among others, an instruction on the subject of the evidence just adverted to. The defendant complains of said instruction for the same reasons that he complains of the admission of the evidence. For the reasons which we have just stated, we think there was no error in giving the instruction. In other words, if the evidence was admissible, the instruction was proper. That the evidence was admissible we think is beyond dispute.

[4] The defendant claims that under no circumstances should he have been convicted of grand theft. We are unable to agree with him. At one time when the defendant approached the complaining witness during the evening of June 1, 1930, he took from her possession a purse containing $8. She testified that he did so without her consent. That purse was never returned to her. After the submission of the case, the statements of the complaining witness, the presumptions of law, and the proper inferences to be drawn from the facts legally proved were all before the jury. It is quite clear that it may not be said as a matter of law that a prima facie case of grand theft was not made out. The defendant took the stand in his own behalf, and attempted to prove an alibi. The evidence introduced in his defense was not at all convincing.

The judgment is affirmed.

The above action was brought by Frank Blackhurst and Harry Blackhurst, individually and as trustees, and by Sarah Jackson and Allen Hemstreet, against the administrator of the estate of Jabez Blackhurst, deceased, and Kate Blackhurst Wilber, to enforce a trust upon a parcel of land in the city of Santa Monica described as lot Y in block 120 according to certain maps recorded in Book 3 at pages 80 and 81, and in Book 39 at page 35 of Miscellaneous Records of Los Angeles County, and other property. All the parties except the administrator are the children of decedent and Sarah Blackhurst, his wife.

On August 14, 1899, said decedent, Frank Blackhurst, and Harry Blackhurst, all of whom were then residing in Minnesota, received as trustees under the provisions of the will of William Knapper of Staffordshire, England, the sum of approximately $11,000. This fund was to be held in trust during the life of said Sarah Blackhurst, the income thereof to be paid to her during her lifetime, and upon her death to be divided between her children then living.

The plaintiffs alleged that, at the time the trust fund was received, decedent had no property of his own; that his cotrustees permitted him to manage and control the fund, invest the same in his own name and apply the income to the use and benefit of said Sarah Blackhurst during her lifetime; that between 1899 and 1902 the trust funds in various amounts were invested in Minnesota, these investments consisting of the purchase of mortgages, building and loan stock, and the loan of a portion of the fund on mortgage security; that in November, 1904, decedent, with his family, came to Santa Monica, and brought with him $1,500 of the trust fund, leaving the balance invested in Minnesota; that thereafter he collected the latter sum and reinvested the same in California, among these investments being the purchase of the lot above described, for which was paid a total of $2,100; and that all the investments in California were, with the knowledge and consent of his cotrustees, made from the trust fund.

The answer of defendant Kate Blackhurst Wilber—who will hereinafter be referred to as the respondent—denied that decedent was without funds of his own, and alleged that, when decedent removed to California, he owned property in his own right of the value of $15,000. The answer also denied that the several mortgages and the stock described in the complaint were acquired by means of the trust funds, and made the same denial respecting the acquisition of the lot in question.

As special defenses it was alleged that in 1899 plaintiffs relinquished all their interest in the trust property to the decedent; that since September, 1899, and until his death decedent held the same adversely, and that by reason of their conduct plaintiffs were estopped as against respondent to claim any part of the above real property. In addition it was alleged that plaintiffs' claims were barred by the statute of limitations.

The court found against the material allegations of the complaint and in favor of the respondent on her special defenses thereto.

The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment entered thereon upon the grounds that the findings and conclusions of the trial court are unsupported. Plaintiffs state in their brief that, "in view of the fact that all of the property involved in this action, except the property designated as the Santa Monica property, namely, lot Y, block 120, would be distributed equally among the plaintiffs and defendant Kate Wilber in the event of a distribution by the court in the matter of the estate, as well as in the distribution of the trust estate among the remaindermen, we will devote our attention in the matter of this appeal solely to the questions involving the title and interests of the plaintiffs in the Santa Monica property."

The evidence shows that decedent died testate on January 8, 1914. By his will, which was executed on October 1, 1912, Sarah Blackhurst was given a life estate in all his property; and the remainder, with the exception of the property in dispute and a legacy to respondent, was bequeathed to his children in equal shares. As regards the portion given respondent, the provisions of the will, so far as material, were as follows: "Recognizing the loving care and companionship rendered unto her parents for all of the years she has remained with us without adequate remuneration, and because she is unmarried and unsettled in life at the date of making this will, I do hereby bequeath unto my daughter, Kate Blackhurst, the sum of $2,000, the same to be paid to her from said residue estate within three months after the death of my said wife; and I do also hereby give unto my said daughter the house and lot, lot Y, block 120, 418 Nevada avenue at Santa Monica, Los Angeles county, California, California, with all the household furniture contained in said house; to have and to hold the same to her, her heirs, and provided that my said daughter, Kate Blackhurst, shall not at the death of my said wife have been married; but if she shall have been then at any time married, then and in such case said house and lot * * * with all the contents of the house * * * shall be and remain a part of my said residue estate, and distributed as part thereof as hereinafter provided, my daughter, Kate Blackhurst, only receiving the $2,000. * * *" The will further provided that, subject to the life estate of Sarah Blackhurst and the bequest to Kate Blackhurst, the whole of the estate should be equally divided between decedent's children.

The appraised value of the estate was $21,551, and of the house and lot in dispute $2,000. After administration thereon, the whole estate was on June 25, 1915, distributed to Sarah Blackhurst for her natural life, no disposition of the remainder, however, being made by the decree. Respondent remained single until after the death of Sarah Blackhurst on March 19, 1924, and the present action was filed on February 3, 1926.

[1] The evidence shows that decedent with his wife and all his children, except a daughter now deceased, came to Minnesota from England in 1886. He had acted as one of the executors and trustees of the estate of William Knapper while residing in England. In 1899 this estate was divided, and the portion thereof held in trust for Sarah Blackhurst transferred to decedent and his cotrustees as above mentioned. It was also testified that decedent when he arrived in Minnesota had little, if any, estate. In 1887 he became a Methodist clergyman, and acted as such both in Minnesota and in California, receiving as compensation from the church a salary which varied from $600 to $800 per annum, with the free use of a dwelling. It was shown that decedent and his wife in 1897 and 1898 subscribed for a total of forty shares of stock in the Winnebago Building & Loan Society, upon which they paid monthly the sum of $20; that in 1906 they were repaid by the association on that account the sum of $1,693.69, and in 1909 the further sum of $1,922.15. It also appears that in 1899 decedent purchased from M. S. Bannister three mortgages aggregating $9,650, which were liens upon lands in Faribault county, Minn. Two of the mortgages were executed by Sarah J. Doude; one being for $4,000 and the other for $2,150. Both were assigned by Bannister, the mortgagee, "to the trustees of the estate of William Knapper, deceased." On January 29, 1902, new assignments of these mortgages were executed and recorded, reciting that the same were to correct the original assignments; that the mortgages described were sold to Jabez Blackhurst individually; that he paid the consideration therefor and that neither Harry nor Frank Blackhurst individually or as trustees has any interest therein. These mortgages were subsequently foreclosed by decedent, who purchased the mortgaged property in his own name. Both Harry and Frank Blackhurst were joined as defendants in the action, and both were served with summons and defaulted. The complaints alleged and the court found as to each mortgage the facts as stated in the assignments last mentioned, and that neither Harry nor Frank Blackhurst, individually nor as trustees of the Knapper estate, had any interest in the mortgages.

The parties last named were individually concluded by the judgment (Koehler v. Holt Manufacturing Co., 146 Cal. 335, 80 P. 73; Maddux v. County Bank, etc., 129 Cal. 665, 62 P. 264, 79 Am. St. Rep. 143; Freeman on Judgments [5th Ed.] § 662), and the facts shown were circumstantially relevant on the question whether decedent owned property separate from that of the trust estate.

This property was sold by decedent for $8,416.50, payable in installments, and the amount collected by him.

The third mortgage was executed by the Delevan Lodge of Odd Fellows. This was for $3,000, and like the others, was assigned "to the trustees of the estate of William Knapper, deceased." As in the other instance, however, there was executed and recorded a subsequent assignment, reciting that its purpose was to correct a mistake in the first, namely, a purported assignment of the mortgage to the trustees mentioned. On May 23, 1904, this mortgage was paid to decedent. Plaintiffs alleged that the purchase price thereof came from the trust fund, and that of the amount paid by the mortgagors there was used by decedent the sum of $1,000 to pay the first installment of the purchase price of the Santa Monica property.

As stated, the trial court found against these allegations, and also against the allegations that, when the Santa Monica property was purchased decedent had no money or other property except belonging to the trust fund.

Plaintiffs claim that, notwithstanding the above findings, the evidence shows the allegations to be true.

It appears that, from the period previous to the receipt of the trust fund by decedent and his cotrustees the income therefrom had been remitted to Sarah Blackhurst. These amounts were not shown, but it was testified that they exceeded the income from the fund since its transfer. Nor does it appear how much thereof was used for the support of the beneficiary and her family. There was also introduced in evidence a copy of decedent's individual account with the First National Bank of Winnebago, Minn., which account was opened on July 24, 1903, and closed April 11, 1914. The account showed deposits and withdrawals on dates and in amounts corresponding approximately with the payments made and received in the mortgage transactions mentioned above; also letters passed between decedent and the bank, indicating that the first payment on the Santa Monica property was drawn from this account. It was testified by plaintiff Hemstreet that she was told by decedent that this payment came from the trust fund. She also testified that, when she was living with her parents in 1892, decedent had no property. Plaintiff Frank Blackhurst testified to the same effect; but it appears that he left home at about the same time as Mrs. Hemstreet; and it is a fair conclusion from the testimony of both that thereafter they had but slight personal knowledge of their father's financial condition.

The evidence tends to show that decedent, following an understanding with his cotrustees, administered the trust in his own name, and apparently mingled trust and individual funds in the same account. The court also found that, after the death of her husband and the admission of his will to probate, Sarah Blackhurst took possession of the property in dispute, claiming a life estate therein, not under the trust agreement or any other instrument creating a trust, but under the terms of the will and the decree of distribution entered in the matter of his estate. The fact that she was one of the executrices of the will, procured the entry of the decree, and other circumstances shown, support the latter finding.

[2, 3] The burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the property in question was a part of the trust estate rested upon plaintiffs (Plass v. Plass, 122 Cal. 3, 54 P. 372; Parshall v. Parshall, 56 Cal. App. 548, 205 P. 1081); and it has been held, where a trustee after a mingling of funds has withdrawn sums therefrom from time to time it will be presumed that the moneys so withdrawn were from his own portion rather than from moneys held by him in trust (Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. 634, 66 P. 369, 70 P. 861).

[4] The evidence shows that decedent, in addition to his clerical duties, was an active business man; and the evidence reasonably supports the conclusion that, during the long period between his arrival in this country and the payments for the Santa Monica property, he had accumulated on his own account sums more than equal to its purchase price. While the court might have inferred from the testimony that the purchase money came from the trust fund, yet the evidence was not of a character which would exclude any other finding thereon. The credibility of the witnesses who were not disinterested, as well as the inferences to be drawn from the circumstantial evidence in the case, were questions for the trial court (Code Civ. Proc., § 1847; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308; MacDermot v. Hayes, 175 Cal. 95, 170 P. 616); as was likewise the determination that the property was not subject to the trust if there was any evidence consistent with that conclusion (Noble v. Learned, 153 Cal. 245, 94 P. 1047); and we cannot say that the finding that the lot was not acquired with the trust funds is unsupported.

As stated, the court also found that since 1899 decedent held the property adversely; that plaintiffs relinquished their interests therein, were estopped by their conduct from claiming the same, and that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. These findings are also attacked; but, in view of our conclusion with respect to the findings above discussed, it will be unnecessary to consider the other questions presented upon the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY v. HOLLISTER ESTATE CO. et al.

Civ. 7232.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 4, 1931.

Eminent domain ⚷262(4).

Where there was in record sufficient evidence to sustain awards of jury in condemnation suit, appellate court could not weigh evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the County of Santa Barbara against the Hollister Estate Company and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Clarence C. Ward, Dist. Atty., of Santa Barbara, and A. G. Balaam, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Lompoc, for appellant.

Heaney, Price & Postel and Percy C. Heckendorf, all of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment awarding damages in a condemnation suit brought for the condemnation of a street for a public road. Almost all of both of appellant's briefs consist of comparison or weighing of the evidence of values given, as to the values of the lands to be taken, and the damage to the defendants, by reason of severance.

The only assignments of error made in appellant's opening brief are: First, that the evidence does not sustain the verdict; and second, that the compensation awarded respondent is excessive.

If there is any evidence to sustain the awards, we cannot weigh the evidence. There is in the record sufficient evidence to sustain the awards of the jury in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 7722.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

1. Contracts ⚷266(1).

Party rescinding contract need not restore property until other party returns consideration (Civ. Code, §§ 1688, 1691, subd. 2).

2. Sales ⚷113.

To rescind contract, purchaser need not pay installments after notice of rescission (Civ. Code, §§ 1688, 1691, subd. 2).

3. Lis pendens ⚷24(1).

Where purchaser of personalty gave notice of rescission, seller had not title to property sufficient to convey to third person, except subject to final judgment in rescission action (Civ. Code, §§ 1688, 1691, subd. 2).

Purchaser of furniture served notice of rescission of contract on seller, and brought action to enforce rescission. During pendency of such action, seller sold furniture to third person, but did not have furniture in her possession. Third person then commenced action in claim and delivery against original purchaser to recover furniture.

4. Replevin ⚷103(4).

Where plaintiff, in action for claim and delivery, secured possession, sold personalty, and was unable to locate property, alternative judgment was unnecessary.

5. Sales ⚷124.

Assignee of note and mortgage for personalty not canceled in purchaser's action to rescind was not entitled to possession of personalty against original purchaser not restored consideration.

6. Sales ⚷130(4).

Purchaser recovering judgment in rescission could recover value of property plus damages for withholding same, against plaintiff in claim and delivery action making redelivery impossible.

7. Appeal and error ⚷1071(2).

Error in using word "unlawful" instead of "lawful" in finding was one of law, and, not being responsive to any issue, was not prejudicial.

8. Replevin ⚷93.

Finding that purchaser was in possession of furniture wrongfully taken from him in claim and delivery action was sufficient finding that purchaser was entitled to possession.

9. Sales ⚷124.

Purchaser was entitled to use property pending action to rescind, and was entitled to damages for withholding property taken in claim and delivery action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Gerald Egan against Lyman B. Parks, administrator of the estate of C. A. Sutton-Watts, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Law & Overholt and R. E. Hobbs, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

This case is before the court upon an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant. It appears from the record that pending the appeal the defendant C. A. Sutton-Watts has died; that Lyman B. Parks, the administrator of the estate of said deceased, has been substituted as the defendant in this action.

It appears from the evidence that on or about August 22, 1921, the defendant C. A. Sutton-Watts purchased from one Barbara Sarnow a lease and certain furniture; that she made a cash payment thereon, and executed and delivered to the said Barbara Sarnow a promissory note for the unpaid balance. Said note was secured by a chattel mortgage on the lease and furniture above referred to, and Sutton-Watts thereupon took possession of said property. That on December 31, 1921, Sutton-Watts served on Barbara Sarnow a written notice of rescission of the purchase made as aforesaid, and tendered a return of everything of value she had received by virtue of said purchase. The rescission was made because of a failure of title to the lease. Sarnow refused to comply with the rescission. An action was then commenced by Sutton-Watts against Sarnow based upon the rescission aforesaid. A judgment was entered in said action in favor of the plaintiff Sutton-Watts, and the defendant Sarnow appealed. During the pendency of the said appeal, and on February 26, 1923, Sarnow, the appellant therein, assigned the note and mortgage to Gerald Egan, who is the plaintiff in the case at bar. On March 1, 1923, this action was commenced by said Egan against said Sutton-Watts to recover the possession of all of said personal property based upon the assignment above mentioned. Sutton-Watts denied plaintiff's alleged right to possession of said furniture, and alleged that she was entitled to the possession thereof. However, the plaintiff Egan took the necessary steps, and obtained possession of the property through summary proceedings. This cause came on for trial January 18, 1926. The plaintiff Egan introduced in evidence the note and mortgage and the assignment of both by Mrs. Sarnow, the defendant in the action of rescission above referred to. He also obtained an admission from the defendant that no installments on the note had been paid since January, 1922. This constituted the plaintiff's evidence.

It was stipulated that the further trial of the action should be continued until the final decision of the action for rescission. In accordance therewith the court ordered the cause continued. The case referred to was decided December 1, 1926, Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, 80 Cal. App. 91, 251 P. 654, and it had long since become final when on October 7, 1927, the trial of the instant case was resumed. There was received in evidence a bill of sale made by Barbara Sarnow, the defendant in the former action, to Gerald Egan, the plaintiff herein, purporting to convey to him all of the furniture which she had previously conveyed to the defendant herein, Sutton-Watts. After such sale, and pending the appeal in the former action, all of the furniture above referred to was conveyed by Egan to Annie E. Edwards, and, upon obtaining possession thereof by means of this action as aforesaid, Egan delivered it to said Annie E. Edwards. It also appears from the evidence that W. R. Law, the attorney for the plaintiff Egan, was also the attorney for Mrs. Sarnow in the action of replevin herein above referred to, and was also the attorney for Annie Edwards, who purchased the furniture from Egan; that the latter was an employee in the office of attorney Law, and the consideration for the transfer from Sarnow to Egan was an attorney fee due Law. Further evidence will be hereinafter referred to as the several points advanced for a reversal of the judgment are discussed.

Counsel for appellant says that: "The principal question before the court is whether or not during the pendency of her appeal from a judgment for the rescission of a contract for the purchase of personal property and the cancellation of a note and chattel mortgage thereon, Sarnow had such a title to the furniture that she could transfer the same to plaintiff herein." In support of his theory that such title does exist, counsel for appellant cites Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, but does not point out its applicability to the question involved. That case affirms the judgment of rescission of the contract, but modifies the same by ordering a definite provision for the return of the property to the defendant in that action before the rescission could become effective. Appellant's principal reliance for the above contention is based upon section 1688 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "A contract is extinguished by its rescission." It is claimed by appellant that when, on December 31, 1921, the plaintiff in Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, served notice of the rescission of the contract of purchase upon the defendant Sarnow, the contract was immediately extinguished, and the defendant thereupon became revested with full title to the property offered to be returned. He cites in support of his contention Wilcox v. Lattin, 93 Cal. 588, 595, 29 P. 226; Hayt v. Bentel (Cal. App.) 126 P. 370; Spicer v. Hurley, 161 Cal. 1, 7, 118 P. 249, 251. In Spicer v. Hurley, supra, it is said: "Neither is it of any moment to say that subsequent to the rescission and the bringing of this action to enforce rescission a patent for the wrench was actually granted to defendant. The rights of the parties are governed by the conditions which existed when the rescission was made and were fixed by the rescission, for the rescission, if legally made, * * * 'extinguished' the contract." The other cases above cited are to the same effect. However, the precise point raised here was not before the court in any of those cases. The question here involved is this: The defendant in this action, being the plaintiff in Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, served in that action proper notice of the rescission of the contract; and was compelled to commence an action to enforce the rescission. While the action to enforce that rescission was pending, the defendant Sarnow, the other party to the contract and the defendant in that action, sold the furniture which she had previously sold to the plaintiff to a third party, but the furniture was not in her possession. The third party, Egan, then commenced this action in claim and delivery to recover this furniture. Under such state of facts, did the defendant Sarnow by virtue of the rescission become revested with title without fulfilling the terms of the rescission? In support of such claim, appellant, Egan, relies upon section 1688 of the Civil Code and the decisions above cited. But section 1691, subd. 2, of the Civil Code, provides that the party rescinding "must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so."

[1-3] In the instant case the notice of rescission was given; the rescinding party offered to restore everything she had received from the other party upon condition that such party should do likewise; this the latter positively refused to do. Therefore the rescinding party was not compelled to restore the property until the other party returned the consideration. In Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 510, 47 P. 369, 52 P. 797, it is held that the very object of a rescission is to place the parties in statu quo. The foregoing rule is so well established that further citation of authority is unnecessary. It is claimed by appellant that under the modified judgment in the case of Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, that as a condition precedent to the collection of the money theretofore paid on the contract the plaintiff therein must return to the defendant Sarnow the furniture. Having failed to return it, and also having defaulted in the payment of the installments due on the note, she was not in any event entitled to the furniture. We think these claims are answered by the fact that the decree in the rescission action merely follows the rule laid down in subdivision 2 of section 1691 of the Civil Code. Further, Mrs. Sarnow, the defendant in the replevin action, having sold the furniture to this plaintiff Egan, and he having disposed of the furniture, has thus placed it beyond the power of the plaintiff in that action to comply with the judgment, and therefore he has no just cause of complaint, and he was only entitled to it when she complied with the offer of rescission. If such is not the proper construction, then by a transfer of the property involved the action to rescind a contract becomes ineffective at the option of the wrongdoer. So far as the failure of the defendant to pay installments after the notice of rescission, such a requirement is not contemplated by the provisions of the law relating to rescission. In fact, such a ruling would be directly contrary to the claim made by appellant that the rescission was completed by the service of the notice thereof. It is claimed by the defendant herein that, under the authority of Montgomery v. Meyerstein, 186 Cal. 459, 199 P. 800, the plaintiff in the former action of Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, had a lien upon the furniture for the repayment to her of the sums of money she had previously paid under the contract. However, in the cited case the judgment gave a lien for the purchase money and expenditures. Such is not the case here. We are of the opinion that when, in the action of Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, plaintiff rescinded the contract, the party against whom the rescission was made had no right or title to the property sufficient to convey the same to a third party except it were made subject to the final judgment in that action. There is no question here of the rights of innocent purchasers.

The second point advanced for a reversal of the judgment is that the finding of the trial court that it is not true that plaintiff was or is entitled to the possession of the personal property is without foundation in the evidence. We think that what has been heretofore said negatives this contention.

[4] By the third point it is claimed the finding that the plaintiff herein transferred the possession of the property to a third party, and by reason thereof a return or redelivery thereof cannot be had or made to the defendant, is without support in the evidence. There is no dispute in the evidence that the property involved was sold and delivered to a Mrs. Edwards by the plaintiff in this action. The testimony of Mr. Law, counsel for the plaintiff, the person vitally interested in the transaction, was that he knew nothing of the location of the furniture. It also appears from the same source that the plaintiff Egan had been an employee in the office of Mr. Law several years previous to the trial, and that he never had any interest in the subject-matter. There was no further evidence upon this subject. Under the authorities, an alternative judgment is unnecessary where the evidence shows, as in this case, it would be ineffective. Burke v. Koch, 75 Cal. 356, 17 P. 228; Erreca v. Meyer, 142 Cal. 308, 75 P. 826; De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92, 44 Am. Rep. 542.

[5] By the fourth point it is claimed that the evidence fails to disclose that the defendant was entitled to the possession of the furniture involved. It is claimed that during the pendency of the appeal in Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra, the note and mortgage given by the plaintiff in that action to the defendant therein was never canceled; therefore the defendant in that action had a right to assign them to Egan, the plaintiff in this action. Therefore Egan had a right to collect the unpaid installments thereon, and, the same not having been paid, he (Egan) was entitled to the possession of the property. We think this point is also answered by what has been said upon the first point.

[6] The fifth point urged by the appellant is to the effect that a party who rescinds a contract cannot keep the property and at the same time have a judgment for the return of the consideration. As heretofore stated such judgments are made in the alternative, except when a return of the property cannot be had. The defendant in this action was not seeking in that action to collect the judgment and keep the property. She was asking for the relief granted, a judgment of rescission, that is, she asked to be placed in statu quo. Her right to that relief was circumvented by this plaintiff, who, with full knowledge of all the facts, obtained possession of the furniture, and now seeks to deprive the defendant herein of the fruits of the former judgment by purchasing the furniture from the defendant in that action, and by selling it to a third party, thus placing it beyond his power to return it to the defendant. The judgment in this action is for the sum of $2,500, the value of the property, and $1,500 for the taking and withholding the same.

[7] The sixth point of error is to the effect that the court's finding No. 1 to the effect that the plaintiff was never entitled to the possession of the furniture is in conflict with finding No. 3, which holds that it is not true that the plaintiff has ever been, or now is, in the unlawful possession of said property. It is quite clear from the record that finding No. 3 contains an error by using the word "unlawful" instead of "lawful." The error is one of law and not of fact. Neither word adds to nor detracts from the rest of the findings. The error is not prejudicial in any material degree, nor is it responsive to any issue raised by the pleadings.

[8] The seventh alleged error is that there is no finding of fact by the trial court that the defendant is or ever was entitled to the possession of the furniture. The findings do show that the defendant was in the possession of said furniture, and that through this action the plaintiff wrongfully took the furniture from defendant's possession. We think this showing is sufficient to meet the objection.

[9] One other objection of the appellant, incidental to the main points argued by him, requires consideration. It is claimed that the sum of $1,500 awarded to the defendant as damages has no basis either in law or in fact. This is based upon the claim that Sutton-Watts had no right to use the furniture pending the appeal in the action of Sutton-Watts v. Sarnow, supra. We have already held that the title remained in Sutton-Watts until the completion of the rescission by the parties. For that reason Sutton-Watts was entitled to use the same. It is not pointed out wherein the evidence is insufficient. We have examined the evidence, however, and find it amply sufficient.

We are satisfied that the judgment of the trial court is right. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Finding that defendants agreed to pay plaintiff reasonable sum per mile for use of his automobile and for his services in operating it held not supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas H. Selvage, Judge.

Action by Harry A. Long against Henry Harrison and others. From the judgment, defendant W. H. Schechert appeals.

Reversed.

Miller & Casady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John B. Haas and John D. Home, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Mr. Justice pro tem. JAMISON delivered the opinion of the court.

The complaint in this action consisted of two counts; the first of which was for money had and received, the second being for work, labor, and service done and material furnished. During the trial the case was dismissed as to defendant Jessie Calzasia, and judgment was rendered against the remaining defendants for the amounts set forth in the complaint. Defendant W. H. Schechert alone appeals.

The evidence produced by respondent in support of the first count of the complaint was to the effect that $250 of the $1,250 therein named was assigned to him by Thomas C. Knight, and that the interest of his wife, Matilda E. Long, in the remaining sum of $1,000 was also assigned to him; that respondent and his wife were induced to place in the hands of defendants Harrison and Schechert the said sum of $1,000 by reason of representations made by them that they had a lease upon certain mining claims and that the said money would be placed in escrow and not used until a corporation was organized to develop the said mining claims and that after said corporation was formed said money would be used in the development of said claims; that said defendants did not have any lease upon said claims, nor did they at any time organize a corporation; that, instead of carrying out the purposes for which said money was placed in their hands, said defendants converted it to their own use and failed and refused to repay the same to respondent and his wife.

The court found these facts to be true, and also found that the same false representations were made by said defendants to plaintiff's assignor, Knight. This last finding is not supported by the evidence. There is no evidence that said defendants represented to Knight that they had a lease on any mining claims, or that the money would be placed in escrow and not used until a corporation was organized to develop mining claims, or that, after said corporation was formed, the money would be used for the purpose of developing mining claims, or that said defendants appropriated said money to their own use.

Appellant contends that there was a contract between respondent and his assignors and said defendants under which the money named in the first count of the complaint was paid to them, and, there having been no rescission of the contract, an action for money had and received will not lie.

[1, 2] This contention is without merit, where the money, as appears from the testimony in this case, is obtained by false and fraudulent representations. Cal. Jur. 616; Firpo v. Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 80 Cal. App. 122, 251 P. 657, 658; McElhaney v. W. E. Moyer & Co., 101 Cal. App. 53, 281 P. 87. In the case of Firpo v. Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co., supra, the court said: "The rule has stood without contest that the common-law action for money had and received will lie to recover money obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, duress, undue influence, and mistake of fact." In an action for money had and received, fraud may be proved without specially pleading the facts constituting the fraud. Fallon v. Sockolov, 55 Cal. App. 33, 202 P. 909.

[3] There is substantial evidence to support the finding that respondent was hired by said defendants to work upon the said mining claims at a wage of $6 per day, and that for a period of 100 days he engaged in such work. The court found that respondent commenced work on said claims on August 16, 1925, and that he continued to work until February 10, 1926, and that during that period he worked every day. The only evidence bearing upon this matter was the testimony of respondent, who testified that he did not know the number of days he worked, but that there were more than 100. This finding of the court that respondent worked every day from August 16, 1925, to February 10, 1926, a period of 179 days, is not supported by the evidence.

[4] The finding of the court that said defendants agreed to pay respondent a reasonable sum per mile for the use of the automobile belonging to him and for his services in operating it, and that from August 16, 1925, to February 10, 1926, he operated his said automobile for their use to the extent of 2,550 miles, and that 25 cents per mile was a reasonable charge for such use, resulting in an indebtedness on account of this use of $837.50, is not supported by the evidence. In the first place, there was an error made in computing the amount of said use, which, according to the finding, should be $637.50 instead of $837.50. Then again, the evidence is to the effect that respondent would be paid for the wear and tear of his car and for the oil and gas used, but there is no evidence that he was to be paid for his services in operating the car.

Judgment reversed.

1. Action ⇨7.

If plaintiff acted within her rights in filing complaint for slander, bad motive, if any, held immaterial.

2. Appeal and error ⇨930(4).

Appellate court assumed, in support of judgment for plaintiff, that jury considered every thing defendant presented regarding plaintiff's motives in instituting slander action, in so far as they threw light on truth of charges.

3. Libel and slander ⇨121(1).

$30,000 damages for alleged slanderous statements charging plaintiff with crime and imputing want of chastity held not excessive.

4. Trial ⇨234(8).

Instruction on plaintiff's failure to call available witness held properly refused as improper law.

> Requested instruction was to the effect that the failure to call an available witness possessing peculiar knowledge concerning facts essential to the party's cause, especially if the witness be naturally favorable to the party's contention, relying instead on evidence of witnesses less familiar with the matter, gives rise to an inference that the testimony of such uninterrogated witness would not sustain the contentions of such party in suit.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1).

Instruction in slander action held not prejudicial as inferring that statements alleged to have been made were slanderous per se.

> Such instruction was not prejudicial, since it was susceptible of being limited to some of alleged statements, and other instructions covering the entire matter were entirely unobjectionable.

6. Appeal and error ⇨207.

Objection to conduct of plaintiff's counsel held not available on appeal, where defendant made no objection to counsel's conduct nor assigned anything as misconduct, nor asked trial court to rebuke counsel.

7. Libel and slander ⇨103.

Rejecting evidence that plaintiff's counsel made offer to one not shown to have authority to act for defendant to dismiss slander action, if defendant would purchase certain property from plaintiff, held proper.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages alleged to have been incurred by reason of slander. The defendant answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed and has brought up typewritten transcripts.

[1, 2] In her first point the defendant devotes a large amount of space to the motive which prompted the plaintiff to commence this action. If in filing her complaint the plaintiff acted within her legal rights, her action in that respect is not converted by a bad motive into an unlawful act. Furthermore, in so far as the plaintiff's motives threw any light on the truth of the charges made by her, in support of the judgment, we must assume that the jury gave due weight to everything the defendant presented regarding the motive of the plaintiff. Under this heading the defendant calls to our attention many items of evidence which she claims to be inconsistent or improbable. Of course, all of these matters were for the consideration of the jury and not of a court of review.

[3] The jury returned a verdict in the sum of $30,000. The defendant claims the verdict was excessive. The point has no merit whatsoever in the instant case. The specifications of the slanderous words were such that, if the jury believed the alleged words had been spoken, and that they were not true, it is then quite clear that the slander was so atrocious that there is no room for claiming that the verdict was excessive.

[4] It is asserted that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction worded as follows: "The Court instructs the jury that the failure to call an available witness possessing peculiar knowledge concerning facts essential to the party's cause, direct or rebutting, or to examine such witness as to the facts covered by his special knowledge, especially if the witness be naturally favorable to the party's contention, relying instead upon the evidence of witnesses less familiar with the matter, gives rise to an inference, sometimes denominated a 'strong presumption of law', that the testimony of such uninterrogated witness would not sustain the contentions of such party in suit." A most cursory reading of the proposed instruction shows that it is not sound law. Nor was it applicable to any evidence in the case. One Casey Jones was residing at the time of the trial at a place apparently within the jurisdiction of the trial court. He was not called as a witness by the plaintiff. The record discloses no reason why the plaintiff should have called him. Furthermore, it discloses no reason why the defendant did not call him if the defendant so desired.

[5] The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant made the statements alleged in the complaint, then such statements would be slanderous per se as charging the plaintiff with a crime and imputing her a want of chastity." The defendant asserts that the meaning of the instruction was to the effect that all alleged statements of the defendant were slanderous per se. Thereupon she is at pains to attempt to show that some of them were not. In the first place, the instruction is susceptible of being limited to some of the alleged slanderous statements. In the second place, the court gave another instruction which covered the entire subject-matter, and which was entirely unobjectionable. Reading those instructions together, it is perfectly clear that the defendant was not injured. Furthermore, it is not at all clear that every single statement alleged in the complaint was not slanderous per se. However, we do not feel called upon to enter into an examination of the subject nor to express an opinion thereon.

[6] In her fourth point, the defendant asserts that the conduct of counsel for the plaintiff was improper during the trial of the action, to the prejudice of the defendant. Thirty pages of her printed brief are devoted thereto. The record shows that the defendant did not at any time object to the conduct of plaintiff's attorney, she did not at any time ask the trial court to rebuke him, nor did she at any time assign anything as misconduct. She has made extended quotations from the record. We have examined those quotations, and we have examined the record itself, and we find no trace of error.

[7] Finally, the defendant makes the point that the trial court erred in refusing to admit certain testimony. The record discloses that Mr. Beardslee was one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, and that Mr. Roy Fish was an officer of the American Mortgage Company. It also shows that Mr. Fish transacted some business with the defendant. The record does not disclose any other authority resting in either. The complaint was filed September 1, 1927. The defendant called Mr. Fish, as a witness, and he stated that he had a conversation with Mr. Beardslee in 1928. Later the defendant offered to prove by Mr. Fish that in that conversation Mr. Beardslee stated that, if Mrs. Krug would buy a certain mine from the plaintiff and her son, all pending litigation would be dismissed. The court refused to receive the evidence. It needs no citation of authority to show that the ruling of the trial court was not error.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 341.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Fraud 🔑49.

One misrepresentation of material fact on which purchasers rely will support cause of action for fraudulent representations, although several misrepresentations are alleged.

2. Fraud 🔑27.

Vendor's misrepresentation that 72 acres of land were planted to certain varieties of almonds in certain specified proportions held actionable.

3. Fraud 🔑58(4).

Evidence held to establish that purchasers relied on vendor's misrepresentation that 72 acres of land were planted to certain varieties of almonds in certain specified proportions.

4. Appeal and error 🔑882(19).

Vendor could not complain on appeal that court failed to consider vendor's care of orchard, replanting trees, and payment of taxes in mitigation of damages in purchasers' action for misrepresentations, not having offered independent evidence of value thereof.

5. Appeal and error 🔑882(19).

In purchasers' action for misrepresentations, vendor could not complain on appeal of court's failure to consider vendor's payment of commission to purchaser, where no claim for recoupment was alleged in answer.

6. Set-off and counterclaim 🔑15.

Vendor's claim for set-off or recoupment for commission paid purchaser could not be maintained in purchasers' action for misrepresentations.

7. Election of remedies 🔑9.

Institution of purchasers' action for rescission, dismissed without prejudice, did not estop purchasers from maintaining action for misrepresentations.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1).

Griffith & Thornburgh, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Edward M. Leonard, of San Francisco, John H. Leonard, of Santa Cruz, and Webster & Lyon, of Paso Robles, for respondents.

JENNINGS, J.

This is an action instituted by respondents to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by them by reason of certain false and fraudulent representations made by appellant which induced the respondents to enter into a contract for the purchase of an 84-acre tract of land, 72 acres of which were planted to three year old almond trees and to make payments in compliance with the terms of the contract, which amounted to a total of $15,400.

It appears that during the years 1919 and 1920 three of the respondents resided in the state of Iowa, and that the fourth was a resident of Omaha, Neb. During the latter part of the year 1919 the respondent H. B. Kramer had his attention directed to a certain booklet entitled: "A Life Income Plus California." This booklet was published by the appellant, and described in the most glowing terms the financial profit to be derived from investments in land near San Luis Obispo, Cal., owned by appellant to be planted to almond trees. The interest of respondents was so aroused by the contents of the booklet that three of them came to California for the purpose of investigating the proposition. During their stay in San Luis Obispo, they met the president and certain agents of the appellant corporation, and were by these persons shown a number of tracts of land owned by the corporation, some of which were planted to almond trees. Among the tracts thus exhibited was one of about 84 acres, of which 72 acres were planted to three year old almond trees. A contract was entered into on January 24, 1920, by the respondents for the purchase of this tract for the sum of $44,000. It is this contract which respondents in their complaint allege they were induced to execute because of the false and fraudulent representations made by appellant's officers and agents.

Upon the trial of the issues presented by the pleadings, judgment was given in favor of the respondents in the amount of $28,600, which is the balance due on the purchase price of the land, and the appellant was ordered to execute its deed to the property in favor of respondents without the payment of any further installments of money provided for in the contract of January 24, 1920; the said amount of $28,600 being credited against the balance of $28,600 due on the contract.

Certain findings of the trial court are attacked as not being supported by the evidence. In particular, the court found that the respondents were defrauded by the following representations:

"(a) That said lands were of the finest almond land in the world;

"(b) That 72 acres of said lands were planted to almonds of varieties known as Nonpareil, Drakes and Texas, in the proportions as follows: Nonpareil two-thirds; Drakes one-sixth; Texas one-sixth;

"(c) That there was no danger of frost ever injuring almond trees planted or to be planted on said lands or the buds or fruit of said trees;

"(d) That said 72 acres so planted was a first-class almond orchard in every respect;

"(e) That defendant had acquired accurate knowledge regarding the character and value of said lands and from this knowledge the said land was worth upwards of forty-four thousand dollars ($44,000.00)"

[1, 2] Which were by the court found to be false and statements of fact made with the intention of deceiving, and which did deceive, respondents. It is contended that the trial court erred in finding that the foregoing representations were statements of fact, and that each and all of such representations are mere statements of opinion, and hence not actionable. But, if any one of the representations which the trial court found were made by appellant was a misrepresentation of a material fact upon which respondents had a right to rely, and did rely, it will suffice to support respondents' cause of action. Harris v. Miller, 196 Cal. 8, 235 P. 981. The representation as to 72 acres of the tract purchased by respondents being planted to certain varieties of almonds in certain specified proportions was such a representation. The record shows that it was made, and that it was a false statement. The evidence also shows that it was a representation of a very material fact. It was, moreover, a statement in which respondents, considering their unfamiliarity with almond culture, had a right to rely, and the evidence indicates that they did rely upon it. No element necessary to support respondents' cause of action relative to this representation is lacking, and, under the authority of Harris v. Miller, supra, it is not necessary to consider the four remaining representations which the trial court found were false statements of fact. It may be said in passing that, bearing in mind the circumstances of this case, we are of the opinion that there is only one of the remaining representations as to which there is any doubt of the correctness of the court's finding that it was a statement of fact. This is the representation that the lands of the appellant were of the finest almond land in the world.

[3] It is further urged by appellant that the evidence shows that three of the respondents came from their homes in other states for the express purpose of investigating the proposal described in the published booklet, that they made inquiries, were shown properties both of appellant and other owners, sought for and obtained information—in short, that they made a careful and thorough investigation, and hence that they did not rely upon the representations made to them by appellant, but relied entirely upon their own investigation. This contention may not prevail. So far as the investigation of the particular tract purchased by respondents is concerned, the evidence produced at the trial conclusively shows that the investigation of this tract was confined to one brief visit by two of the respondents accompanied by an agent of the appellant. Furthermore, it is apparent that, throughout the period of investigation, respondents placed reliance upon the representations made to them by appellant's agents, particularly upon the representations of Mr. Nehrhood, referred to in the booklet as appellant's field manager, horticultural expert, and the foremost authority on almond culture in California.

[4-6] It is also urged by appellant that the damages awarded by the trial court are excessive, and it is said that it is significant that the value of the land as found by the court is the exact amount which the plaintiffs had paid on their contract. It will suffice to say that an examination of the record discloses that, while there is a marked conflict in the evidence respecting the value of the land or the date of the execution of the contract, nevertheless there is ample evidence of a substantial character to support the finding of the court as to the value of the land. The court applied the proper measure of damages. Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 P. 729. As to the objection that the trial court in fixing damages did not take into account such elements as orchard care, replanting trees, payment of taxes, and commissions paid by appellant to one of the respondents, it does not appear that the trial court failed to consider the elements of orchard care, replanting of trees, and payment of taxes. These elements were not on trial of the case disassociated from the value of the land as appellant represented it to be. It does not appear from the record that any independent evidence was presented to the trial court relative to the value of these elements. Appellant will not now be heard to complain that the court failed to take into account elements in mitigation of damages when the duty rested upon it to have presented evidence of this character. As to the commission paid by appellant to one of the respondents, no claim for set-off or recoupment of such an item was alleged in appellant's answer or made by appellant during the trial of the action. Nor do we think such claim could be maintained in the present action.

[7] The further contention is made by appellant that respondents are estopped from maintaining this action by reason of their having elected the remedy of rescission in their former suit. This contention is entirely without merit. As counsel for appellant admits, the point has been decided adversely to his contention in the case of Campanella v. Campanella, 204 Cal. 515, 269 P. 433. The principle which controls in those cases wherein it has been held that a former judgment between the same parties relative to matters involved in a subsequent action is the principle of estoppel, but, in order that this principle may apply, there must have been a ruling upon the merits in the former case. It is not pretended that there was such a determination in the prior action instituted by respondents for the rescission of their contract with the appellant. The institution of the prior action for rescission, dismissed without prejudice to the institution of a new action upon the motion of respondents, amounted to no more than a mere gesture on their part which indicated their dissatisfaction with the contract they had entered into with appellant. The suit was not prosecuted to a hearing. There was no determination of the issues. Under such circumstances, the judgment of dismissal could not operate as res adjudicata.

[8-11] It is further urged by appellant that respondents are barred from relief in this action because of their laches. The trial court found that none of the respondents has been guilty of any laches. The question of laches is one for the determination of the trial court, and its conclusion thereon will not be set aside by an appellate court, if it finds reasonable support in the evidence. McMahon v. Grimes, 206 Cal. 526, 275 P. 440; Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 130 P. 2; Powell v. Oak Ridge Orchards Co., 84 Cal. App. 714, 258 P. 636. The contract of sale herein was made on January 24, 1920. The first complaint was filed by the plaintiffs March 5, 1923. It is said by counsel for appellant that this was practically a year after the date when the court found that the respondents discovered the alleged fraud, and from the context of appellant's brief we are led to infer that the date on which the discovery of the alleged fraud was made was April 25, 1922. It is argued that respondents could have made a discovery of the alleged fraud at a much earlier date; that at all events respondents took all the benefits of the contract, particularly the benefits of the care of the orchard, the replanting of trees, and the payment of taxes, and delayed for a period of practically one year after discovery of the alleged fraud of appellant before they took any action. It is well settled that, in order to bar a remedy because of laches, there must appear, in addition to mere lapse of time, some circumstances from which the appellant or some other person may be prejudiced. If the respondents are to be barred from their remedy in the present case on the ground that they have been guilty of laches, it must be that their delay in instituting an action has been of such length and under such circumstances that it would be inequitable to enter into an inquiry as to the validity of their claim or to allow such a remedy. Suhr v. Lauterbach, supra. But nothing appears in the record to indicate how appellant has been prejudiced by the failure of respondents to have instituted an earlier action, or, indeed, that there has been any prejudice. If, as counsel for appellant declares, the court found that the plaintiffs discovered the alleged fraud on April 25, 1922, the appellant had then already performed its duty to cultivate and care for the orchard and to pay all taxes and assessments against the property for a period of two years following the date of the agreement, January 24, 1920. It was thereafter under no obligation to render further service without charge to the respondents in cultivating and caring for the orchard. There is nothing whatever in the record herein to indicate that appellant was in any respect prejudiced by the delay of respondents to institute their action, and the specific finding of the trial court that respondents have not been guilty of any laches should not, therefore, be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Infants 🔑19.

Written report of probation officer need not be certified as part of transcript of evidence on appeal in proceedings to have infant declared abandoned (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3966, § 20; Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

3. Appeal and error 🔑612(1).

Trial court is without authority to certify to transcript of testimony not taken by official court reporter (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

4. Appeal and error 🔑522(1), 539.

Testimony taken at trial without presence of official reporter can only be supplied appellate court by stipulation or by bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

5. Appeal and error 🔑612(1).

Trial court is without authority to certify to only portion of material testimony in transcript on appeal, unless balance is omitted pursuant to stipulation (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

6. Appeal and error 🔑596.

Appellant has duty to furnish reviewing court with authenticated record of all material evidence adduced at trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

7. Appeal and error 🔑907(3).

In absence of complete authenticated record of all material evidence adduced at trial, appellate court will assume that every material fact necessary to support judgment exists in omitted evidence.

8. Appeal and error 🔑939.

Trial judge's certificate that transcript contained complete record of all evidence adduced at trial must be assumed true, in absence of proper amendment (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

*Hearing granted 2 P.2d 341.

Mr. Justice ROLFE L. THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from a judgment declaring the infant daughter of the appellants to be an abandoned child. There is also a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the transcript of evidence is incomplete.

Mary Lopes Silva is the infant daughter of the appellants, who also possess several other children. At the urgent request of the petitioner, Marie S. Canisso, the child was intrusted to her care by its parents, and remained a member of her family for the period of five years. The parents then demanded the return of their child. Mrs. Canisso thereupon petitioned the court for a decree, pursuant to the provisions of the Juvenile Court Act of California (Stats. 1915, p. 1225, and amendments, 1 Deering's Gen. Laws of Calif., 1923, p. 1535, Act 3966), to declare Mary Lopes Silva an abandoned child and free from the control of her parents.

A trial of the cause followed. The hearing was commenced in the absence of the court reporter. After the examination of the first witness had been completed in chief, the reporter appeared, and the balance of the testimony was taken in shorthand and subsequently transcribed. The petitioner abandoned her effort to prove the parents of the child were unfit to care for her. In the course of the trial counsel for the petitioner said: "Perhaps I can shorten things up. I realize we have made no showing as to the (un)fitness of the home of the parents, and that part of our petition will have to be abandoned."

The court found that the child had been left by its parents in the custody of the petitioner for a period of more than a year with intent on the part of the parents to abandon her, and that during this period of time the parents had neither contributed to her support nor provided for the maintenance of the child. A decree was accordingly rendered to the effect that Mary Lopes Silva was an abandoned child and free from the control of her parents.

An appeal from this decree was perfected by the parents of the child pursuant to section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. A transcript of all testimony which was taken by the phonographic reporter was transcribed and duly certified by the trial judge on August 16, 1930, in the following language: "The foregoing transcript * * * including all testimony offered or taken * * * is true and correct and is hereby settled and allowed." This transcript and the proceedings on appeal were filed in this court August 30, 1930. No application for diminution of the record to correct any defect or error in the transcript, pursuant to Supreme Court rule XIV, was ever made to this court, or at all. October 15, 1930, the trial court, apparently on its own motion, made and entered a minute order in said matter purporting to correct and amend the certificate to the transcript. This minute order recited that the former certificate had been inadvertently made, and thereupon directed that it be amended to certify that the transcript of testimony to which it was attached is full, true, and complete, "except that said transcript does not contain any record of the direct examination of the petitioner in said matter, to-wit: Marie S. Canisso, and that there was no official court reporter present at the time of the direct examination of the said Marie S. Canisso." A certified copy of this minute order, accompanied by affidavits to the same effect, were subsequently filed in this court. Upon this showing a motion to affirm the judgment was made to this court. The appeal was also submitted on its merits.

The motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground of incompleteness of the record charged: (1) Failure to certify to the written report of the probation officer as a part of the evidence; (2) omission of the evidence adduced in the examination in chief of the witness Marie S. Canisso; and (3) the invalidity of the certificate to the transcript on appeal, for the reason that a judge is not authorized to certify to evidence which is not taken by the official court reporter.

[1, 2] The petitioner relies upon the rule that a judgment will be affirmed on appeal when the transcript of testimony is incomplete, for the reason that it is assumed the omitted evidence will amply support the judgment in every particular in which the defect does not appear upon the face thereof. 2 Cal. Jur. 697, § 401; Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476; Coleman v. Farwell, 206 Cal. 740, 276 P. 335. The written report of the probation officer, which is required by the provisions of section 20 of the Juvenile Court Act, is merely preliminary to the institution of proceedings to declare a minor child to be either free from the control of its parents or a ward of the court. It is not a part of the evidence upon which the court may rely in determining the issues of the case. It is an extrajudicial statement of facts which gives the contestants no opportunity for cross-examination of the officer. It is not binding as a part of the evidence of the case. It is therefore unnecessary to certify to this document as a part of the transcript of evidence.

[3] In accordance with good reason, it has been held a court is without authority to certify to a transcript of testimony which was not taken by the official court reporter. 2 Cal. Jur. 623, § 343; Bush v. Allen, 172 Cal. 102, 155 P. 456; Jones v. Busick, 75 Cal. App. 606, 243 P. 27.

[4-7] The only methods of supplying an appellate court with testimony taken at the trial without the presence of an official reporter is either by stipulation as to the facts or by the settlement of a bill of exceptions in the manner provided by statute. On principle, it would seem to be equally true that a court would lack authority to certify to only a portion of the material testimony, unless the balance of the evidence were omitted by stipulation. This rule does not apply to identified documents which have been offered in evidence. The authentication of only a part of the material evidence is of no value to a reviewing court. The omission of a single material fact may change the entire result of the action. It is therefore the duty of an appellant to furnish the reviewing court with an authenticated record of all the material evidence adduced at the trial. In the absence of such complete record, the appellate court will assume that every material fact necessary to support the judgment exists in the omitted evidence.

[8] In the present case, however, the court certified that the record on appeal contained a full and complete transcript of all the evidence which was adduced at the trial. This certified copy of the transcript of evidence was duly filed in the appellate court. In the absence of a valid amendment to this certificate, procured in the manner required by law by means of an order of the appellate court to correct the error by diminution of the record, it must be assumed this certificate of the trial judge is true and correct. Bell v. Brigance, 194 Cal. 445, 229 P. 27.

[9] All courts of record have inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth. Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 16, 19, 43 P. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139; 15 C. J. 975, § 395. But it is said in the authority last cited: "One court has not authority to correct the records of another court." In re Dubosky (D. C.) 232 F. 380.

And in 2 Ruling Case Law, 155, § 130, it is said: "No record lodged with the clerk of the appellate court can be changed without the permission of the court duly entered of record at the time."

[10-12] The mere certificate to a transcript which, by means of an appeal, has become a record in a court of review, has passed beyond the jurisdiction of the trial judge, and may not be changed except by authority of the court in which the record reposes. No motion to change the certificate by diminution of the record was made in the present case. Three months had elapsed since the original certificate was executed. The transcript to which it was attached was no longer a record in the trial court. The minute order which was subsequently made by the trial judge in an effort to modify this certificate was therefore ineffectual so far as the transcript on appeal is concerned. Nor does the recital in the reporter's transcript of evidence that "Mrs. Marie S. Canisso (was) re-called for cross-examination" impeach the binding effect of the certificate. Although this language does infer that the witness had been previously called for examination in chief, neither this language of the reporter contained in the transcript which may be inconsistent with the solemn certificate of the trial judge, nor ex parte affidavits, may be considered to impeach the validity of the certificate. If this were possible, the authentic act of a court of record would be valueless. For the purpose of this motion to dismiss the appeal, we must therefore accept the certificate of the trial judge as true and assume that the transcript is a full and complete record of all the evidence which was adduced at the trial. It necessarily follows this motion to dismiss the appeal on account of alleged incompleteness of the transcript lacks support of the record. The motion to dismiss is therefore denied.

The appeal must be considered on its merit. For the reasons heretofore assigned, only the valid record as it is presented to us may be considered. We must assume there is no legal evidence before us of a purported change of the certificate, or of an absence of any evidence which was adduced at the trial.

[13-16] After a careful examination of the entire record, we are convinced there is no substantial evidence to support the finding of the court to the effect that the parents of Mary Lopes Silva relinquished her custody with the intent of abandoning the child. This is the only issue remaining in the case. During the progress of the trial, the petitioner specifically waived the question regarding the fitness of the parents to care for the child. Abandonment consists of relinquishing the custody, control, and parental authority over a child with the intent of surrendering those rights. In re Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 104 P. 444; Juvenile Court Act, supra, § 15. The failure to exhibit an interest in the child by visiting it or by contributing toward its maintenance, when the opportunity or ability to do so exists, is some evidence of abandonment. In the present case there is no substantial evidence of abandonment. It is a serious matter to deprive parents of the custody of a child. This should not be permitted without substantial evidence of either abandonment of the child or unfitness of the parents to care for it.

The evidence shows without contradiction that the parents of the infant child were employed on the premises of petitioner. The respective families were friends, countrymen, and neighbors living only about a mile apart. Mrs. Canisso had no small children of her own. The appellants had a large family of some eight children, and were poor. The petitioner became attached to the child, and asked the mother of the child to permit her to keep it for a few weeks. The child remained with petitioner for nearly five years, during which time she was well and kindly treated, receiving frequent visits and contributions of clothing from her parents.

Regarding her custody of the child, Mrs. Canisso testified through an interpreter: "Q. Did you at that time ask Mrs. Silva to take the child for a couple of weeks as you had no small child and wanted company? A. Yes, she told her she could keep her for two weeks.

"Q. Now, since then, the Silvas have asked for that child many times, haven't they? A. They never wanted to take her home until now. * * * She said they came there and fight for it.

"Q. But the Silvas never told you that you could keep that child for good, did they? A. She told her she could keep her for two weeks, but they did not come and get her at the end of two weeks. * * *

"Q. Did Mrs. Silva ever tell you that you could keep that child for good, that they would let you have her for always? A. No sir, but she had the baby over there, and they never went after her. * * *

"Q. Didn't the Silvas visit over at your house quite often? A. They did not visit Mrs. Canisso, they visited the baby." Several witnesses testified in behalf of the petitioner, to the effect that she took good care of the child. No further material facts were elicited from these witnesses.

Frank Filx, who was a partner and lived with Mr. Silva for four years, testified that the parents visited their child at the home of Mrs. Canisso, "about twice a month."

Mrs. Marie Denize, a friend of both families, testified that Mrs. Canisso told her "the child was Mrs. Silva's * * * that she had her there and they wanted to keep it because she liked it. * * * Because Mrs. Silva had lots of them and she said she would help Mrs. Silva by keeping her there for a while." This witness also testified that Mrs. Silva often visited her child and took wearing apparel to it whenever she was in need of clothing. The husband of Mrs. Denize testified to substantially the same facts.

Tony Silva, the father of the child, testified that they left the child with Mrs. Canisso at her request for a period of about two weeks. He said they often asked for the child, and the petitioner replied: "You are not paying no board, it is not costing you anything, and let her stay here." He said that they often visited the child, and bought clothing for it "whenever I buy for others I buy for her." Mrs. Silva testified to substantially the same facts related by her husband. Both parents testified they had never told Mrs. Canisso she could keep the child, and both claimed they had often demanded her return.

Laura, the daughter of petitioner, testified that Mr. and Mrs. Silva had given the child "a few pennies for a birthday," and that "the baby has a little bank account of her own now." She said the parents came for the child shortly before the proceedings for abandonment were commenced, and that her mother said, "They could not take the baby unless they paid the board."

The record contains no evidence in conflict with the foregoing statement of facts. A fair construction of the record indicates that the child was left with the petitioner temporarily, for the reason that the parents were struggling to maintain a large family and because Mrs. Canisso was attached to her. The respective families were neighbors and friends, and belonged to the same nationality. There is no evidence of intent on the part of the parents to abandon control of their infant child. Just the contrary is exhibited by the constant interest in the child, shown by frequent visits, contributions of clothing, and birthday gifts, small as they may have been. The testimony of the petitioner corroborates this conclusion. She admits that she first obtained possession of the child for two weeks only. No doubt she became attached to the child and did not wish to give it up. Evidently she took good care of it. This is not sufficient, however, upon which to deprive the natural parents of a child of its custody. To do so upon such unsatisfactory evidence as this case presents would become a travesty on justice. There is no substantial evidence to support the findings of an abandonment of the child on the part of the parents.

As before stated, the motion to dismiss is denied; and the judgment is reversed.

111 Cal. App. 572

MacCORKELL v. WILLIAMS.

Civ. 7717.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Feb. 5, 1931.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1).

In trial without jury, duty of resolving conflict in evidence rests on trial court, whose judgment is conclusive.

2. Automobiles 🔑244(6, 35).

That motorist, approaching pedestrian crossing at thirty miles an hour, was looking elsewhere and failed to see pedestrian until collision, justified finding of negligence.

3. Automobiles 🔑244(40).

Evidence justified finding that injury to pedestrian, struck by motorist approaching crossing at thirty miles an hour without looking, was not unavoidable as regards motorist.

4. Automobiles ⚷245(72).

Question of contributory negligence of pedestrian, struck by motorist who approached crossing at thirty miles an hour without looking, held for court in trial without jury.

5. Negligence ⚷136(26).

Existence of contributory negligence is ordinarily jury question, or question for court in trial without jury.

6. Automobiles ⚷217(2).

Pedestrian, before lawfully attempting to cross busy thoroughfare, need not, in absence of ordinance to contrary, wait on curbing until he can cross ahead of all vehicles in sight.

7. Automobiles ⚷160(1), 216.

Neither vehicles nor pedestrians ordinarily have superior right, but each must use street with due regard to other's rights.

8. Automobiles ⚷206.

In exercise of ordinary care, pedestrian may rely on expectation that automobiles will conform to customary traffic rules.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by John H. MacCorkell against Frank A. Williams. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry P. Goodwin and Burton Briggs Crane, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

This is a suit for damages for personal injuries. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $5,732.45. The defendant has appealed from said judgment. The appeal is based upon the ground that the findings of the trial court, as follows: That preceding and at the time of the accident the plaintiff was exercising reasonable and ordinary care for his own safety; that he was not guilty of contributory negligence; that the accident from which plaintiff's injuries resulted was the direct result of defendant's negligence; and that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff were not the result of an inevitable or unavoidable accident so far as defendant is or was concerned, are each and every one without support in the evidence.

Colorado boulevard is a paved highway about sixty feet wide between the curb lines and runs easterly and westerly through the city of Glendale in the county of Los Angeles. Griswold street is a public highway in said city about thirty-five feet wide between curbs and it intersects Colorado boulevard from the south but does not continue north of said Colorado boulevard. At the time of the accident which resulted in plaintiff's injuries, the plaintiff John H. MacCorkell was crossing Colorado boulevard from the north curb to the south curb, headed for some point in Griswold street. Somewhere between the center and the south curb of said boulevard plaintiff came into collision with the front end of a Cadillac automobile driven by the defendant Frank A. Williams, and was seriously injured.

[1] The evidence is conflicting on many material issues. Under the authorities the duty of resolving this conflict rested with the trial court, and the trial court having decided such conflict against the defendant, this court is bound thereby. Anderson v. Los Angeles Transfer Company, 170 Cal. 66, 148 P. 212. Reviewing the evidence in accordance with the foregoing rule, we shall state sufficient thereof to sustain the findings of the court, if there be such evidence in the record. John H. MacCorkell testified that he started to cross Colorado boulevard from the north curb thereof to a point on the westerly line of the sidewalk on Griswold street. Before stepping from the curb he looked both ways for traffic; that automobile traffic was coming toward him from both directions; that the nearest car from the east was 75 to 100 feet away; that the nearest car approaching from the west was from 100 to 150 feet away; that when he was a quarter of the way across he again looked east and west; that when he reached the middle of the street he observed the traffic both east and west on the boulevard; that he remembered hearing automobile brakes squeak; that he glanced toward the east and saw an automobile coming from that direction about 40 or 50 feet away; that he raised his right hand and knew nothing more until he recovered consciousness in the hospital a few days later; that he did not hear any automobile horn or warning sound. It also appears that plaintiff was on a pedestrian crossing. B. C. Gorrill testified that he was driving his car in a westerly direction on the north side of Colorado boulevard; that he was driving at approximately 20 miles an hour; that when he reached the intersection of Griswold street with Colorado boulevard he had slowed down to about 10 miles an hour; that he started to turn into Griswold street; that when the witness first saw the plaintiff, the plaintiff was about 4 feet north of the east and west center line of Colorado boulevard and approximately on a line between the northern curb of Colorado boulevard and the eastern curb of Griswold street; at that time the witness' car was about 40 feet east of plaintiff on Colorado boulevard; that the witness continued traveling westerly until he was about 10 feet east of the plaintiff; that from there he turned his car about 3 feet northerly toward the north curb line of the boulevard and stopped; that in slowing down his car the brakes squeaked; that at that point he first saw the Cadillac car of the defendant about 40 feet west of the center of the intersection of the boulevard and Griswold street, between the south curb line and the center of the boulevard and traveling at about 30 miles an hour; that the driver's head "was turned somewhat to the south"; from then on until the accident the witness did not see him turn his head in the direction he was going; that from the point where the witness first saw the plaintiff, the latter was walking south across the boulevard and continued until he was about the middle of the south half of the boulevard and on a line with the easterly curb line of Griswold street where he was struck by the defendant's car; that from the point where the witness saw him to the point where he was struck by the automobile, plaintiff was traveling at a fast walk; that when the brakes of the car in which the witness was driving squeaked plaintiff jumped forward 2 or 2½ feet; that immediately after the accident several people were near the car, among them the defendant, and the defendant said, "I did not see him until I hit him." Later in the day defendant told the witness that he thought he (the defendant) was driving 28 or 30 miles an hour; that as shown by skid marks on the pavement, the defendant's automobile skidded a distance of 15 feet, then a space of 10 feet in which there were no marks, and then the car skidded six feet more; that these marks started at the place where defendant's car struck the plaintiff; that the witness stopped his car so that the car of the defendant could pass him before he crossed the street; that he was 30 or 35 feet away from plaintiff when the latter jumped; that after that plaintiff continued across the street; that he looked west, made a swing back, and threw up his right arm; that the defendant's car was about 10 or 15 feet to the right of plaintiff, after that the Cadillac hit him. Ray H. Smith testified that at the time of the accident he was on the east sidewalk of Griswold street about 20 feet from the intersection of that street with the boulevard and walking north; that he saw witness Gorrill's car going west on the boulevard and he was just making the turn to go south on Griswold street; that the attention of the witness was drawn by the squeaking of the brakes just before Gorrill started to make the turn; that he looked up and saw the plaintiff approximately in the center of the street and about 4 feet north thereof on a line with the westerly curb line of Griswold street, the brakes squeaked, plaintiff glanced around and jumped about 3 or 4 feet, and went on south at a fast walk. The witness saw the car of the defendant coming at a distance, it was about 30 or 40 feet from plaintiff; that the plaintiff stopped, hesitated a second, and threw up his hand, and about that time the car hit him. The witness did not hear any horn blow; the defendant's car was traveling about 30 miles an hour; that traveling at the rate of 20 miles an hour defendant's car can be stopped in 20 feet; that by skidding the wheels it can be stopped between 15 or 20 feet. After the impact with the plaintiff's body the car continued easterly on the boulevard, veering to the south, and came to a stop about 20 feet east of Griswold street. This witness also testified to the skid marks on the pavement. It also appears from the evidence that the plaintiff was carried on the front bumper and fender of defendant's car from the point of impact to where the automobile stopped and he was found lying on the pavement at that point. The witness Smith continued testifying. He stated that he heard some one say in the presence of the driver of the Cadillac car, "I didn't see him until I hit him"; that he did not know who said it. On cross-examination this witness said that the plaintiff was going fast up to almost the time of the accident, when he glanced around and saw the car coming and stopped; when he stopped he was right in front of defendant's car. Maude M. MacCorkell, the wife of the plaintiff, testified that at the Glendale hospital she had a conversation with the defendant and he said, "I didn't see your husband until I hit him," and also said that he was going between 28 and 30 miles an hour. These statements were made the day of the accident. Guy B. McChristian and Ethel McChristian testified that in a conversation held with the defendant the evening after the accident the defendant repeated the above statements. At another time the same remarks, according to the testimony of Sam MacCorkell, were made to him by the defendant. It also appears that the defendant was familiar with Colorado boulevard and Griswold street and had driven on the boulevard many times. The defendant and some of his witnesses testified that the former was driving his car at about 20 miles an hour; that the plaintiff jumped when the brakes on Gorrill's car squeaked; that he jumped back and forth in front of Gorrill's car and then ran directly across the boulevard in front of the defendant's car; that the defendant was looking in the direction he was traveling, and when he saw plaintiff he endeavored to stop his car; that when plaintiff ran in front of his car he was but a few feet away. Evidence was also introduced by the defendant that his car, traveling at 20 miles an hour, could not be stopped by the application of the brakes in less than 35 to 40 feet. There is a conflict as to the exact location of the plaintiff at the time the automobile struck him, but under the evidence we deem that an immaterial matter.

[2, 3] From the evidence above set forth does it appear that the defendant was guilty of such negligence as constituted the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries? We think that it is clear that it does. The evidence that he was driving his car at a speed of about 30 miles an hour while approaching a pedestrian crossing and that he had driven over said street many times and was familiar therewith; that he was not looking in the direction in which he was driving; that he made the remark that he did not see the plaintiff until he hit him; and that he was driving at a speed of about 28 or 30 miles an hour—is sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court that the defendant was so negligent. Also it is sufficient to justify the further finding that so far as the defendant was concerned the accident was not unavoidable.

[4] It is also contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. On this subject the evidence discloses that before the plaintiff stepped from the curb on the boulevard, he looked in both directions for traffic; that he was traveling within the limits of the pedestrian crossing, where he had a legal right to be; that from time to time he looked in both directions for approaching automobiles; that as he reached approximately the center of the boulevard he again looked west; at this time he had one foot forward and as he looked up, he swung back to his other foot and threw up his hand but was struck by the defendant's car. It is true there is evidence for the defendant that at the time the brakes on Gorrill's car squeaked the plaintiff jumped and then without looking in either direction broke into a run and went directly in front of defendant's car. This evidence however merely raised a conflict.

[5-8] The case of Rignell v. Font, 90 Cal. App. 731, 266 P. 588, 590, and the cases there cited, are authority for a number of the points involved in this action. It is held in said case "the question of the existence of contributory negligence is ordinarily one of fact to be determined by the court or jury." "It cannot reasonably be said that, before one may lawfully attempt to cross a busy thoroughfare, in the absence of an ordinance to the contrary, he must wait upon the curbing until he can cross the entire street ahead of all vehicles which may be in sight." "Neither vehicles nor pedestrians ordinarily have a superior right to the use of a public street, but, upon the contrary, each must exercise the privilege with due regard to the rights of the other." Further, that in the exercise of ordinary care a pedestrian may rely upon the expectation that automobiles will conform to the customary rules of traffic. We deem it unnecessary to cite further authorities.

We are satisfied that the findings are sustained by the evidence and the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

QUEIROLO et al. v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.*

Civ. 7384.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 3, 1931.

Rehearing Granted March 5, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⚷181(1).

Automobile driver does not owe invited guests same degree of care which common carrier owes to passenger, but must use ordinary care and diligence for their safety.

2. Automobiles ⚷246(2).

Instruction that guest was entitled to reasonable care and caution by truck driver held not objectionable as requiring same degree of care imposed on common carriers.

3. Negligence ⚷117.

Defense of contributory negligence, if disclosed by plaintiff's evidence, may be taken advantage of, although not pleaded.

4. Trial ⚷253(7).

Instruction directing verdict for plaintiff must include all conditions necessary to show defendant's legal liability.

5. Automobiles ⚷224(1).

Automobile passenger must use reasonable care for his own safety.

6. Automobiles ⚷245(87).

Whether automobile passenger has used reasonable care for his own safety is jury question, unless evidence be insufficient to support finding of contributory negligence.

7. Automobiles ⚷224(5).

Automobile passenger, if aware that driver is carelessly rushing into danger, may be obligated to take steps for his own safety.

8. Automobiles ⚷224(5).

Automobile passenger's duty to remonstrate against excessive speed depends on circumstances of case.

*Rehearing granted 300 P. 487.

9. Automobiles 🔑224(5), 226(2).

Automobile guest held not contributorily negligent by failing to protest against excessive speed, where failure did not proximately contribute to injuries, or protest could not have affected driver's conduct.

> Evidence showed that driver of truck involved, immediately on discovering approaching automobile, swerved to right in attempt to avoid collision, and that interval between appearance of danger and occurrence of accident was too slight to justify conclusion that any act of guest would have affected conduct of driver.

10. Trial 🔑241.

Evidence that speed of truck was excessive, and that truck was not under control, justified instructions involving quotations from Motor Vehicle Act regarding drivers' duty concerning care, speed, and control of vehicle.

11. Negligence 🔑121(2).

"Res ipsa loquitur doctrine" is based in part on theory that defendant, controlling instrumentality causing injury, knows cause of accident or has best opportunity of ascertaining cause, and that plaintiff is obliged to allege negligence generally, and rely on happening of accident.

> [Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur," see Words and Phrases.]

12. Negligence 🔑121(2).

Where complaint alleges negligence specifically rather than generally, res ipsa loquitur doctrine is inapplicable.

13. Negligence 🔑121(2).

Plaintiff alleging particular act of negligence, which is act that legal inference tends to establish, is not thereby deprived of res ipsa loquitur doctrine.

14. Automobiles 🔑246(60).

Instruction that invited automobile guest need not show specific negligence causing injury, but might rely on proof that accident, with due care, would not ordinarily have occurred, held not erroneous.

15. Negligence 🔑58.

To constitute "proximate cause," injury must be natural and probable consequence of negligent act.

> [Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Proximate Cause," see Words and Phrases.]

16. Trial 🔑260(8).

Refusing instruction correctly defining proximate cause held harmless, where satisfactory definition thereof was given.

17. Trial 🔑252(8).

Instruction imposing on automobile guest absolute duty of protesting against excessive speed held properly refused, being unjustified by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Rita Queirolo and husband against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub and J. C. Wood, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harvey S. Craig, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, brought this action to recover for injuries sustained by Rita Queirolo through the overturning of an automobile truck operated by an employee of defendant company.

The defendant maintained a camp at Electra, and used a truck in hauling supplies to the camp from the town of Jackson. Joseph D. Queirolo was one of the employees of defendant. Elmer Boitano was the driver of the truck, and, according to his testimony, had been instructed by the foreman in charge to carry the wives and children of employees to and from the camp. On July 14, 1926, Mrs. Queirolo was granted permission to ride to Jackson and return. The evidence shows that, while returning, the driver, in approaching a curve on the highway, which at that point rounds a high bank on the left, was driving to the left of the center of the highway. His speed was estimated to have been from fifteen to thirty-five miles per hour. At or near the curve he met another automobile, whereupon he swerved sharply and passed down a sloping bank on his right-hand side of the highway. The truck was overturned, causing injuries to Mrs. Queirolo. It was also testified that the driver, until he reached a point about fifteen feet from the approaching automobile, was not looking in that direction but to his right, and did not see the danger until the horn of the automobile sounded.

The action was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, and defendant has appealed from the judgment entered thereon. As grounds therefor it is contended that the court improperly refused certain instructions offered by defendant, and that two of the instructions given were prejudicially erroneous.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you find from the evidence that Rita Queirolo was given permission by defendant, the company just named, acting through one of its duly authorized agents, to ride to the town of Jackson and return on the company's stage, she was at the time of the accident entitled to receive at the hands of the driver reasonable care and caution upon his part looking to the avoidance of hurt or injuries to herself. I will modify that somewhat: I have already advised you as to the nature of the accident. If you believe from the evidence that Elmer Boitano was negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries to the plaintiff, Rita Queirolo, and further find that he was at the time an agent of the defendant company and acting within the scope of his authority as such, then your verdict must be for the plaintiffs and against the defendant, Pacific Gas and Electric Company."

[1, 2] While, as urged by defendant, the operator of an automobile does not owe invited guests the same degree of care which a common carrier owes a passenger, he is nevertheless bound to use ordinary care and diligence for their safe carriage. Nichols v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319. The first part of the instruction states the above rule substantially; and the contention that it imposed upon defendant the duty resting upon common carriers is without merit.

As to the remaining portion of the instruction, it is contended by defendant that the evidence shows plaintiff to have been guilty of negligence, in that she failed to protest against the speed the truck was traveling and that the instruction erroneously omitted this element.

[3-6] Although contributory negligence be not pleaded as a defense, which was the case here, nevertheless, if it appears from the evidence introduced by the plaintiff that he was guilty of such negligence, the defense may be availed of though not pleaded (Cahill v. Stone Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 P. 84, 19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1094; Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, 250 P. 565), and it is also the rule that an instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff must embrace all the conditions necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant (Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237). According to plaintiff's testimony, the truck as it rounded a curve was traveling more than twenty-five miles an hour. She further testified that she knew the vehicle was going too fast, but made no protest. An automobile passenger is bound to use reasonable care for his own safety; and whether he has used such care is a question of fact which must be submitted to the jury (Shields v. King, 207 Cal. 275, 277 P. 1043), unless the evidence be insufficient to support a finding of contributory negligence (Flores v. Fitzgerald, 204 Cal. 374, 268 P. 369).

It has been held that the negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to a passenger unless the latter exercised some control over the driver, or had the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the vehicle should be operated. Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 679, 269 P. 529.

[7-9] In the case at bar it is not contended that the plaintiff could have exercised any control, or had the power to direct the operation of the truck. According to her testimony and that of the driver, the approaching automobile was first seen by them when the same was approximately twenty feet away. Likewise the truck came within the view of the driver of the automobile at about the same distance. While, as held in Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709, and Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460, if a passenger is aware that the driver is carelessly rushing into danger it may be incumbent upon him to take steps for his own safety; yet, as pointed out in Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, these cases state the rule upon the subject of a passenger's duty in the face of a known danger, and have no application where the danger is not apparent, and it is not shown that there was anything that the passenger could have done to avert the accident after the danger became known to him. The duty of a passenger to remonstrate against excessive speed is dependent upon the circumstances of the particular case. Dowd v. Atlas, etc., Service Co., 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870. It is manifest from the evidence in the present case that the driver, immediately upon discovery of the approaching automobile, endeavored to avoid a collision, and that the interval between the appearance of danger and the happening of the accident was too slight to justify the conclusion that any act by plaintiff would have affected the conduct of the driver, or that her failure to act proximately contributed to her injuries.

[10] The court in its charge quoted certain paragraphs from the Motor Vehicle Act relating to the duty of drivers as to care, speed, and control of the vehicle. It is claimed that these provisions had no bearing upon the issues in the case.

There was evidence that the speed of the truck was under the conditions shown excessive; also from the way in which the accident happened the jury might reasonably have inferred that the truck was not kept under control. In view of this evidence, the instructions were not improper.

The following instruction was given: "The plaintiff is not required to show particularly what the specific act of negligence was which produced the injury. It is only required to show by preponderance of evidence that the accident could not ordinarily have occurred had due care been employed by defendant, and you are instructed that if the testimony in this case shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff, Rita Queirolo's injuries were sustained by reason of the negligent acts of the defendant's employee, and that those negligent acts were the proximate cause of the injuries, then it will be your duty to return your verdict for the plaintiff."

Appellant contends that this instruction improperly permitted the jury to presume negligence from the happening of the accident, and that, in view of plaintiff's pleading, the res ipsa loquitur doctrine had no application to the case.

[11-14] The complaint alleged, in substance that, due to the negligent operation of the truck by defendant's driver, the same ran off the highway and turned over, causing injury to the plaintiff. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine is based in part upon the theory that a defendant in charge of an instrumentality which causes injury either knows the cause of the accident or has the best opportunity of ascertaining it; and the plaintiff, having no such knowledge, is compelled to allege negligence in general terms and rely on proof of the happening of the accident in order to establish negligence. Connor v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 26 A. L. R. 1462. Consequently where, instead of relying upon a general allegation of negligence, the complaint sets out specific negligent acts or omissions complained of, the doctrine does not apply. Marovich v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595. But it has also been held that the doctrine applies where negligence is pleaded both generally and specially (Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 180, 111 P. 519, 527; Bourguignon v. Peninsular Ry. Co., 40 Cal. App. 689, 181 P. 669), where the evidence tends to show specific acts of negligence (Burke v. Dillingham, 84 Cal. App. 736, 258 P. 627; Kilgore v. Brown, 90 Cal. App. 555, 266 P. 297), or where the injured person is an invited guest (Brown v. Davis, 84 Cal. App. 180, 257 P. 877). Nor, as held in Atkinson v. United Railroads, etc., 71 Cal. App. 82, 234 P. 863, is the plaintiff deprived of the right to rely upon the doctrine by reason of having averred the particular act of negligence complained of where such act is the one which the legal inference tends to establish. And in Seney v. Pickwick Stages, etc., Inc., 82 Cal. App. 226, 255 P. 279, 280, where the same rule was approved, it was held that the doctrine applied to allegations "that 'defendant operated the auto stage * * * in such a careless, reckless, wanton, and negligent manner that the said auto stage was overturned.'" In view of the above decisions the instruction was not erroneous.

[15, 16] The following instruction was also given: "I instruct you that the proximate cause must be understood to be that which in the natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause, produces that event and without which the event would not occur."

Appellant concedes the correctness of this instruction, but complains that another offered by it, stating the test by which to determine the question of proximate cause, was improperly rejected. To constitute proximate cause, the injury must have been the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act (Williams v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. App. 715, 93 P. 122; Marton v. Jones, 44 Cal. App. 299, 186 P. 410); and it has been held that the consequence must be one which in the light of the circumstances an ordinarily prudent man ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur as the result of his negligence (Benson v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. 45, 32 P. 809, 33 P. 206; Marton v. Jones, supra; Henry v. Southern Pacific Co., 50 Cal. 176). As has been stated, the latter rule is usually given in connection with the first as explanatory of it; that is to say, the natural and probable consequences of a negligent act or omission are those which ought to have been foreseen or could reasonably have been anticipated. 45 Corp. Jur. "Negligence," § 483, pp. 913, 917. The instruction given has, however, been approved as a satisfactory definition (Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 504, 182 P. 37); and, while the offered instruction correctly explained the rule and might properly have been given, we cannot say that its refusal was prejudicially erroneous.

[17] The following instruction offered by appellant was also refused: "You are instructed that a passenger in an automobile operated by another not for hire is required to use ordinary care for her own safety; and though you may believe that Elmer Boitano, the driver of the truck in this case, was driving at an excessive rate of speed immediately prior to the accident considering the nature and condition of the highway, if you further believe from the evidence that said Elmer Boitano drove said truck along said highway between the town of Jackson and the place where the accident occurred at a similar rate of speed and in a similar manner, and if you find that the plaintiff failed to remonstrate with said Elmer Boitano as to his manner of driving said automobile, or to request said Elmer Boitano to stop said automobile and permit plaintiff to alight therefrom, then you are instructed that the plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care for her own safety, and if you further find that plaintiff's failure to exercise such care for her own safety contributed to the cause of the accident, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

The duty of a passenger to remonstrate against excessive speed or to withdraw from the vehicle, a reasonable opportunity therefor being afforded, is not absolute; the question whether by failing to do so he is wanting in ordinary care being dependent upon the circumstances of the particular case. Shields v. King, supra. The offered instruction made it the absolute duty of plaintiff under the evidence to protest against the speed of the truck. As stated, there was no evidence which would have justified the conclusion that the plaintiff was bound to remonstrate, and the instruction was properly refused.

The verdict was fully supported, and a review of the record discloses no error which would warrant a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

FIRPO v. PIPER et al.

Civ. 7461.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Jan. 28, 1931.

1. Partnership ⚷264, 285.

Unauthorized transfer of partnership interest to stranger and sale of assets to corporation dissolved partnership and relieved partner not knowing thereof from liability on contract executed after dissolution (Civ. Code, §§ 2397, 2450).

2. Partnership ⚷285.

Company contracting with partnership could not recover against partner unless knowing he was member of original partnership and having no knowledge of dissolution of partnership (Civ. Code, §§ 2397, 2450).

3. Partnership ⚷296(3).

Evidence showed company selling advertisements knew it was dealing with corporation to which partnership assets were sold as real party in interest, precluding recovery against partner not knowing of sale of partnership nor contract entered into (Civ. Code, §§ 2397, 2450).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by E. Firpo against Frederick J. Piper and others. Judgment for defendant J. W. Woodruff, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur W. Bolton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem.

Appellant, as the assignee of Lockwood-Shackelford Company, a corporation, brought suit to recover the value of advertising services alleged to have been rendered defendants at their special instance and request and for which it is alleged defendants promised and agreed to pay the sum of $3,311.93. The defendants Green Manufacturing Company, a copartnership, F. J. Piper, Charles E. Smock, copartners, and Dale H. Poole, guarantor, defaulted, and judgment was entered against them. The respondent, J. W. Woodruff, one of the original copartners in Green Manufacturing Company, appeared and contested the action. In addition to filing a general denial, he pleaded two separate and special defenses; namely, that the indebtedness sued upon was incurred by defendants Piper, Smock, and Poole as individuals and as directors or officers of Redusoll, Inc., the corporate successor to the assets and business of Green Manufacturing Company, and that it had already been judicially determined in the United States District Court, in the matter of Green Manufacturing Company, a bankrupt, that respondent was not liable for the amount sued for herein.

At the conclusion of the trial the court found that the advertising services were not rendered to respondent at his instance and request, and that he did not promise and agree to pay therefor, but, on the contrary, that the services were performed for Redusoll, Inc. It further found that the order in the bankruptcy proceedings constituted a final determination of respondent's liability for appellant's claim. Judgment was entered accordingly.

In order to pass upon the correctness of the above findings, it will be necessary to analyze with some care the evidence offered and received in the trial court.

It appears that on January 12, 1925, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling "Redusoll" and certain extracts, hair tonics, and reducing creams under the name of Green Manufacturing Company, the defendants Piper and Smock and the respondent, Woodruff, signed certain articles of copartnership, whereby the said Piper agreed to employ all of his time in manufacturing said products, at a salary of $200 per month, the said Smock agreed, for a similar compensation, to employ all of his time in selling said products, and the said Woodruff agreed to lend financial aid to said business. It was specifically agreed in the articles of copartnership that no obligation was to be incurred in excess of the sum of $250 without the written consent of all the parties thereto, and that on demand of any two parties a corporation should be formed, wherein each of the partners was to have an equal share. Thereafter the said Piper and the said Smock proceeded to manufacture and market the products of the said copartnership under the name of Green Manufacturing Company, while the said Woodruff, whom it appears was an officer in the United States navy and absent from the state of California at all times during the subsequent conduct of the business, furnished financial assistance as agreed.

Some time in July or August of 1925, the defendant Poole was called upon by defendants Smock and Piper in regard to financing the business of Green Manufacturing Company. After investigation by Poole, it was agreed among the three that Poole should have a one-quarter interest in the business for financing it. No new partnership papers were drawn up, however, as Poole agreed to incorporate a new company to take over the business. Poole forthwith assumed active charge of the business, put his own money into the project, and changed the sales policy and the price of the products. Poole at no time had dealings with the respondent, Woodruff. The latter testified that, while he received a communication from Piper or Smock regarding Poole becoming a partner or acquiring an interest in the business, he never communicated with them about the matter, and that he had no information as to whether or not Poole ever became a partner.

On August 21, 1925, as a result of Poole's activities, articles of incorporation of Redusoll, Inc., were drawn up, signed by the said Piper, Smock, and Poole, and by one Brechtel and one Brown as incorporators. The articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state on August 29, 1925. On September 3, 1925, a bill of sale from Green Manufacturing Company to Redusoll, Inc., of all of Green Manufacturing Company's assets was signed by Messrs. Piper and Smock for and on behalf of the old partnership. Said bill of sale was signed and executed in triplicate. One copy was given to Poole, one was sent to respondent, and the third was kept in the office of Green Manufacturing Company. After the execution of this bill of sale, all the assets of Green Manufacturing Company were turned over to Redusoll, Inc., and defendant Poole immediately took over the full management thereof. The location of the office was changed, the name "Redusoll, Inc.," or "Redusoll, Incorporated," was placed on the office door, stationery, billheads, cartons, and containers, the telephones were listed under that name, and all customers were notified of the change.

On September 11, 1925, an agreement for advertising was entered into by and between Lockwood-Shackleford Company and Green Manufacturing Company; one C. H. Beebe signing on behalf of the advertising company and defendant Piper signing on behalf of Green Manufacturing Company. By the terms of this agreement the advertiser, Green Manufacturing Company, agreed to pay Lockwood-Shackelford Company for its services a fee of 15 per cent. of the total expenditures made by it on account of advertising and advertising matter, the minimum service payment thereunder being fixed at one dollar per month. Although the parties contemplated the expenditure of approximately $4,000 for an advertising campaign, no definite figures were agreed upon until after the agreement was executed.

Under date of September 11, 1925, Lockwood-Shackelford Company furnished a written estimate of the cost of certain services totaling the sum of $3,990.60. This was indorsed "Approved, Green Manufacturing Company by F. J. Piper." Three subsequent estimates in the several sums of $69.75, $404.25, and $45, were also furnished, which were, respectively, indorsed "Authorized, Green Manufacturing Co. by F. J. Piper; O. K. Poole;" "Approved, Green Manufacturing Company, by F. J. Piper; O. K. Poole;" and "Authorized, Green Manufacturing Company by Poole."

Respondent, Woodruff, was never consulted in reference to the execution of the original agreement, nor in reference to the approval of any of said estimates; nor was he at any time notified that his copartners intended to or did incur any indebtedness in excess of the $250 limit expressly mentioned in their articles of copartnership.

As to what actually transpired at and about the time the advertising agreement was entered into and the estimates approved there is considerable conflict.

Herbert C. Bernsten, general manager of Lockwood-Shackleford Company, testified that he was not present when the agreement was signed, and that shortly thereafter he objected to the credit situation and demanded further information. He was, according to his testimony, shown the original copartnership agreement between Piper, Smock, and Woodruff, and was told that respondent was a man of means and that as a partner he would be liable for the indebtedness incurred. He further testified that he secured a report as to the financial standing of respondent and of Green Manufacturing Company, but did not go forward with the advertising campaign until the defendant Poole had guaranteed the account, and until Poole's financial standing had also been investigated. He admitted, however, that, at several conferences had in reference to advertising, he was told that Redusoll, Inc., was being formed to take over the business of Green Manufacturing Company, but insisted that the advertising was to be done for the latter.

C. H. Beebe, another representative of Lockwood-Shackleford Company, also testified in effect that the advertising was to be done for Green Manufacturing Company as the real party in interest.

Opposed to this testimony, the following evidence was introduced on behalf of the respondent, upon which he relies as support for the court's findings herein:

The defendant Piper testified that several times during the year 1925 the above-mentioned C. H. Beebe called upon him and solicited advertising for Lockwood-Shackleford Company; that in June or July he told Beebe that as soon as the corporation, Redusoll, Inc., was formed there would be a chance of advertising; that, the next time Beebe called after the corporation was formed, and solicited advertising, he was told that Piper had nothing more to do with that because he was only the production manager, and that Poole had been appointed as general manager of the corporation. Piper directed Beebe to see Poole about the advertising. Thereafter Beebe, Poole, and Piper met by appointment, and Beebe endeavored to get an advertising contract. Poole told Beebe he was not yet ready for advertising, that the corporation had been formed, and that it was his task now to raise money and sell stock, and that after that he would go ahead with the advertising and give him a contract. Piper then testified that, the next time he saw Beebe, Beebe presented him with a printed form of contract to sign, and stated that Poole had sent Beebe to him for the purpose of securing his signature. Piper objected to signing the contract because Poole was in charge of affairs and because the contract was made out in the name of Green Manufacturing Company. In Beebe's presence Piper telephoned to Poole and voiced these objections and was told by Poole that he was in a hurry, that it was only a matter of form involving an obligation of but $1 per month, and that it made no difference who signed the contract or in whose name it was made out. Thereupon Piper signed the contract.

Piper further testified that a short time thereafter a meeting occurred at the office of Lockwood-Shackelford Company whereat Messrs. Poole, Smock, Piper, and Bernsten were present. Bernsten submitted the first estimate or cost of the proposed advertising campaign. The estimate was passed around, and Poole said, "Piper, you had better sign this," to which Piper replied, "Why should I sign this? I am production manager; you are the general manager; and furthermore it is made out in the name of the Green Manufacturing Company." Poole replied, "It doesn't make any difference; it is just a matter of form; just sign it and it will be O. K." Thereupon Piper signed the original estimated of $3,990.60. Some of the subsequent estimates were also signed by him, as he considered them a part of the original estimate.

The following testimony was also given by Piper: "Q. Now, as I understand your testimony, what was done was between Redusoll. Inc., and the Lockwood-Shackelford Company? A. Yes, sir."

As to respondent Woodruff's name being mentioned, Piper testified that his name was not mentioned by anybody when the question of credit was discussed.

The defendant Poole gave testimony in effect as follows: That during the year 1925 both Beebe and Bernsten of Lockwood-Shackelford Company called upon him soliciting business. He told them that a new corporation was going to take over the business of Green Manufacturing Company, and that, when the affairs were all arranged, he would talk about an advertising contract. Finally he agreed to let them handle the advertising, and they submitted the advertising contract whereby Lockwood-Shackelford Company was retained as advertising agent. He further testified that the Redusoll business was being operated under the name of the corporation, although they had not yet received permission to sell stock; that Piper, Smock, and Poole were in Bernsten's office when the estimates were talked over and they agreed to go through with the contract as outlined; that the estimate was handed to Poole to sign, but, being made out in the name of Green Manufacturing Company, Poole told Piper to sign it, saying it made no difference; that a day or two later Bernsten telephoned and said he would like to have another meeting; that the same parties again met, and Bernsten said he was not satisfied with the financial set-up and did not want to go ahead with the advertising unless Poole personally guaranteed the account. Poole thereupon signed the written guaranty.

Poole testified also that while the advertising matter was being prepared practically all of the business was being taken care of by him, and that he called at Lockwood-Shackelford Company's office nearly every day.

The following question and answer appear in the record: "Q. Practically all of this advertising agreement, so far as any conferences were concerned, was conducted by you for the Redusoll Company with the representatives of the Lockwood-Shackelford Company? A. Yes." The witness also testified that he did not recall respondent Woodruff's name having been mentioned during any of the interviews or conversations with the representatives of the Lockwood-Shackelford Company; that Woodruff was not in California at the time, had nothing to do with the business, and was neither an incorporator, officer, director, nor stockholder of Redusoll, Inc.

It further appears from the record that the advertisements put out by Lockwood-Shackelford Company in accordance with the terms of their agreement bore the name of "Redusoll, Inc.," rather than that of Green Manufacturing Company, and that the portfolio prepared by Lockwood-Shackelford Company and containing the proposed advertisements compiled for salesmen to show distributors represented to the trade that the goods were manufactured and sold by Redusoll, Inc. The portfolio also contained a copy of a letter written by the San Francisco examiner stating that they had received from Lockwood-Shackelford Company an advertising contract for over 7,000 lines of advertising for Redusoll, Inc., manufacturers of Redusoll reducing cream. Regarding this letter, Mr. Beebe testified as follows:

"That statement is absolutely correct. They had received that contract. They had received it as far as the advertising signature was concerned for Redusoll, Incorporated. Mr. Poole and I went to the San Francisco Examiner on several occasions.

"Q. Who told the San Francisco Examiner that the Lockwood-Shackelford Company had a contract for advertising for Redusoll, Incorporated; was that you, or some other member of the firm? A. They got their authorized space orders.

"Q. Who gave them that? A. The space department of the Lockwood-Shackelford Company."

[1] Upon the foregoing evidence and other evidence which it will not be necessary to detail, the trial court found "that prior to the month of September, 1925, said partnership (that of Piper, Smock & Woodruff) was dissolved;" "that at the time said advertising was done and said services were rendered defendant (respondent) J. W. Woodruff was not a partner of Green Manufacturing Company;" and "that it is not true as alleged in plaintiff's complaint that Lockwood-Shackelford Company, a corporation, rendered to defendant (respondent) J. W. Woodruff at his instance and request the advertising or advertising services referred to and described in said complaint."

We believe the testimony above set forth and referred to is sufficient to support these findings. The giving to Poole of an interest in the business and placing him in full charge of the management thereof contrary to the terms of the partnership agreement, whereby Piper and Smock were to devote their entire time to the business, the formation of Redusoll, Inc., the transfer to it of the business and assets of the copartnership and the incurring of indebtedness in excess of the limited amount, all effectuated a dissolution of the original partnership.

"A partnership can be formed only by the consent of all the parties thereto, and therefore no new partner can be admitted into a partnership without the consent of every existing member thereof." Civ. Code § 2397.

"A general partnership is dissolved as to all the partners. * * * 4. By the transfer to a person, not a partner, of the interest of any partner in the partnership property." Civ. Code, § 2450, as it existed in 1925. See, also, 20 R. C. L. 954, and Moropoulos v. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601.

[2, 3] If, as herein held, respondent was not in fact a member of the Green Manufacturing Company at the time the advertising indebtedness was incurred, Lockwood-Shackelford Company would have no right to look to him for payment of its claim unless it knew he was a member of the original partnership and had no knowledge of its dissolution nor of facts sufficient to place it on inquiry. The evidence, however, although conflicting, is sufficient to justify the conclusion that Lockwood-Shackelford Company did not know of respondent's former connection with the partnership, and that, even if it did have such knowledge, it also had knowledge of the partnership dissolution and that it was dealing with Redusoll, Inc., and its incorporators as the real parties in interest.

Having held with the trial court that the original partnership of Green Manufacturing Company had been dissolved prior to the date of the advertising agreement with appellant's assignor and that the services of Lockwood-Shackelford Company were not performed for respondent nor for any partnership of which he was a member and that he did not promise and agree to pay therefor, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the additional defense of res adjudicata.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SAN PEDRO LUMBER CO. v. KREIS et al.

Civ. 7648.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 2. 1931.

As Modified Feb. 19, 1931.

1. Mechanics' liens 🔑277(2).

Materialman, to be entitled to lien against owner of premises on which structure was erected, must prove materials were used therein.

2. Mechanics' liens 🔑281(1).

That materials sold were of kind used in structure is insufficient to prove that materials were used in structure, to entitle materialman to lien against owner.

3. Mechanics' liens 🔑281(1).

Proof that materialman shipped materials to contractor is insufficient to show materials were used in structure on which materialman claimed lien.

4. Mechanics' liens 🔑279.

Materialman claiming lien against owner of premises on which structure was built has burden of proving value of materials, in absence of fixed contract price.

5. Mechanics' liens 🔑281(1).

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien, evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that materialman furnished material of certain value which was used in building.

> Drivers employed by materialman claiming lien on premises for materials and foreclosure thereof testified to fifteen deliveries of material to owner's premises, value of which, according to testimony of materialman's shipping clerk, was $539.17. Drivers testified to eight other deliveries to same place, but there was no evidence as to quantity or value of these deliveries. Shipping clerk testified to value of lumber and material described in nine invoices charged to contractors and shipped to building to be used therein, value of which was $823.70, but shipping clerk testified he was never on premises and had no personal knowledge that materials were delivered or used there. Court found that materialman furnished lumber and material of value of $1,781.25.

6. Mechanics' liens 🔑277(6).

Complaint to foreclose mechanic's lien for reasonable value of materials held not at variance with proof showing estimate of cost of materials but no binding obligation fixing prices.

Claim of lien held properly admitted, in action to foreclose mechanic's lien, to show compliance with statute.

8. Mechanics' liens 🔑277(2).

Materialman suing to foreclose mechanic's lien need not prove nonpayment of claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by the San Pedro Lumber Company against C. W. Kreis and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Isadore Reese and another appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed and remanded in part.

D. Howard Painter and Glen Behymer, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ernest B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien filed by plaintiff on certain real property owned by defendants Isadore Reese and Ida Reese, who will be hereinafter referred to as the appellants.

Appellants entered into a contract with defendants C. W. Kreis & Son, pursuant to which the latter constructed a building upon the premises. Following the execution of this contract, the plaintiff furnished certain building material, for which the lien was claimed. The complaint alleged that the material was delivered pursuant to an agreement to furnish the quantities required by the contractors, and that the latter promised to pay the reasonable market value thereof; that between November 18, 1924, and February 17, 1925, lumber and building material were furnished, to be used and the same were actually used in the construction of the building; that the reasonable value thereof was $1,810.05, no part of which had been paid, it being alleged, however, that material of the value of $28.80 was returned.

Appellants by their answer alleged that the contractors were to pay plaintiff an agreed price for the building material, and denied that any part of the same was furnished for use or used in the construction of the building. They also denied that any part of the claim remained unpaid.

The court found that lumber and building material of the reasonable value of $1,810.05 was furnished by plaintiff to the contractors, and that the same with the exception of certain material returned, valued at $28.80, was actually used in the construction of the building. A judgment of foreclosure was entered accordingly.

As grounds for the appeal, it is contended that the above findings are unsupported, that there was a material variance between the pleadings and the proof, and that the court erred in admitting the claim of lien in evidence.

Certain drivers employed by plaintiff testified to fifteen deliveries of material to the premises, the value of which, according to the testimony of plaintiff's shipping clerk, was $539.17. These and other drivers testified to eight other deliveries to the same place, but the record discloses no evidence as to the quantity or value of these deliveries. The shipping clerk further testified to the value of the lumber and material described in nine invoices charged to the contractors and which was shipped to the building to be used therein. The aggregate value of these items was fixed by the witness as $823.70. He also testified that he was never on the premises and had no personal knowledge that any of the lumber or material was delivered there. There was testimony that a sign was placed on the premises stating that plaintiff was furnishing material, and that two of the deliveries first mentioned were received by appellant Ida Reese. A witness called by appellants estimated the total value of the rough and finished lumber used in the building at the sum of $1,306.85; this estimate being based upon prices in 1924 and 1925.

[1-4] In order to entitle a materialman to a lien as against the owner of premises upon which a structure has been erected, there must be proof that the materials were used therein (Ensele v. Jolley, 188 Cal. 297, 204 P. 1085); and the fact that the materials sold were of the kind used in a structure such as that upon which the lien is claimed is insufficient to prove that the materials were used therein (Roebling Sons Co. v. Bear Valley Irrigation Co., 99 Cal. 488, 34 P. 80). Nor is it sufficient to show that the materialman shipped the materials to the contractor. 17 Cal. Jur. "Mechanics' Liens," § 149, p. 208; W. P. Fuller & Co. v. Fleisher, 63 Cal. App. 78, 218 P. 53. And, in the absence of a fixed contract price, the value of the materials furnished must be shown, and the burden of proving their value rests upon the materialman. 40 C. J. "Mechanics' Liens," § 651, p. 460; 17 Cal. Jur. "Mechanics' Liens," § 150, p. 208.

[5] Here, with the exception of the fifteen deliveries first mentioned of the proved value of $539.17, there was either a failure to prove the fact of the other deliveries claimed or the value thereof. Moreover, the total value testified by the plaintiff's shipping clerk, he being the only witness who professed to be familiar with prices, was but $1,362.87; and this amount, as stated, included invoices of material not shown to have been delivered. This evidence was manifestly insufficient to sustain the finding that plaintiff furnished lumber and material of the value of $1,781.25 which was used in the building.

We find no merit in the claim that there was no evidence of the intention that the materials furnished should be used in the construction of the building. That such was the case is sufficiently shown by the testimony of plaintiff's shipping clerk.

[6] Nor was there a variance between the pleading and the proof. The testimony of this witness shows that an estimate of the cost of the materials was furnished the contractor, but that no binding obligation fixing the prices to be charged was entered into.

[7] The claim of lien was properly admitted in evidence to show a compliance with the statutory requirements. 40 C. J. "Mechanics' Liens," § 666, p. 465; Nofziger Lumber Co. v. Solomon, 13 Cal. App. 621, 110 P. 474.

[8] It is further urged that there was no proof of the nonpayment of plaintiff's claim. Under the rule established by the following cases, such proof was unnecessary: Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 P. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127; Stuart v. Lord, 138 Cal. 672, 72 P. 142; Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 14 Cal. App. 289, 111 P. 760; Madera Sugar Pine Co. v. Adams, 68 Cal. App. 111, 228 P. 544.

No other questions require consideration, but, in view of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings in the above particulars, it will be necessary to that extent to reverse the judgment. That portion of the decree adjudging that plaintiff is entitled to a lien for the value of the fifteen deliveries of material above referred to, amounting to $539.17, is accordingly affirmed; and that portion thereof adjudging that plaintiff is entitled to a lien for the balance of its claim, namely, $1,242.08, is reversed; and it is further ordered that the cause be remanded for a new trial on the questions as to the amount and value, if any, of material furnished by plaintiff and used in the structure described in the complaint in excess of the fifteen deliveries of material mentioned.

The judgment is reversed.

BOHN v. GRUVER (UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA et al., Interveners).

Civ. 6894.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 26, 1931.

1. Gifts 🔑49(2).

Evidence showed that alleged donee of bonds on trust acted mala fide, and sought to take advantage of donor's mental incapacity, and to conceal transaction from donor's widow, justifying widow's recovery.

Evidence showed that alleged donor was about 75 years of age and reposed great confidence in donee, who had been pastor of a church of which donor was a member; that about seven months before death of donor, his wife requested donee to supervise his business affairs; and that donee knew at time of alleged gift that donor was without sufficient mental capacity to understand nature of transaction.

2. Property 🔑9.

Although statute declares possession to be presumptive evidence of ownership, presumption is disputable, and may be overcome by showing character of possession (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 11).

3. Evidence 🔑594.

Court may not arbitrarily disregard unimpeached testimony of witness (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, declares that witness is presumed to speak truth, but such presumption may be overcome by his manner of testifying, or character of testimony; and that jury are exclusive judges of credibility.

4. Evidence 🔑589.

That witness is party to action, and is evasive and quibbling and has given contradictory versions of transaction, may be considered in determining credibility (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

5. Witnesses 🔑389.

That witness admitted some of his previous statements were false did not lessen their effect as impeaching evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

6. Appeal and error 🔑994(3).

Credibility of witnesses is question for court in trial without jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

7. Evidence 🔑594.

The most positive testimony may be contradicted by inherent improbabilities, or by circumstances tending to discredit it (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

8. Gifts 🔑49(2).

That alleged donor of bonds was aged and feeble was suspicious circumstance, where donee claimed that donor desired secrecy regarding gift, especially as to donor's wife.

9. Gifts 🔑47(3).

Where alleged donor of gift inter vivos, although not totally incapacitated, lacks mental vigor, and cannot protect himself against imposition, fraud and undue influence are presumed.

10. Gifts 🔑49(2).

Long delay in disclosing alleged gift, or absence of disclosure until after donor's death, or absence of witnesses or writings, creates suspicion.

11. Fraud 🔑50.

Burden of proof usually rests on person asserting fraud or undue influence.

12. Gifts 🔑47(3).

Respecting gifts inter vivos, where relation of trust and confidence exists, donor's extreme age and infirmity, with slight evidence suggesting coercion, requires donee affirmatively to show absence of undue influence.

13. Evidence 🔑217(18).

Memorandum prepared by alleged donee shortly after donor's death, purporting to show circumstances of gift, held properly excluded as self-serving, notwithstanding memorandum was contained in deposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1854).

14. Witnesses 🔑414(2).

Witness whose story is criticized as recent fabrication, or who is asserted to have motive for testifying falsely, may prove giving of similar account before effect could be foreseen, or motive existed.

15. Trial 🔑83(1).

Objection that witness' memorandum was self-serving was sufficient to justify court's ruling excluding it; memorandum being self-serving, and incompetent to rebut contention that witness' story was recent fabrication (Code Civ. Proc. § 1854).

16. Appeal and error 🔑854(4).

If exclusion of evidence is proper on any ground, judgment will not be reversed.

17. Trial 🔑105(2).

Court may exclude incompetent and self-serving evidence, even in absence of objection (Code Civ. Proc. § 1854).

18. Appeal and error 🔑994(3), 1012(1).

Credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony are questions for court, in trial without jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Rose A. Bohn, individually and as executrix of the last will and testament of Julius A. Bohn, sometimes known as and called J. A. Bohn, deceased, against Oscar H. Gruver, wherein the United Lutheran Church in America, a corporation, and others, intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant and interveners appeal.

Affirmed.

A. P. Black, of San Francisco, and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, Everett J. Brown, and Thomas J. Ledwick, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Harrison S. Robinson, Harry L. Price, and Chapman, Trefethen & Chapman, all of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The above action was brought by Rose A. Bohn individually and as executrix of the last will and testament of Julius A. Bohn, deceased, to recover from defendant Oscar H. Gruver certain bonds of the Imperial irrigation district, together with damages.

The testator died on April 25, 1922. After making certain specific bequests, which did not include the bonds in question, he bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife, who is the plaintiff above named. The defendant was an executor of the will. The plaintiff alleged that the bonds, which were valued at $200,000, were owned by the testator and lost during his lifetime; that defendant thereupon wrongfully became possessed thereof and detained the same; and that demand for their possession was refused. The pleading further alleged that defendant claimed an interest therein adverse to plaintiff and the estate, and concluded with a prayer for their recovery. By an amendment thereto it was further alleged that due to their detention the interest upon the installments of interest which became due upon the bonds was lost to plaintiff and the estate; that defendant concealed the fact that he had possession thereof, and consequently the inheritance taxes due thereon to the state and federal governments were unpaid until after penalties had attached, thus causing further damage. Defendant denied that Bohn was the owner of the bonds at the time of his death or that defendant wrongfully came into possession thereof, and alleged that the same were delivered and title thereto transferred to defendant by Bohn in trust for certain charitable purposes, namely, for the use and benefit of the United Lutheran Church of America and a number of its activities, which were described in the answer. Defendant further denied the alleged concealment of the bonds and the damage averred.

The church mentioned, with certain of its corporate administrative boards, filed a complaint in intervention, alleging in substance that the bonds were transferred to defendant in trust for the use and benefit of the interveners, and prayed judgment accordingly. The material allegations of this pleading were denied by plaintiff.

According to the findings the defendant had been the pastor of a church of which the deceased was a member, and the two were intimate friends. The testator, who at the time of his death was about seventy-five years of age, reposed great confidence in the defendant, but in the month of December and for several months prior thereto and thereafter was infirm, weak in body and mind, and unable to care for his property; that in September, 1921, at the request of plaintiff, defendant undertook to care for the testator so that he would not be imposed upon or dispose of his property improvidently; that defendant by reason of his influence over the testator, and due to the latter's weak condition and lack of independent advice, obtained possession of the bonds in question; that the testator, who was the owner of the bonds, did not understand or have the mental capacity to understand the nature or effect of the transactions had with defendant. It was further found that the bonds were not placed in defendant's possession by the testator with the intent to lose possession or control thereof, and that the same were not transferred in trust for the uses or purposes claimed by the defendant and the interveners or otherwise. The court also found that defendant concealed from plaintiff the whereabouts of the bonds, falsely representing to her that he had no knowledge thereof, and until September, 1925, concealed the fact that they were in his possession; that due to the concealment the inheritance taxes thereon were unpaid, and the interest which became due was not collected, causing loss to plaintiff and the estate.

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the possession of the bonds and the interest coupons which were a part thereof, it being decreed that plaintiff individually was the owner thereof subject to administration, and that neither the defendant nor the interveners had any right, title, or interest therein. In addition judgment was entered against defendant for the damage found to have been caused by his acts above described. The latter and the interveners have appealed from the judgment.

[1] As grounds therefor it is contended that the findings are unsupported and that the court erred by not admitting in evidence a certain writing prepared by the defendant.

The testator for many years had been an active member of the church mentioned, and it is admitted that his relations with the defendant had been friendly since 1904, and that during the year immediately preceding his death the two met frequently both at the testator's home and elsewhere. The evidence shows that defendant was advised of the testator's weakened mental condition at least as early as September, 1921, when at the request of the plaintiff he agreed to exercise some supervision over the testator's business affairs. In fact, the defendant admitted that he noticed the condition described in December, 1921. The testimony on this question is voluminous and a review thereof would answer no purpose. It was amply sufficient to prove that the testator during the period when it is claimed he transferred the bonds in trust was without sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the transaction, and that defendant knew the fact. The record discloses no direct evidence of active influence being brought to bear to obtain possession of the bonds; and defendant claims that the suggestion that the bonds be transferred in trust came from the testator, who wished the transaction kept secret, fearing opposition from Mrs. Bohn. This was his explanation of the concealment of the facts from her which continued until the fall of 1925. In the meantime the defendant as executor, acting with Mrs. Bohn, carried on what appeared to be an active search for the property, in many instances affirmatively misleading the latter. An action was brought by the two against the Imperial Valley irrigation district to recover the moneys payable on the maturing coupons of the missing bonds, and the complaint, which was verified by defendant, alleged that the bonds belonged to the testator at the time of his death, that the latter suffered a loss of their possession, and that their whereabouts were unknown. An inheritance tax return was also filed with the federal government, in which defendant stated under oath that the testator had not made a gift of any material portion of his estate or created a trust within two years prior to his death; also that he had not at any time made a gift in contemplation of death or any charitable gifts; and that at the time of his death no trust existed.

In addition to the foregoing, numerous statements were made by defendant which support the conclusion that he had not acted in good faith in the transaction, but sought to take advantage of the mental incapacity of the testator and the ignorance of Mrs. Bohn respecting the condition of her husband's estate. It further appears that at no time previous to the disclosure of his possession of the bonds did he inform the church authorities of the existence of the alleged trust. His possession was not disclosed to plaintiff until after she learned from other sources that her husband owned such bonds; and it is a fair inference from all the circumstances that defendant intended to convert the same to his own use and benefit. It was further shown that the defendant and the testator had jointly rented safe deposit boxes and visited the same together, and it was testified that the latter had declared his intention to make a gift to the church.

Appellants contend that this evidence with the fact that the bonds were found in defendant's possession strongly corroborates the defendant's testimony. The bonds, however, were not found in a safe deposit box rented by the testator or visited by him; and as against this evidence the record contains testimony that the testator declared on several occasions that he did not intend to make further substantial gifts to the church without consulting his wife.

[2] While possession is presumptive evidence of ownership (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 11), the presumption is disputable; and it has been said to be the lowest species of evidence, which may be overcome by showing the character of the possession. Lawrence v. Long Beach, etc., Co., 44 Cal. App. 410, 186 P. 606.

Some twelve years previous to the testator's death a divorce action was commenced against him by the plaintiff, alleging cruelty. Appellants contend that this fact sufficiently shows a reason for concealing the gift from her. As against this, however, it appears that the action was dismissed and that the parties lived harmoniously thereafter.

[3-7] There were no witnesses to the alleged oral agreement between the testator and the defendant; and appellants claim that there being no contradiction of his testimony in this regard the trial court was bound to find accordingly. While the court may not arbitrarily disregard the unimpeached testimony of a witness (Hynes v. White, 47 Cal. App. 549, 190 P. 836) who is presumed to speak the truth (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847), nevertheless, as provided by this section, there are methods of impeachment other than by direct contradiction, namely, by the manner in which the witness testifies, by the character of his testimony or his motives, and the jury, or the trial court sitting as a jury, are the exclusive judges of his credibility. The record shows that the defendant in parts of his testimony was evasive and quibbling; and, as held in the following cases, such facts often operate as effectively as an impeachment as does proof tending to contradict the witness. Clark v. Tulare Dredging Co., 14 Cal. App. 414, 431, 112 P. 564; Phillips v. Hobbs-Parsons Co., 67 Cal. App. 199, 227 P. 622. As stated, the defendant at different times gave versions of the transaction and made declarations respecting the property which were contradictory and at variance with his present testimony. This together with the fact that he was a party to the action were properly considered in determining his credibility. Konig v. Lyon, 49 Cal. App. 113, 192 P. 875; Wigmore, Evidence (2d Ed.) § 966. Nor did the fact that he admitted that certain of his previous statements were false lessen their effect as impeaching evidence, and his credibility was still a question to be determined by the trial court. People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 74 P. 745. Moreover, the most positive testimony of a witness may be contradicted by inherent improbabilities as to its accuracy, or where the circumstances shown tend to discredit it. Davis v. Judson, 159 Cal. 121, 113 P. 147; Caldwell v. Weiner, 203 Cal. 543, 264 P. 1100; Staples v. Hawthorn, 208 Cal. 578, 283 P. 67.

[8-10] The fact that the testator was old and feeble was in view of defendant's claim a suspicious circumstance (Staples v. Hawthorn, supra); and where the alleged donor is lacking in such mental vigor as to enable him to protect himself against imposition, although his mental weakness is not such as to justify his being regarded as totally incapacitated, an alleged gift inter vivos will be presumed to be fraudulent or secured by undue influence (Pomeroy v. Collins, 198 Cal. 46, 243 P. 657; Longmire v. Kruger, 80 Cal. App. 230, 251 P. 692). It is also the rule that long delay in disclosing an alleged transfer, or the fact that there was no disclosure until after the death of the donor, are circumstances which render the testimony of the claimant subject to suspicion (Plass v. Plass, 122 Cal. 3, 14, 54 P. 372; Longmire v. Kruger, supra; Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 84 P. 417; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 379, 156 P. 509; Humble v. Gay, 168 Cal. 516, 143 P. 778; Estate of Emerson, 175 Cal. 724, 167 P. 149; Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 761, 124 P. 561; Castlehun v. San Francisco S. & L. Society, 56 Cal. App. 220, 205 P. 65); and the same is true where there are no witnesses to the transaction and no writings to substantiate the claim (Austin v. Wilcoxson, supra).

[11, 12] As held in the following cases, though the burden of proof usually rests upon the person asserting fraud or undue influence, yet with respect to gifts or conveyances inter vivos where a relation of trust and confidence exists between the parties the extreme age and infirmity of the grantor, together with slight evidence of circumstances from which it may be inferred that the gift or conveyance was the product of coercion, will suffice to shift the burden and require the beneficiary to show affirmatively that the transaction was fair and free from undue influence. And this rule applies not only to those who bear a formal relation of trust to those with whom they deal, but in every case where there has been confidence reposed which invests the person trusted with an advantage in treating with the person so confiding. Longmire v. Kruger, supra; Cox v. Schnerr, supra; Schurman v. Look, 63 Cal. App. 347, 218 P. 624.

[13] The defendant testified that shortly after the death of the testator he prepared a written memorandum stating the circumstances under which he received the bonds, and the understanding had with the testator with respect to their application, and that this document was placed with the bonds in a safe deposit box. He further testified that the memorandum was shown to his attorney during the summer of 1925, this being shortly before the facts were disclosed to the plaintiff. The document was offered in evidence by defendant, and upon the objection that the same constituted a self-serving declaration, was rejected. Some time before the trial defendant's deposition was taken by the plaintiff. At that time he was questioned with regard to the memorandum and the same was read into the record by plaintiff. At the commencement of the trial the defendant was called as an adverse witness by the plaintiff, and in the course of his examination, for the purpose of laying a foundation for impeachment, he was asked if he had testified in certain ways in giving his deposition. No reference, however, was made to the document in question. The deposition was not offered by the plaintiff, but by the defendant, and was admitted. When the latter sought to read the memorandum into the record, however, the same was rejected. Appellants contend that under the provisions of section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure the memorandum was admissible. As to this it will be sufficient to say that while the document was part of the deposition, it was no part of any act, declaration, conversation, or writing of the character referred to in the above section, nor was it necessary to the understanding thereof, but was simply a self-serving declaration not made in the presence of the plaintiff. It was consequently incompetent and properly rejected (Hausman v. Hausling, 78 Cal. 283, 20 P. 570; Rogers v. Schulenburg, 111 Cal. 281, 43 P. 899); and the mere fact that it was contained in the deposition did not render it admissible (Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 151 P. 138).

[14-17] It is also urged that the memorandum tended to rebut the inference that defendant's claim was a fabrication of recent date and was admissible for that reason. While a witness who has been assailed on the ground that his story is a recent fabrication, or that he had some motive for testifying falsely, may prove that he gave a similar account of the transaction when the motive did not exist, before the effect of such account could be foreseen, or when the motive of interest would have induced a different statement (People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, 91; Hotaling v. Hotaling, 187 Cal. 695, 203 P. 745; Rogers v. State, 88 Ark. 451, 115 S. W. 156, 41 L. R. A. [N. S.] 857, and note; Commonwealth v. Jenkins, 76 Mass. [10 Gray] 485, 489; 40 Cyc., [Witnesses] § 239, p. 655), here the memorandum was produced nearly three years after it is alleged to have been made, when the motives of interest were the same, and not until the effect of the statements therein could be foreseen. These circumstances under the above rule rendered the document inadmissible. The objection was sufficient to support the ruling of the court. If the exclusion of evidence is proper on any ground, the judgment will not be reversed if there appears any reason for which the evidence should have been excluded (Spottiswood v. Weir, 80 Cal. 448, 22 P. 289; Davey v. Southern Pac. Co., 116 Cal. 325, 48 P. 117); and here the court might properly have excluded the memorandum without any objection being made (Kimic v. San Jose, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 379, 104 P. 986; 24 Cal. Jur., Trials, § 57, p. 775).

As stated, the complaint alleged that the bonds were lost by the testator in his lifetime. An objection is made that the findings evade this issue. The issue was immaterial, and the findings fully cover the material facts of the transaction, namely, that while defendant came into possession of the bonds, it was not the intention of the testator to lose dominion or control thereof or to transfer the title for any purpose.

[18] Other arguments are urged in support of appellants' contention that the issues should have been decided in their favor; but the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony were questions for the trial court; and we are satisfied that its findings are not only fully sustained, but clearly correct.

The record discloses no prejudicial error, and no valid reason is shown for a reversal of the judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William S. Baird, Judge.

Actions by J. J. Pendergrass against Josephine M. Axx, individually and as executrix of the estate of Ada F. Brinkworth, deceased. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Lee D. Mathews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rosecrans & Emme, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

Two actions were commenced in the court below by the plaintiff Pendergrass, the one against Josephine M. Axx individually for money had and received in the sum of $1,200, and the other against her in her representative capacity as executrix of the last will and testament of Ada F. Brinkworth, deceased, to recover, first the sum of $471.50, the value of certain property claimed by the plaintiff to which it was alleged the defendant asserted title; second, the sum of $3,300 for services rendered; third, $1,309.60 to cover obligations of the deceased alleged to have been paid by plaintiff; and, fourth, $197, being the amount of other obligations of the testator for which the plaintiff alleged he was being held responsible. The two actions were tried together, resulting in a judgment in the first action against the defendant in her individual capacity in the sum of $600, and in the second action against her as executrix in the sum of $429.14. The defendant prosecutes appeals from both judgments. By stipulation the records are presented to us by one transcript. The respondent has afforded us no assistance, having filed no brief in support of his position. We shall, therefore, under rule V of the rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, accept the statement of facts as presented to us by the appellant's brief.

[1] The nature of the two causes of action is sufficiently dissimilar to warrant our belief that to treat them separately will aid in an understanding thereof. We therefore turn to the action against appellant individually. Mrs. Brinkworth and the respondent lived together as man and wife, although unmarried, from September, 1918, to the time of her death on October 16, 1927. On May 3, 1918, an account was opened at the main office of the Security Trust & Savings Bank in Los Angeles by the deposit of $532.85 in the names of Mrs. Brinkworth and her sister, the appellant, as joint tenants. On February 24, 1924, both of them signed a statement as follows: "The within account, No. 314107, and all moneys credited to the same, or heretofore or hereafter credited thereto, is owned in joint tenancy and not as tenants in common, and shall be joint as to time, title and possession, and by mutual agreement is payable to either Ada F. Brinkworth or Josephine M. Axx whose names are signed hereto, or the survivor or survivors of them subject to the provisions of all laws then in force. The receipt or acquittance of any one of said undersigned, to whom such payment is made, shall be a valid and sufficient release and discharge for all payments made. The bank has the right to waive presentation of the pass book by either party." Various withdrawals and deposits were made until on July 13, 1927, there was a balance in the account of $1,941.48. On that date during a severe illness of Mrs. Brinkworth she withdrew the entire sum and placed it in an account under the names of herself or the respondent. It is to be observed that the respondent called upon and secured a gentleman from the Glendale branch of the Security Bank to go with him to the sanitarium at which Mrs. Brinkworth was being treated for the purpose of making this transfer of the account.

Thereafter the following withdrawals occurred, all in 1927: July 26, $41.98; August 29, $200; September 15, $1,200; October 18, $100; and November 10, $400. Perhaps it should be added that in the joint account of deceased and appellant there was a balance of $1,008.34 on September 1, 1918. The item of $1,200 withdrawn on September 15, 1927, from the account of Mrs. Brinkworth and respondent was redeposited in the former joint account of appellant and her sister; the latter saying to the former at the time: "There has been an awful blunder made out at the Glendale Sanitarium, I want this money transferred back to its original account." Two items of $100 were subsequently withdrawn from this reopened account before the death of Mrs. Brinkworth, but by whom the money was withdrawn does not appear. The respondent testified that when he went to live with Mrs. Brinkworth he had only $200; that they agreed that she was to maintain the house and that he was to pay the grocery bill; that he worked and turned over his check to her for that purpose and what was left "to save it"; that they had an account with the California Bank, where money was deposited from his earnings, and also "she was depositing them at Fifth and Spring" (the Security Bank). However, money was withdrawn from the account with the Security Trust & Savings Bank as well as the other to pay bills.

The trial court proceeded upon the theory that the plaintiff had established a partnership fund existing between the deceased and respondent, and apparently overlooking the $200 which was withdrawn from the joint Brinkworth-Axx account, gave plaintiff one-half thereof. The position which respondent would have to assume, were he here defending his judgment, is untenable. Let us suppose that the $1,008.34 which was in the joint account on September 1, 1918, together with the interest accumulating thereon (interest was credited to the account totaling $593.77), had not been transferred from the joint account to that of respondent and deceased, could it be possible for the respondent to assert title thereto under the testimony recited. There is nothing to indicate an intention to devote the fund to that purpose, and it is manifest that under such circumstances the respondent would not be entitled to recover. It makes no difference that, perhaps by persuasion, he temporarily succeeded in inducing deceased to change the situation which she, at least partially, restored within two months. The fund remained the property of the appellant.

[2, 3] It is sufficient for our purpose in considering the second cause of action to point out that not only is the evidence of payment of any bill by the respondent unsatisfactory, but also there is not a scintilla of evidence from which it may be inferred that they were paid, if at all, at the request of the deceased or other than as a mere volunteer. It is a well-established rule of law that a mere volunteer cannot recover the amount of obligations paid by him. McGee v. City of San Jose, 68 Cal. 91, 8 P. 641; McGlew v. McDade, 146 Cal. 553, 80 P. 695; Stanley v. Westover, 93 Cal. App. 97–111, 269 P. 468.

Judgment in Pendergrass v. Axx reversed. Judgment in Pendergrass v. Axx, as executrix of the Estate of Ada F. Brinkworth, Deceased, reversed.

PEOPLE v. COLLIER et al.

Cr. 1595.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Jan. 20, 1931.

Rehearing Denied in Part and Granted in Part
Feb. 4, 1931.

1. Conspiracy 🔑47.

Coconspirator's testimony sustained conviction for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes (Pen. Code, § 68).

2. Criminal law 🔑427(3).

Conversation between conspirator and bootlegger in presence of coconspirators respecting protection to bootlegger held admissible against all coconspirators though conspiracy was not proved until later in trial.

3. Criminal law 🔑742(2).

Whether coconspirator's testimony should be believed was for jury.

4. Criminal law 🔑1159(4).

Appellate court can reject positive testimony of witness only when testimony is inherently improbable.

5. Criminal law 🔑1144(13).

Appellant must show that testimony attacked in appellate court is inherently improbable or that it is incompetent, or not legal evidence upon which jury can rely.

6. Criminal law 🔑510.

In prosecution for conspiracy to receive bribes and for bribery, accomplice's testimony of specific act of bribery required corroboration.

7. Criminal law 🔑511(1).

Under count charging conspiracy to receive bribes, testimony of accomplice need not be corroborated in every particular.

8. Criminal law 🔑1144(13).

Appellate court must assume in support of verdict that jury in prosecution for conspiracy found defendants guilty of one of alleged overt acts.

9. Criminal law 🔑1144(13).

In determining sufficiency of corroborating evidence, appellate court assumes jury drew all inferences from facts proved as "reason of jury" might sanction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1958).

10. Criminal law 🔑1159(5).

Appellate court cannot weigh evidence corroborating accomplice (Pen. Code, § 1111).

11. Criminal law 🔑511(2).

Evidence corroborating testimony of accomplice need not connect defendant with commission of offense beyond all reasonable doubt (Pen. Code, § 1111).

> Pen. Code, § 1111, provides that conviction cannot be had upon testimony of accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect defendant with commission of offense.

12. Criminal law 🔑1159(5).

Unless appellate court can say corroborating evidence is incompetent or that it could not tend to connect defendant with commission of offense, jury's finding on issue should not be disturbed (Pen. Code, § 1111).

13. Criminal law 🔑511(1).

In prosecution for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, evidence corroborating testimony of accomplice held sufficient (Pen. Code, § 1111).

14. Criminal law 🔑742(2).

In prosecution for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, whether coconspirator's wife relaying tip off message to hotel was accomplice was for jury.

15. Criminal law 🔑423(2).

In prosecution for conspiracy, testimony of conspirator regarding conversations had with some of coconspirators in absence of objecting coconspirator after formation of conspiracy held admissible (Pen. Code, § 1111).

16. Criminal law 🔑423(5).

In prosecution for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, coconspirator's testimony relating to payments made by various bootleggers and his division of proceeds among coconspirators held admissible.

17. Criminal law 🔑423(2).

In prosecution for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, testimony regarding coconspirator's division of money in his home before visits of coconspirators held admissible.

18. Conspiracy 🔑46.

When question is whether accused was party to general conspiracy, distinct overt acts in furtherance of such design are admissible.

19. Indictment and Information 🔑176.

Where indictment alleged period of conspiracy to ask and receive bribes as from February 1, 1927, to August 20, 1927, evidence of transactions occurring within few weeks following August 20 was admissible.

20. Conspiracy 🔑45.

State, after proving conspiracy alleged, could offer in corroboration thereof activities of conspirators and others as evidence of probable effect of common design.

21. Criminal law 🔑338(1).

Evidence is "relevant" when, regardless of weakness, it tends to prove issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Relevant," see Words and Phrases.]

22. Conspiracy 🔑48.

Questions of common design of criminal enterprise and whether design extended beyond time of commission of overt act are for jury.

23. Indictment and information 🔑176.

Any competent evidence tending to prove extent of conspiracy or common design is relevant on issues of common design and whether it extended beyond time of committing overt act.

24. Criminal law 🔑1169(5).

Any error in admitting evidence regarding transactions between conspirator and others, including one of coconspirators after he fled, was cured by order striking out and instruction to disregard it.

25. Witnesses 🔑405(2).

In prosecution for conspiracy to receive bribes, permitting rebuttal testimony that defendant, contrary to his denial, had been served drinks in hotel during period of conspiracy, and that on occasions of raid proprietor had removed liquor, held proper.

Defendants claimed that impeachment was on collateral matter, but evidence disclosed that defendant deputy sheriff whose special duty it was to make arrests of those engaged in illegal sale of liquor, frequented one of bootlegging establishments which coconspirator had testified was on his list, and that no arrests were made and the testimony tended to corroborate coconspirator.

26. Criminal law 🔑428.

In prosecution for conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, evidence corroborating coconspirator's testimony held insufficient as to defendant who was alleged to have given bribe (Pen. Code, § 1111).

On Petition for Rehearing.

27. Criminal law 🔑447.

When agreement is not in writing, parol evidence is admissible to prove contents.

28. Criminal law 🔑363.

When agreement is in parol, evidence of conversations of parties tending to disclose agreement is evidence of res gestæ.

29. Criminal law 🔑427(4).

Where conspiracy charged is agreement to do or not to do certain act, evidence of conversations and acts of conspirators constituting agreement is admissible.

30. Criminal law 🔑423(5).

Where, as part of parol agreement, one or more of conspirators undertakes to ask for bribe, accept bribe, to do or not to do act for purpose of effectuating compact, and to give assent to compact by words or actions, evidence of such facts is admissible (Code Civ. Proc. § 1850).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1850, provides that when declarations or acts forming part of transaction which is itself fact in dispute, or evidence of that fact, such declaration or act is evidence as part of transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

John J. Collier and others were convicted of conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, and they appeal.

Affirmed as to defendants Collier and Davis, and reversed with directions as to defendants Shurtleff and Gardella.

Myron Harris and Leo A. Sullivan, both of Oakland (R. B. McMillan, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant Gardella.

John W. Collier and Myron Harris, both of Oakland for appellant Collier.

Willard W. Shea, Public Defender, and Raymond A. Ferrario, Deputy Public Defender, both of Oakland, for appellant Shurtleff.

Leo A. Sullivan, of Oakland, for appellant Davis.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., and J. Frank Coakley, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

NOURSE, P. J.

The defendants were tried jointly on an indictment framed in four counts, the first of which charged conspiracy to ask and receive bribes, the other three charging completed acts of bribery. During the course of the trial the offense charged in count 3 was dismissed and the jury returned its verdict finding the four defendants guilty on the first count and not guilty on counts 2 and 4. From the judgment on the verdict and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial the four defendants appeal upon a typewritten record. Each defendant was represented by individual counsel at the trial and each has filed separate briefs on this appeal requesting that any point raised by others be available to him. Upon some of the issues presented on the appeal the legal considerations are applicable to all appellants, but in most instances the circumstances are such that each appellant must be treated separately.

The story of the conspiracy originates in the testimony of Fred Smith, a coconspirator. In the general election of 1926 a bitter contest was waged in Alameda county between B. F. Becker and Barnett, the incumbent, for office of sheriff in which Becker was successful. In January, 1927, Becker, who had been chief of police of the city of Piedmont, brought with him to the sheriff's office the defendant John L. Davis, who had been associated with him in the Piedmont office. Davis was made a deputy sheriff. Collier, who had occupied that position for many years under the former sheriff, was retained. Shurtleff, who had formerly been a federal prohibition officer, was appointed by Becker as chief criminal deputy, and Davis and Collier were assigned to work under him as a "raiding squad" to enforce the provisions of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The defendant Gardella was a confessed "bootlegger" operating in the eastern section of Alameda county.

Fred Smith met Becker and Davis while they were in the Piedmont office and became very active in Becker's campaign for sheriff in the fall of 1926. Soon after Becker assumed the office of sheriff in January, 1927, Davis sought out Smith and proposed his plan to force the bootleggers of the county to pay tribute for protection against arrest for violation of the prohibition law. In the latter part of January, 1927, Davis, accompanied by defendant Collier, appeared at Smith's place of business in San Leandro and, in the presence of Collier, told Smith that there were several bootlegging places operating in Livermore and vicinity which would "have to lay it on the line or get knocked off," and proposed that the three drive into Livermore, where he (Davis) would introduce Smith to the Gardellas. Davis then drove Smith and Collier to the Gardellas' bootlegging establishment, where all had drinks of liquor and where Davis introduced Smith as "the closest man in the county to the sheriff" and "the man to talk business to with regard to protection." Gardella replied that he had not been active in Becker's campaign; that he had been a "Barnett man," "but that if it was going to be necessary to pay for protection, if the business would afford it, why he would do so." Gardella then said that under present conditions he could probably pay around $75 a month if he was assured of proper protection. Smith assured him that "that was all right," whereupon Collier left the party, saying that he would wait for them out in the car. Davis then went into the "barroom" while Gardella procured $75, which he paid to Smith. These two then joined Davis, who then said to Gardella: "If you got any other of your friends down here who are all right we can arrange the same thing for them." Gardella replied: "All right, I will have a talk with them." He (Gardella) then mentioned Croce, Duarte, Valponi, and another as bootleggers who could be expected to pay monthly sums for protection and the rate to be charged each was discussed among the three. They then agreed that Smith should return to Gardella in two or three days to receive the money which Gardella promised to collect from those mentioned. Davis and Smith then joined Collier in the car and Smith divided the money he had received from Gardella—$25 to Davis, $25 to Collier, and $25 to himself.

A few days later, according to the arrangement made at the time, Smith returned to Gardella and received two envelopes, one containing $50, the other $25, which Gardella told him had been collected from two of the bootleggers and which Smith divided with Collier and Davis. From this time on to the early part of August, 1927, Smith continued the collection of monthly tribute from those engaged in the violation of the prohibition act, either in the operation of stills or in the transportation and sale of illicit liquor. These sums were divided one-quarter to Davis, one-quarter to Collier, one-quarter to Smith, and the remainder was held by Smith as a "trust fund" for campaign purposes, out of which he testified he paid a portion to Shurtleff.

During all this time the district attorney of the county maintained a staff of special detectives engaged in investigating violations of the prohibition act and the practice of the two offices was that when the district attorney's staff discovered violations of the act search warrants were delivered to the sheriff's office for service. These warrants came into the hands of Shurtleff, who handed them to Collier and Davis for service. From the testimony of Collier and Davis it appears that during the period in question they found liquor and made arrests in 90 per cent. of the raids made by them, but that they were unsuccessful in their raids upon the bootleggers in the vicinity of Livermore because they were always "tipped off" before they arrived. It was the theory of the state throughout the trial that this was the "protection" given to those who paid the conspirators and that information was always given in advance of a raid upon their friends, this information coming directly from Davis before he and Collier left the sheriff's office or coming to the bootlegger from Smith through information furnished him by Davis, Collier, or Shurtleff.

[1] The foregoing statement of facts, which is taken mainly from the testimony of Smith, is sufficient, if corroborated in the particulars required by law, to involve all four defendants in the conspiracy charged. It is apparent from this evidence that the conspiracy was formed in the latter part of January, 1927, to ask and receive bribes for the purposes alleged in the indictment and that Davis, Collier, Smith, and Gardella were the instigators of the conspiracy. The precise date when Shurtleff joined in the conspiracy does not appear. Hence, aside from the matter of corroboration, which will be treated later, the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the verdict unless the testimony of Smith was incompetent for the reasons assigned by the appellant Collier.

The point raised by this appellant is that Smith, being an accomplice, was incompetent to testify regarding any of the agreements or conversations had between his coconspirators until after the conspiracy was proved; that is to say that evidence of these conversations was inadmissible to prove the corpus delicti. In this connection the appellant relies on subdivision 6 of section 1870, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, "After proof of a conspiracy, the act or declaration of a conspirator" may be given in evidence "against his coconspirator." From this it is argued that no evidence of the act or declaration of a conspirator can be received for the purpose of proving the conspiracy. The argument is based on what we deem to be a misconception of the meaning of the Code and upon disconnected excerpts from decisions where the language has not been carefully chosen. The Code section is an exception to the well-known hearsay, rule which is stated in section 1845, Code of Civil Procedure, as follows: "A witness can testify of those facts only which he knows of his own knowledge; that is, which are derived from his own perceptions, except in those few express cases in which his opinions or inferences, or the declarations of others, are admissible." Following this, section 1850 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when the declaration or act forms a part of the transaction, which is itself the fact in dispute, or evidence of that fact, such declaration or act is evidence as part of the transaction, while subdivision 3 of section 1870 permits evidence of an act or declaration of another in the presence of a party and his conduct in relation thereto and subdivision 7 of the same section permits evidence when the act or declaration comes within the provisions of section 1850. Reading these sections together, it seems clear that the purpose of the statute is that the act or declaration of a party could not be received in evidence as proof of a conspiracy with others until such conspiracy was established, but that, when the matter at issue is the formation of the conspiracy, or the purposes for which the combination was made, evidence of the acts and declarations of the coconspirators among themselves and in their presence is admissible for the purpose of proving that issue.

If this were not so let us see to what limits appellants' argument would carry us. A, B, and C are charged with conspiracy to commit murder. A carries out the act and numerous eyewitnesses are called to testify concerning the acts of A in the commission of the homicide. Certainly their testimony would not be barred under this section because A is charged as a conspirator with B and C because such testimony would cover facts of the witnesses' own knowledge within the meaning of section 1845. But if A had made declarations involving B and C in the conspiracy, such statements would be pure hearsay and inadmissible against B and C until the conspiracy had been proved. But if these witnesses overheard A, B, and C plotting the murder, their testimony of these conversations had in the presence of all the conspirators would be admissible under the express provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1870, as well as under the provisions of section 1850. However, the latter section is nothing more than a restatement of the well-settled res gestæ rule under which "where the making of a statement in controversy, or the doing of an act, assists in constituting the transaction or in proving per se a relevant fact, the declaration or act is competent." 22 Cor. Jur. 446. Such is the rule of People v. Gregory, 120 Cal. 16, 19, 52 P. 41; Gillam v. Sigman, 29 Cal. 637, 641; People v. Petruzo, 13 Cal. App. 569, 577, 110 P. 324.

[2] The application of the rule to the instant case seems plain in so far as it relates to appellants Collier and Davis. They were both sheriff's deputies assigned to the enforcement of the prohibition law. The conspiracy charged to them was their agreement to refrain from making raids upon violators of that law until information had been given permitting the destruction of evidence. In the formation of the conspiracy in January, 1927, no act or declaration was required from these two—all that was needed, and all that was done—was the lending of their presence in the company of Smith, who assumed the role of soliciting and collecting the bribe funds. This was the conspiracy which the prosecution sought to prove at that time—the res gestæ was the conversations between Smith and Gardella in the presence of Davis and Collier and it is of no moment that, before the money was passed, Collier stepped outside. If he had then notified the others that he would not be a party to the transaction, or had later refused to cooperate, he might now complain, but his subsequent actions show a full acquiescence in the arrangements made by the others. Hence, these conversations were not hearsay under any possible theory, and were admissible against all the coconspirators even though it might be said that the conspiracy was not "proved" until later on in the trial. The order of proof is not material. People v. Stokes, 5 Cal. App. 205, 209, 89 P. 997.

Neither Collier nor Davis denied their association with Smith and Gardella. They denied that they received any bribes from them and explained that they "worked" with Smith under instructions from the head of the office. We accordingly hold that Smith's testimony was admissible as tending to establish the formation of the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, and was competent proof of the acts and conduct of appellants Collier and Davis which made it possible for Smith to approach Gardella in the role he assumed as one of the conspirators. Whether this testimony had sufficient corroboration so that the "fact" of the conspiracy was proved is a question to be treated later.

[3] Much is said in the brief of the appellant Collier regarding the bad reputation of Smith for truth, honesty and integrity. From this it is argued that his testimony should not be believed, but that, of course, was for the jury to decide. It is significant, however, that notwithstanding the reputation of this witness these two deputies associated with him constantly, calling at his home at least twice a week over a period of six months and frequently, with their wives and other members of their families, joining Smith and his wife in drinking parties at the bootlegging places named by Smith as having paid for protection.

[4, 5] This appellant also urges the "improbability" of Smith's story of the conspiracy because Collier had met Smith but three weeks before the time testified to. But it does not appear how long Collier had known Davis, and it is apparent from the record that Davis was the instigator of the entire plan and brought Collier to Smith with the proposal that Smith act as the go-between to make the collections from the bootleggers, leaving the deputies in the clear to deal with Smith alone. We understand that an appellate court can reject the positive testimony of a witness only when that testimony is "inherently improbable." It is not sufficient that the testimony may disclose circumstances which are unusual. Where the testimony is such that within the knowledge of reasonable men it cannot be true the appellate court might assume that knowledge and hold the testimony legally insufficient, but to do so the court must act on what is equivalent to judicial notice. We are not advised of any precedent which would sanction our taking judicial knowledge of the extent of the acquaintance which must be had with the modern bootlegger before he could be asked to pay for protection. All the appellants devote much time and space in their attacks upon the credibility of the witness Smith, and lest they feel that their arguments have gone unnoticed, let it be said here that the appellate court does not sit as a jury to determine the issues of fact upon the credibility of the testimony of the witnesses but, when the attack is made on these grounds, it is necessary for the appellant to go further and show that the testimony which we are asked to reject is inherently improbable or that it was incompetent, or for some other reason, not legal evidence upon which the jury could rely.

[6-8] The appellant Collier argues that the evidence was insufficient to prove an overt act. Ten overt acts are alleged in the indictment. No. 1 is merely a repetition of the acts leading to the formation of the conspiracy. No. 2 covers the same matters alleged in count 3 of the indictment which was dismissed. Nos. 4 and 9 cover the same matters alleged in counts 2 and 4 of the indictment upon which the appellants were acquitted. The remaining charges covered specific acts of bribery similar to those alleged in counts 2 and 4 but involving different bootleggers. From the fact that count three was dismissed and from the fact that the jury acquitted on counts 2 and 4 it is argued that it is not unreasonable to say that "had the prosecution seen fit to mold each of these overt acts (3, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 19) into separate charges of bribery as they did with three of them, the jury would have acquitted the defendants on them also." This is a conjecture in which we are not permitted to indulge. Counts 2 and 4 were specific charges of bribery. Evidence of the bribery came from the testimony of Smith who was an accomplice. Hence, his testimony on the specific act of bribery required corroboration. But, on the first count for conspiracy, it was not necessary that the testimony of the accomplice be corroborated in every particular. Thus the jury may have been satisfied with the testimony of Smith on some one of the overt acts, other than Nos. 2, 4, and 9, and may not have been satisfied that this testimony was corroborated on the specific acts alleged in counts 2, 3, and 4. The acquittal of appellants on these two counts can mean nothing more than that the jury did not believe the evidence sufficient to convict, but such acquittal can have no bearing upon the other matters alleged, and we must assume in support of the verdict that the jury found them guilty of one of the alleged overt acts, and that is all that is needed.

The heavy attack of all the appellants is based on the common ground that the evidence of corroboration is insufficient. In these attacks the appellants find much comfort in the recent decisions of the appellate courts, particularly People v. Davis (Cal. Sup.) 293 P. 32; People v. Washburn (Cal. App.) 286 P. 711; and People v. Sheffield (Cal. App.) 293 P. 72. All three decisions involved prosecutions of public officials for bribery in the performance of their public duties and all three reversed the convictions. In each the appellate court ruled that the corroborating evidence was insufficient, but it will be noted that, in each case, errors at law occurred during the trial which the court rendering the decision held to have been prejudicial. It would be merely voicing the common complaint of the bar at large to say that the decisions upon this important subject are in hopeless conflict and confusion, and this is so because the courts are asked to determine each case upon the peculiar facts and circumstances in the record. There is no hard and fast rule by which it can be determined what evidence is sufficient and what is insufficient when the appellate court approaches the subject as a trier of fact in the place and stead of the jury. The Code section is plain, section 1111 of the Penal Code provides: "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." In People v. Davis, supra, the Supreme Court pointed out that the rule had always been adhered to that "the corroborating evidence must do more than raise even a grave suspicion of defendant's guilt" and People v. Kempley, 205 Cal. 441, 271 P. 478, and other authorities were cited. Of course, evidence which merely creates a suspicion would not be sufficient else the provisions of section 1111 would be meaningless, and, though we find many "negative" authorities on what is insufficient under the section, it is difficult to find the authorities which declare what is sufficient. People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 69, 280 P. 354, 356, comes closest to the line where it is said: "And if there is other evidence which measures up to the requirement of the Code (supra), tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged, then such testimony of the accomplice is to be considered by the jury, as is any other testimony, and must be given the weight to which the jurors may conclude that it is entitled. People v. Hoosier, 24 Cal. App. 746, 142 P. 514. The evidence tending to connect a defendant with the commission of the crime may be slight, and, when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration. People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 P. 32. The law does not require that the evidence necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice shall tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice; and strong corroborative testimony is not necessary to support a judgment of conviction founded on the testimony of an accomplice. Even though circumstantial and slight, the evidence is, nevertheless, sufficient if it tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense. People v. Martin, 19 Cal. App. 295, 125 P. 919. The defendant's own statements and admissions, made in connection with other testimony, may afford corroboratory proof sufficient to sustain a verdict. People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 570, 46 P. 611; People v. Sullivan, 144 Cal. 471, 473, 77 P. 1000. It is not necessary that the corroborating evidence should go so far as to establish by itself, and without the aid of the testimony of an accomplice, that the defendant committed the offense charged."

[9, 10] The foregoing quotation was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in People v. Davis, supra, with the explanation that it was not intended to hold that the corroborating evidence was sufficient if it merely raises a suspicion of defendant's guilt. But, though evidence which merely creates a suspicion is insufficient because of the statutory presumption of innocence of crime, we must not overlook the weight of an inference which is "a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved." Code Civ. Proc., § 1958. Hence, when the question of the sufficiency of the corroborating evidence is before the appellate court we cannot approach it in the same manner the jury would do, but we must assume that the jury drew all inferences from the facts proved as "the reason of the jury" might sanction. If, therefore, facts are in evidence which would reasonably support an inference that defendant was involved in the conspiracy alleged and the jury so found, it is not the province of the appellate court to weigh the evidence or to determine in its mind what weight it would give to such evidence.

[11, 12] The code section expressly states that the corroborating evidence "shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense." This does not mean that such evidence shall connect the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt. Such is the rule of People v. Martin, 19 Cal. App. 295, 301, 125 P. 919, which is quoted with approval in People v. Negra, supra. Therefore, unless the appellate court can say that the corroborating evidence is either incompetent or is, as matter of law, of such a character that it could not tend to connect defendant with the commission of the offense and could not reasonably support an inference of such connection, the finding of the jury on that issue should not be disturbed.

With this in view and bearing in mind that the alleged conspiracy consisted of the agreement to solicit bribes in consideration for the advancing of information of proposed raids so that the bribe givers might avoid arrest for violations of the law, we may examine the evidence of acts and declarations of the alleged conspirators to see if any of this evidence would tend to connect the appellants with the conspiracy.

[13] Addressing ourselves to the appeals of Collier and Davis, and referring to the issue of corroboration of accomplice Smith, we find in the evidence that these two appellants throughout the period of the alleged conspiracy called at Smith's home upon an average of twice a week and that frequently upon these calls they each received from Smith an envelope which Smith testified contained money received from bootleggers according to their prior agreement and which these appellants testified contained diagrams of stills operating in the county; that Mrs. Smith testified that on several occasions she saw her husband assorting money and placing it in separate envelopes immediately before Collier and Davis called, and that on one occasion she saw her husband deliver an envelope to each of these appellants; the witnesses Van Noy and Trevett testified that they saw Smith assorting money upon his library table and placing it in separate envelopes a short time before Collier and Davis called, and that Smith, Collier, and Davis then went into a bedroom where they remained for five or ten minutes. The only explanation of these transactions given by the appellants was that upon those occasions Smith gave them diagrams of stills, but they gave no explanation why a separate envelope should be given to each while both were working together or why they had not at any time during this entire period of six months delivered any of this information to their superior officers, but had on each occasion destroyed the location maps which they testified Smith had given them nor did they explain why during this entire period no still had been raided by them and no arrests made as a result of this information. By their denial that they had received any money from Smith on any of these occasions the case differs from People v. Davis (Cal. Sup.) 293 P. 32, where the court held that the testimony that money had been seen to pass through the hands of the accomplice was insufficient to corroborate his testimony because it should be presumed that the money was delivered for a legitimate rather than for a criminal purpose. From the weak and unsatisfactory explanations of these appellants as to the contents of the envelopes the jury was warranted in inferring that money did pass as Smith and his wife testified, and this inference would corroborate the testimony of Smith in that respect. Then bearing in mind that the theory of the prosecution was that the object of the conspiracy was that the conspirators would either fail to arrest or would give to the bribe givers advanced information of proposed raids so that all criminal evidence could be destroyed, we find the testimony of Mrs. Walker to the effect that habitually before these appellants started on a raid with a search warrant procured by the district attorney's office, Collier and Davis would lag behind the other officers and the latter would put in a telephone call which was usually "'make it at 7 o'clock'; 'it will be now' or the like." This information was generally conveyed to Smith who in turn relayed it to the party to be raided and his testimony that he received and conveyed this information was corroborated by other evidence. The explanation of the appellants of this testimony is nothing more than a complete denial, and here again the trial jury was called upon to weigh the evidence, and if the jury believed the testimony of Mrs. Walker and these other witnesses and disbelieved the testimony of the appellants in this respect it follows, of course, that Smith's testimony of these transactions was fully corroborated. Aside from the testimony relating to what happened in the sheriff's office as to "tip offs" of these raids, we find the direct evidence coming from Mrs. Smith that in the latter part of July she received a telephone call from Davis asking if her husband was in, and that upon being informed that he was not, Davis asked her to get in touch with her husband and tell him to telephone the Irvington Hotel and warn them to close up as the place was to be raided that night. It is also in the evidence that Mrs. Smith got in touch with her husband and he informed her that he could not telephone the hotel from where he was located, asked her to do so, that she did phone the hotel and that on the same night the place was raided and no evidence of the sale or possession of liquor found. It is also in evidence, coming from the testimony of Collier and Davis, that during this period they made numerous raids upon bootlegging establishments in the eastern portion of Alameda county, and that in 90 per cent. of such raids they found liquor and made arrests. It is significant, however, that during the entire period of the alleged conspiracy none of the bootleggers named by Smith as having paid for protection was raided excepting in one instance in which a federal raid was made against Schenone and another when a federal raid was made against Gardella, at which time he had been given advanced information and had destroyed all evidence of the sale or possession of liquor. In addition to this, there is the testimony of Pisani and Santucci of their conversations with Ormsby, an attorney at law, who urged the witnesses to construct and operate a still and assured them in the presence of Davis that they would be fully protected from the sheriff's office by the payment of a monthly sum for that purpose, and the testimony of Pisani as to the association of Collier with Ormsby in this enterprise. And then we find the undisputed evidence of the association of Collier and Davis with Smith and Ormsby throughout this entire period; their frequent gatherings with their respective families in bootlegging establishments where liquor was being drunk, these places all being on Smith's list of the protected. Aside from this direct evidence (which is but a small portion of the corroborating testimony relied upon by the state), the respondent urges the circumstances that when Collier and Davis were called before the grand jury when it was making its investigation of the alleged conspiracy both were informed of the accusations made against them by Smith and neither denied the accusations, but both refused to testify upon the ground that their testimony might tend to incriminate them. The foregoing statement of the evidence is sufficient to corroborate the testimony of Smith as to the formation of the alleged conspiracy, and is such "as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense," and it is unnecessary to outline the mass of other evidence which was offered for this purpose.

[14] It is strenuously argued by the appellants that we may not take the testimony of Mrs. Smith as corroborative of that of her husband because in relaying the "tip off" message to the Irvington Hotel she became an accomplice, but to hold her as an accomplice it would be necessary to hold that she was a party to the offense charged, which was a conspiracy to ask and receive bribes for certain purposes. But it does not appear that she had any knowledge of the conspiracy nor any knowledge of the relations between the conspirators or the proprietor of the Irvington Hotel. Her action in conveying the message to the hotel upon the request of her husband was consistent with an innocent obedience of her husband's commands, and though it is possible that the entire evidence may have been sufficient to warrant the jury in inferring an evil motive on the part of Mrs. Smith, such motive was certainly not presumed, and therefore the question of whether she was an accomplice was a fact to be left to the jury and not a question of law to be determined by the trial judge. In this connection the appellants attack the refusal of the trial judge to give their proposed instruction advising the jury that it must consider Mrs. Smith as an accomplice, and likewise attack the instructions which the trial judge gave to the jury defining an accomplice and advising the jury what was sufficient corroborative evidence of the testimony of an accomplice. There was no error in either respect. People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 311, 66 P. 372; People v. Lawlor, 21 Cal. App. 63, 68, 131 P. 63.

[15-17] The appellant Collier criticizes the action of the trial court in admitting the testimony of Smith relating to conversations had with Smith, Davis and Gardella in the absence of Collier. This testimony all related to matters occurring after the formation of the conspiracy and was clearly admissible under section 1111, Penal Code, as interpreted in the cases heretofore cited. Smith's testimony relating to his conversations with Valponi, Croce, Peyser, Schenone, and others who were maintaining bootlegging establishments were all evidence of the transactions of a coconspirator in furtherance of the purposes of the conspiracy, and this testimony of Smith, like his testimony relating to the payments made by various bootleggers and his division of the proceeds among his coconspirators, was properly admitted. Likewise there was no error in admitting the testimony of Van Noy, Trevett and Mrs. Smith relating to Smith's division of the money in his home prior to the visits of Collier and Davis, because this was evidence of "an act" of one of the conspirators performed after the formation of the conspiracy.

[18] Considerable space is devoted to an attack upon the admission of the testimony of Pisani regarding his promise to pay to Ormsby $3,000 a month for protection in the operation of an illicit still, such protection being assured him by Ormsby in the presence of Davis. Of a similar character are the objections to the testimony of Tognotti, Santucci, and Roggi. The objections are two: That these transactions were not had in the presence of all the other alleged conspirators, and that they were evidence of separate and distinct offenses. The first objection is without merit as we have already said. As to the second objection the rule seems to be fully settled. In People v. Arnold, 199 Cal. 471, 250 P. 168, the Supreme Court, quoting from People v. Wilson, 76 Cal. App. 688, 245 P. 781, said: " 'In such cases, it is no objection that the evidence covers a great many transactions and extends over a long period of time, or that it may show the commission of other crimes. When the question is whether the accused was a party to a general conspiracy, distinct overt acts in furtherance of such a design may be given in evidence. People v. Collins, 64 Cal. 293, 30 P. 847; People v. Berry, 191 Cal. 109, 122, 215 P. 74; Commonwealth v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 25 Am. Rep. 81; Hall v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 552. See, also, Commonwealth v. Stuart, 207 Mass. 563, 93 N. E. 825; State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 P. 828; Jenkins v. Commonwealth, 167 Ky. 544, 3 A. L. R. 1522, 180 S. W. 961, and Worden v. United States, 204 F. 1, 122 C. C. A. 315.' " And in the same decision, quoting from Commonwealth v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 25 Am. Rep. 81, the court said: " 'There being evidence sufficient to be laid before the jury to prove the conspiracy as to which the presiding justice was, in the first instance, to determine, it was competent for the government to put in evidence any acts of the several conspirators in furtherance of the common purpose of the conspiracy, either before or after the robbery was committed.'" And in People v. Schmidt, 33 Cal. App. 426, 445, 165 P. 555, 563, the District Court, quoting from People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 P. 125, said: "'Where several parties conspire or combine together to commit any unlawful act, each is criminally responsible for the acts of his associates or confederates committed in furtherance of any prosecution of the common design for which they combine. * * * Each is responsible for everything done by his confederates, which follows incidentally in the execution of the common design as one of its probable and natural consequences, even though it was not intended as a part' of the common design for which they combined." The court added as authorities for the rule, People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 92 P. 861; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 369, 149 P. 821; Spies v. People (The Anarchists' Case), 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[19] The testimony of similar transactions occurring in the latter part of August and in early September of the year 1927 was not inadmissible under the rule excluding acts and declarations of a coconspirator after the completion of the conspiracy. The indictment alleged the period of time of the conspiracy as from February 1, 1927, to August 20, 1927, but this was merely an approximation and was not a definite time limiting the period of the conspiracy. There was no evidence that the conspiracy ended precisely on August 20th, and, from the nature of the case, this was not such a conspiracy as would be "completed" by a definite overt act such as murder or robbery. Hence, evidence of transactions occurring within a few weeks following August 20th was not evidence of a separate isolated act or declaration of one of the conspirators occurring subsequent to the end of the "objective" of the conspiracy, within the rule of People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 P. 312, and similar cases. To the contrary, these acts and declarations were shown to have been "the ordinary and probable effect of the common design" of the conspirators, and evidence of such was admissible under the rule noted in People v. Lorraine, 90 Cal. App. 317, 327, 265 P. 893, 897, where the court say: "The common design of a criminal enterprise may extend, however, as appellant concedes, beyond the point of the commission of the act constituting the crime for which the alleged conspirator is on trial (People v. Opie, 123 Cal. 294, 55 P. 989; People v. Mazzurco, 49 Cal. App. 275, 193 P. 164; People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 444, 50 P. 675; People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 P. 351); and, as declared in California Jurisprudence, vol. 5, p. 523." To the same effect is People v. Sampsell (Cal. App.) 286 P. 434.

[20] The application of the rule in the present case is that it was always the theory of the prosecution that the alleged conspirators were operating in the eastern section of Alameda county as a portion of a county-wide conspiracy headed by the sheriff of the county and involving many of his deputies and others officially connected with his office for the general purpose of collecting tribute from all those engaged in any unlawful business conducted in the county. Thus having proved the conspiracy alleged in the indictment it was competent for the state to offer in corroboration thereof the activities of Davis, Collier, Smith, and others as evidence of the ordinary and probable effect of the common design of the conspiracy alleged.

[21-23] The question involved here is not whether this testimony was competent because the general rule is that evidence of the separate acts and declarations of one coconspirator is admissible against all the other conspirators after the conspiracy has been established because each is criminally responsible for the acts of his confederates committed in furtherance of the common design. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 334, 92 P. 861; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 374, 149 P. 821. But the real question involved in the point raised by this appellant is whether this testimony was relevant. The question of the relevancy of testimony is frequently confused with the question of the weight and sufficiency of that testimony to prove a particular issue. Evidence is relevant when no matter how weak it may be it tends to prove the issue before the jury. In Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 418, 88 P. 380, 382, it was said: "The tendency of modern decisions is to admit any evidence which may have a tendency to illustrate or throw any light on the transaction in controversy, or any weight in determining the issue, leaving the strength of such tendency, or the amount of such weight, to be determined by the jury; and, in determining the relevancy of evidence that may be offered upon an issue of fact, much depends upon the nature of the issue to sustain which or against which it is offered, and a wide discretion is left to the trial judge in determining whether it is admissible or not." It has frequently been said that "it is not often that the direct fact of an unlawful design which is the essence of a conspiracy can be proved otherwise than by the establishment of independent facts, bearing more or less closely or remotely upon the common design" (People v. Sampsell [Cal. App.] 286 P. 434, 437) and for this reason greater liberality is permitted in the admission of circumstantial evidence which would tend to prove the fact of the conspiracy, as well as that which would tend to corroborate the testimony of a coconspirator. Hence, any testimony which is relevant for these purposes and which is not too remote or incompetent should be received and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence should be left to the triers of the questions of fact. Accordingly, when the question of the common design of a criminal enterprise and the question whether that common design extended beyond the point of time of the actual commission of the act constituting the overt act alleged are matters in issue those questions are to be determined by the jury and any competent evidence which tends to prove the extent of the conspiracy and any competent evidence of acts or declarations tending to prove this common design is relevant to the issues before the jury. Such evidence even though it may tend to prove the commission of distinct criminal acts is not admitted under the rule permitting evidence of similar criminal acts but is admitted under the circumstances above stated for the purpose of proving the common design and extent of the conspiracy alleged. People v. Schmidt, 33 Cal. App. 426, 165 P. 555; People v. Lorraine, 90 Cal. App. 317, 265 P. 893; People v. Sampsell (Cal. App.) 286 P. 434.

[24] Objection is made to the admission of evidence relating to transactions between Smith and Sheriff Becker, Parker, and Davis after Smith had fled to Los Angeles. This testimony was presumably offered for the purpose of corroborating Smith's testimony as to his criminal association with the sheriff's office of Alameda county. It was all stricken out and the jury was instructed to disregard it. There was nothing in this testimony that was prejudicial to any of the appellants except as to appellant Davis, and as to him it was properly admitted. If any error occurred as to the other appellants through the admission of this testimony, that error was cured by the order striking out and the instruction to the jury to disregard it. Though the appellant Collier insists that the evidence was improperly admitted he does not show in what respect it was in any way prejudicial to him. This is not a case such as People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 196 P. 47, and similar cases, where the testimony admitted was such that it poisoned the minds of the jury to such an extent that the error could not be cured.

[25] These two appellants complain of the ruling permitting the evidence in rebuttal of the witness Barnes. Appellant Collier on cross-examination had been asked if he had been served intoxicating liquor in the Newark hotel during the period of the alleged conspiracy, and answered, "No." Barnes, who was a cook at the Newark, testified that both Collier and Davis had been served drinks in the hotel during that time and that, on the occasions when they raided the place, the proprietor removed the liquor and slot machine a short time before the raid occurred. The appellants insist that the impeachment was on a collateral matter. But it was not. The evidence disclosed that these two deputies, whose special duty it was to make arrests of those engaged in the illegal sale of liquor, frequented one of the bootlegging establishments which the witness Smith testified was on his list and that no arrests were made though violations of the law were known to these deputies. This testimony tended to corroborate the witness Smith and was relevant to that issue.

In so far as the appellant Collier and Davis are concerned, we find no error in the record and the judgment and order as to them should be affirmed.

As to the appellant Shurtleff, much of what has heretofore been said applies to his appeal, and it is not necessary to consider the points raised by him in detail. If we are correct in our interpretation of the evidence covering the formation of the conspiracy, the evidence linking this appellant with the conspiracy is sufficient. Whether that evidence was properly corroborated we will discuss later.

The first point raised by this appellant is that the verdict as to him is contrary to the law and evidence because overt act No. 9 alleged in the first count of the indictment is identical with count No. 4 of the indictment pleading a specific charge of bribery so far as the alleged acts of this particular appellant are concerned. The jury having found all appellants not guilty on count No. 4, it is now argued that this appellant is freed from the charge of conspiracy according to the rule stated in Oliver v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. App. 94, 267 P. 764. The case is not applicable to the situation here. The specific overt act charged to Shurtleff and of which he was found not guilty under count No. 4 was only one of many overt acts of the conspiracy as a whole. The conspirators having been found guilty of some of the alleged overt acts, as we have heretofore pointed out, all members of the alleged conspiracy could have been found guilty under count No. 1 and it was not necessary that each conspirator be found guilty of a specific overt act independent of the others.

Criticism is made of the rulings of the trial court in admitting the testimony of Pisani, Santucci and others, as heretofore mentioned, and in limiting that testimony to Collier, Davis, and Shurtleff and thereafter striking out portions of such testimony as to Shurtleff. This testimony was all admissible under the rules of law which we have heretofore discussed, and if Shurtleff's membership in the conspiracy was proved and corroborated this testimony was admissible as to him as well as to Collier and Davis. There was, therefore, no error in the admission of the testimony, but there was error in striking that testimony as to the appellant Shurtleff. This, however, is an error which was not prejudicial to him and of which he now cannot complain.

On the matter of corroboration, the case is different from that of the appellants Collier and Davis. The testimony is that soon after the formation of the conspiracy Davis insisted that Shurtleff be cut in on the profits and that payments were made to Shurtleff by Smith through the purchase of an automobile by Shurtleff, the monthly installments upon the contract of purchase being made by Smith out of funds received as a result of the conspiracy. Soon after Shurtleff had assumed office as a deputy sheriff and had been assigned chief criminal deputy, the district attorney of the county talked with him and informed him of rumors of corruption and bribery in connection with Smith and deputies in the sheriff's office. Notwithstanding this, Shurtleff frequently met Smith in the sheriff's office and discussed with him the raids and pretended raids made upon bootlegging establishments in the county. When called before the grand jury his explanation of the purchase of the automobile and of his dealing with Smith, Collier, and Davis was so weak and unbelievable that the jury must have inferred guilt from his own conduct. However, we are unable to find any direct or circumstantial evidence which is sufficient to corroborate the testimony of Smith in this connection within the rule of People v. Davis (Cal. Sup.) 293 P. 32, and cases there cited.

Other points raised by this appellant do not require consideration, but it should be said here that the criticism of the conduct of the district attorney is wholly without merit, and we may add that in a case of this character covering some six or seven weeks of trial with four defendants, each represented by one or more counsel, the lack of error and misconduct on the part of the district attorney is entitled to favorable comment.

[26] Little need be said regarding the case of appellant Gardella, inasmuch as the case must be reversed as to him because of the lack of corroborating evidence and the general principles and the questions of law which will arise on a retrial are not different from the general principles which have heretofore been discussed. In support of the judgment the respondent cites as corroborating evidence the testimony of Pauline Walker that Gardella was frequently in and about the sheriff's office, having conversations with Collier, Davis and sheriff Becker, and that on one occasion she telephoned him asking him why he had a truck load of liquor in front of his place, and that he told her not to worry because he was paying plenty of protection to the sheriff's office. The respondent cites as further corroborating testimony, this appellant's admission that he was raided by Collier and Stark of the sheriff's office but had received advanced information and had consequently destroyed all evidence; his testimony that Smith had tried to persuade him to buy stock in a paving company which was being organized by Parker who was a friend and associate of the sheriff; and the testimony of Mrs. Smith that she and her husband, in company with Becker and Parker and their respective wives, had been entertained by Gardella at which time intoxicating liquor was served. We are unable to find in this testimony any evidence which measures up to the requirements of the cases heretofore discussed, or that the testimony does more than create a suspicion of guilt of this appellant. For this reason the judgment and order as to him must be reversed.

For the reasons given it is ordered that the judgment and order in so far as they relate to appellants Collier and Davis are affirmed, and in so far as they relate to the appellants Shurtleff and Gardella, they are reversed with directions for a new trial.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM.

In his petition for a rehearing the appellant Collier finds fault with that portion of the opinion which relates to the admission in evidence of the testimony of the accomplice Smith relating to the acts and conversations of his coconspirators leading to the formation of the conspiracy. He argues that what we have said in the opinion is contrary to the rule of People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 P. 56; People v. Doble, 203 Cal. 510, 265 P. 184, and other cases cited. In our original opinion we endeavored to point out the distinction between the cases cited and the case at hand, and for the purpose of making our position more clear it is now ordered that the concluding sentence on page 6 [295 P. 901] of the typewritten opinion reading as follows: "Reading these sections together it seems clear that the purpose of the statute is that the act or declaration of a party could not be received in evidence as proof of a conspiracy with others until such conspiracy was established by that, when the matter at issue is the formation of the conspiracy, or the purposes for which the combination was made, evidence of the acts and declarations of the coconspirators among themselves and in their presence is admissible for the purpose of proving that issue" is hereby stricken out and the following is inserted in lieu thereof: "The offense charged in the indictment was that the defendants combined and agreed together, and with each other, to commit the crime of asking, receiving and 'agreeing to receive a bribe' in violation of section 68, Penal Code." This section declares the crime to be when an executive officer "asks, receives, or agrees to receive, any bribe, upon any agreement or understanding that his * * * action * * * shall be influenced thereby." Thus the agreement is the essential element of the crime charged as well as that denounced by the statute. This being so, the corpus delicti of the crime charged was the "agreement or understanding" made by the defendants and Smith whereby one or more of them undertook to ask for bribes, one or more agreed to accept bribes, and the sheriff's deputies undertook upon their part to permit their action as such officers to be influenced thereby.

[27-30] Now it must be apparent that when an agreement is not in writing parol evidence is admissible to prove its contents. And, when the agreement is in parol, evidence of the conversations of the parties tending to disclose the agreement made is evidence of the very fact to be proved and hence is evidence of the res gestæ. Hence, when the conspiracy charged in the indictment is an "agreement" to do or not to do a certain act, evidence of the conversations and acts of the conspirators which constitute the agreement is admissible to prove the agreement. Thus, when, as a part of the agreement, one or more of the conspirators undertakes to ask for a bribe, one or more agrees to accept a bribe, one or more agrees to do or not to do some act for the purpose of effectuating the compact, and one or more of the conspirators gives his assent to the compact either by express words or by actions from which such assent might be implied, evidence of such facts, when the agreement is in parol, is competent evidence of the acts or declarations which form "a part of the transaction" which is in dispute, and, as such is admissible under the express provisions of section 1850, Code of Civil Procedure. On the other hand, if a witness were asked to relate a conversation which he had had with one of the alleged conspirators such testimony would be hearsay and would not be admissible under section 1870, subdivision 6, Code of Civil Procedure, until after the conspiracy had been proved, and, by thus permitting evidence of the acts and declarations of a conspirator against his coconspirator, this subdivision becomes an enlargement of rather than a limitation upon the ordinary hearsay rule.

It is therefore ordered that the petition for rehearing of the appellant Collier be and the same is hereby denied.

It is further ordered that that portion of the original opinion commencing with the third paragraph on page 27 [295 P. 907] of the typewritten opinion "As to the appellant Shurtleff" and reading down to and including all the second paragraph on page 29 [295 P. 908] thereof and ending with the words "is entitled to favorable comment" be and the same is hereby stricken out; and that respondent's petition for a rehearing as to appellant Shurtleff be and the same is hereby granted.

It is further ordered that the petition of the respondent for a rehearing as to the appellant Gardella be and the same is denied.

ACME GRAVEL CO. v. BRYANT.

Civ. 7466.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 28, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 26, 1931.

1. Principal and agent 🔑99.

Agent has only such authority as principal, either actually or ostensibly, confers upon him (Civ. Code, §§ 2315–2317).

2. Principal and agent 🔑123(7).

Evidence held not to show actual authority or ostensible authority of materialman's agent to agree that sale price of materials should be paid partly in stock of building corporation (Civ. Code, §§ 2315–2317).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by the Acme Gravel Company against J. A. Bryant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Morgan J. Doyle and George D. Perry, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem.

This action was brought by respondent against appellant to recover the sum of $2,153.88 for building materials furnished appellant by respondent. In his answer appellant admitted the purchase of said building materials, but alleged that said materials were delivered to him to be used in the construction of a certain apartment hotel in Oakland under an oral understanding and agreement that 75 per cent. of the sale price of said materials should be paid for in cash and that the balance should be paid for in the preferred capital stock of the building corporation engaged in erecting said apartment hotel. At the trial it was admitted that if appellant's contention was correct, respondent was entitled to $553.88 in cash and $1,600 worth of said stock; that this amount of cash and stock had been delivered to respondent prior to the commencement of the action, but that respondent had refused to accept the same.

The trial court found against the existence of the agreement relied upon by appellant. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and appeal is taken from the judgment.

[1, 2] The sole question for this court to decide is whether or not the evidence is sufficient to justify the findings of the trial court and to justify its action in denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant produced but one witness, namely, Robert F. Morris, engineer and second in charge for appellant, who testified that one Nugent, salesman for respondent, solicited from him an order for the building materials in question and was told that to secure the order it would be necessary for respondent to take 25 per cent. of the value of the materials in stock; that Nugent advised he would have to take the matter up with his company; and that three or four days later he returned and stated in effect that the stock would be accepted as part payment. Thereupon deliveries began.

In answer to this, E. B. Kendall, vice president of the respondent corporation, testified that he had never heard of the claim that part of the materials were to be paid for in corporate stock until after the completion of the building in which they were used ; that no one on behalf of respondent had ever been authorized to accept other than cash in payment of materials; that it was the general order of the respondent corporation that any proposal for the taking of stocks or securities or anything out of the usual line of business must be taken up with the general office; that all employees were instructed not to agree to take stock in part payment for materials; that the respondent corporation had never engaged in any transaction with anyone for the acceptance of stock as such part payment; and that Nugent was only a salesman, and had no authority whatsoever as an officer of the company.

William H. Ford, president and sole owner of the respondent corporation, testified in effect that neither he nor anyone else in authority had ever authorized Nugent to negotiate a sale of materials for anything other than cash, and that he had never accepted anything but cash for materials; that as to the particular materials in question no one was authorized to take anything but cash in payment therefor; and that the first time the corporation ever heard of appellant's contention was after appellant had been pressed for payment of the amount due. He further testified that Nugent had admitted to him that while something had been said about taking stock as part payment for the materials, there was no agreement so to do. The said Nugent did not appear as a witness at the trial, his whereabouts being unknown.

It is appellant's contention that this evidence is sufficient to justify the conclusion that Nugent did enter into an agreement with appellant to take part payment in corporate stock, and that although by so doing he violated positive instructions, his acts were nevertheless binding upon his principal. The theory is advanced that one who employs another to make a sale becomes responsible for the methods which he adopts in so doing, and that, as was said in the case of Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. Santa Cruz County National Bank, 82 Cal. App. 519, 255 P. 881, 883, "where a principal makes it possible, through his acts, for his own agent to inflict injury, the result of such injury should not be passed on to innocent persons who have dealt with the agent in good faith under his apparent authority."

In the Cowell Case, however, the court further said that, "A loss through the trust and confidence placed by a principal in his agent should not be borne by those who were led to deal with the agent through the acts of the principal," and in holding the principal responsible for the loss referred to therein, pointed out with a great deal of particularity the different acts and transactions of the agent which had been either permitted or acquiesced in by his principal and which were sufficient to lead those with whom the agent was dealing to believe that he was clothed with ample power and authority. In other words, a case of ostensible agency was clearly established.

It is elementary that an agent has only such authority as the principal either actually or ostensibly confers upon him. Section 2315, Civ. Code.

"Actual authority is such as a principal intentionally confers upon the agent, or intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, allows the agent to believe himself to possess." Section 2316, Civ. Code.

"Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Section 2317, Civ. Code.

Here there is neither proof of actual authority nor of any act or omission on the part of the respondent corporation, or any of its officers, sufficient to establish ostensible authority.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court affirming on writ of certiorari an order of the respondent board of medical examiners wherein they found appellant guilty of unprofessional conduct, and revoked his license to practice medicine and surgery in the state of California.

The complaint as originally filed and sworn to alleged that appellant "by means of instruments and medicinal preparations attempted to and did procure" two certain "criminal" abortions, from which in each instance death resulted. Prior to the conclusion of the hearing before the board, amendments were allowed to conform to the proof so that the complaint in each count alleged that appellant also "agreed and/or offered to" procure said abortions.

Appellant specifies four grounds for reversal, asserting that the decisions and proceedings of the board of medical examiners are void for want of jurisdiction, in that: (1) The complaint itself is fatally defective in omitting to state facts sufficient to show that appellant procured or aided or abetted or attempted or agreed or offered to procure a criminal abortion; (2) the board denied appellant "due process of law" by rejecting the defense that appellant had been acquitted by the Superior Court of Yuba county of one of the charges specified in said complaint; (3) the board without authority allowed amendments to the complaint by the insertion of new unsworn charges without according an opportunity to appellant to plead to or put the same in issue; and (4) there is no evidence to support any of the sworn charges of the complaint.

[1] Appellant's contention as to the insufficiency of the allegations, either before or after amendment, is that respondents were required to do more than to merely word the accusation in the language of the statute, that the words "criminal abortion" amount to no more than the legal conclusion of the pleader upon undisclosed facts, and that all of the facts necessary to the validity of a criminal complaint for criminal abortions should be alleged.

Both the District Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of California, however, have held contrary to appellant's contention. In the case of Lanterman v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 472, 172 P. 625, the court held that a complaint filed before the state board of medical examiners charging a physician in the language of the act with committing a criminal abortion is sufficient without stating the facts enumerated in the Penal Code, for the reason that the language of the statute is sufficiently explicit to advise a person charged thereunder of the particular kind of unprofessional conduct of which he is accused. And in the case of Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965, the Supreme Court similarly held.

[2] As to the second stated ground for reversal, the court is of the opinion that the respondent board was not bound by the action of the Superior Court in acquitting appellant of a charge of abortion based upon certain alleged acts of appellant complained of in the complaint herein, and that evidence of such acquittal was properly rejected.

"Judgments in criminal proceedings are generally not competent or conclusive in civil proceedings, and vice versa, not only because ordinarily there is not the necessary identity of parties, but also because the same rules of evidence and degree of proof do not prevail in the two classes of proceedings." 15 Cal. Jur. 114.

While there appear to be no decisions in California squarely in point, it has been held in at least one sister state (Colorado) that a board of medical examiners is not bound to accept as final a judgment of acquittal in a criminal court. State Board of Medical Examiners v. Noble, 65 Colo. 410, 177 P. 141. Furthermore, it is to be noted that the judgment of acquittal in the instant case, even if constituting a defense, would be an answer to but one of the acts complained of in the complaint filed against appellant.

[3] After a consideration of the third point raised on appeal, we believe it is likewise without merit. The jurisdiction of appellant was originally acquired by filing with the secretary of the board of medical examiners a sworn complaint charging appellant with having been guilty of unprofessional conduct, in that he actually procured two criminal abortions, following which a citation, made returnable at the next regular session of the board, was issued and served upon appellant. He was thereby notified of the unprofessional conduct with which he was charged, and given an opportunity to defend the action on its merits. In the course of the hearing, evidence was introduced tending to prove that appellant was guilty of offering and agreeing to procure the two criminal abortions, and the amendments allowed shortly before the conclusion of the hearing were made merely to conform to such proof.

[4] It is common practice to allow such amendments in civil cases. This is not so in criminal actions, but that proceedings before the state board of medical examiners are more closely akin to civil than to criminal proceedings is well established.

"In considering and determining the case of one who is charged with unprofessional conduct, the State Board of Medical Examiners * * * exercises a quasi-judicial function. * * * The proceedings of the board are not, however, governed by the technical rules of pleading and practice, and the analogies of criminal law may not be invoked. * * * Nor are the provisions of the Penal Code made applicable by reason of the fact that the conduct of the accused is described as 'criminal' abortion." 20 Cal. Jur. pp. 1063, 1064.

It may also be said that the charges of agreeing to perform criminal abortions were not so entirely foreign to the charges of actually performing such abortions as to take appellant by surprise or to jeopardize his right of defense. Appellant did not choose to testify in his own behalf either before or after the amendments were allowed, and his counsel rested his case and argued it without any request for a continuance or permission to file an amended answer or to produce further evidence.

[5] As to the last of appellant's contentions, respondents concede that, if there was no evidence to support the accusations, they were without jurisdiction to either adjudge appellant guilty or to revoke his license, but an examination of the record presented on review by no means shows it destitute of evidence to support the accusations.

In one of the cases complained of (that of a married woman), the husband testified that his wife told appellant that she was pregnant, and asked him if he could do anything for her. Appellant said he could, but it would cost her $50. The money was paid, and appellant took the woman into another room, where they remained together some fifteen or twenty minutes. After leaving appellant's office, the wife complained of pain in her abdomen. Three days afterwards she became very ill and was taken to a hospital, where she died some six weeks later. The attending physician testified that in his opinion her condition was due to an incomplete abortion. He also gave it as his opinion, gained from examinations and consultations had prior to her visit to appellant, that she was pregnant, and that there was no reason why she would not have been able to bear a child. The record before this court further reveals a canceled check, indorsed by appellant, which was said to have been given in payment of the operation, and it also contains the uncontradicted statement of the husband to the effect that appellant, on demand, returned to him the $50 after his wife died.

In the other case (that of a single woman), there is uncontradicted evidence of an agreement to perform an abortion. The evidence of the operation having been performed is practically the same as that of the first case, with the addition that one witness heard decedent groaning while she was in appellant's office. As to the criminal aspect of the operation, there is evidence of pregnancy, but none as to whether the operation was necessary in order to preserve life. The most that can be said on that subject is that neither appellant nor any one on his behalf made any pretense that such an operation was in fact necessary.

As to criminal actions for abortion, "there is a wide divergence of authority upon the question as to whether, under a statute such as ours, the burden of establishing that the abortion was actually necessary is an affirmative defense, or whether the proposition is to be negatived in the first instance by the prosecution." People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 P. 1017, 1018. The courts have contented themselves with merely holding that, if the burden rested upon the prosecution, such burden was sufficiently met in the particular case under consideration.

[6] For the purpose of determining whether the respondent board in the case at bar had jurisdiction, it would seem reasonable to conclude that positive proof of appellant's agreement to perform an abortion before he had even seen or examined the woman should be sufficient to place upon him the burden of affirmatively showing that the operation was necessary.

The words "unprofessional conduct" in reference to the acts under discussion herein are defined in the Medical Practice Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4807, § 14) to mean "the procuring or aiding or abetting or attempting or agreeing or offering to procure a criminal abortion."

It is the opinion of the court, from an examination of the record and a consideration of the facts above detailed, that there is ample evidence of appellant's unprofessional conduct in this regard to warrant the conclusion that the respondent board did not exceed its authority when it revoked appellant's license to practice medicine and surgery.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. Sales 🔑130(2).

Complaint in action for rescission of automobile purchase contract, alleging buyer was under influence of liquor, held to state cause of action.

The buyer in her complaint alleged that, when she was under the influence of intoxicating liquor and incapable of entering into any contract, the sellers induced buyer to enter into contract wherein sellers sold to buyer a certain automobile at certain price in excess of its real value; that, when buyer was sober and learned of fraud practiced on her, she demanded in writing that the contract be rescinded and offered to restore automobile to sellers, and demanded the return to her of the automobile she had delivered to sellers and cancellation of contract to pay balance of purchase price.

2. Sales 🔑130(3½).

In buyer's action for rescission of automobile purchase contract, findings held to support judgment of rescission.

The court found that the sellers, after retaking the automobile on the buyer's demand for cancellation of the contract on the ground that it was executed while she was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, resold the automobile for the reasonable value thereof and received sufficient to save sellers from loss without regard to transaction with buyer, and that sellers refused to redeliver automobile buyer had turned in as part payment.

WASTE, C. J.

The plaintiff filed in the court below a pleading, entitled "Second Amended Complaint for Rescission of Contract," in which it was alleged that, at a time when the plaintiff was under the influence of intoxicating liquor and incapable of entering into any contract, the defendants "induced plaintiff to enter into a contract wherein and whereby the said defendants sold to plaintiff" a certain Peerless automobile at a price far in excess of its real value, and as part payment took from plaintiff a Pontiac automobile then owned by her. "Within a few days thereafter * * * and when plaintiff was sober and learned of the fraud practiced upon her by defendants," she demanded in writing that the contract be rescinded, offered to restore the Peerless automobile to defendants, and demanded the return to her of the Pontiac automobile and a cancellation of the contract to pay the balance of the purchase price of the Peerless. The defendants accepted the return of the Peerless, but refused to redeliver the Pontiac to plaintiff or to cancel the contract.

The trial court, sitting without a jury, found these allegations to be true, except that plaintiff was not under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the transaction, "but did at the time of executing the * * * contract * * * have drinks of intoxicating liquor in the place of business" of the defendants. It also found that the defendants, after retaking the Peerless automobile, resold it "for a sum of money equal to the reasonable value thereof, and sufficient to save said defendants incurring any financial loss, without regard to the transaction had with plaintiff." Judgment was entered for the plaintiff for the return to her of the Pontiac automobile, or its reasonable value in case a return could not be had, and directing cancellation of the contract. The defendants have appealed on the judgment roll alone, and are here contending that the complaint does not state a cause of action and that the findings do not support the judgment.

[1-3] The complaint states a cause of action. The findings support the judgment. By accepting a restoration of the Peerless automobile, the only thing of value the plaintiff had received, and reselling it, the defendants worked a rescission by consent. They are not entitled to the property and the price also. Boas v. Knewing, 175 Cal. 226, 229, 165 P. 690, L. R. A. 1917F, 462.

RICHARDS, J.

The plaintiff, a California corporation, commenced this action against the defendants, who were its former directors, to require the latter to repay into the treasury of the corporation the sum of $19,551.76, alleged to have been the money and property of the corporation which had been illegally withdrawn from its treasury through the action of the defendants while they were the directors of the corporation, and which were alleged to have been so withdrawn and expended under the circumstances set forth in the plaintiff's second amended complaint. The original complaint was filed on March 21, 1924. The demurrer of the defendants to the second amended complaint was based upon two main grounds: First, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and, second, that the plaintiff's cause of action as alleged therein was barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338, section 359, and subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial court sustained the demurrer upon each of said grounds and entered judgment in the defendants' favor upon the declination of the plaintiff to further amend. The plaintiff appealed from this judgment to the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, which reversed the judgment and ordered the demurrer to be overruled. San Leandro Canning Co., Inc., v. Perillo et al., 84 Cal. App. 635, 258 P. 670. In reversing the judgment the court expressly held that the action was not barred upon the date of the commencement thereof by any statute of limitations. This holding was apparently predicated upon the averments of the complaint to the effect that during all of the times mentioned in the complaint at which the moneys and property of the plaintiff corporation were asserted to have been illegally withdrawn by or through the acts of the defendants they (the defendants) were in full control of the plaintiff corporation as the directors thereof. The other matters adverted to by the appellate tribunal in its reversal of the judgment will be considered later in the course of this opinion. Upon the return of the cause to the trial court following such reversal the defendants filed their joint answer to plaintiff's aforesaid second amended complaint, in which, after specific denials of the substantial averments thereof, the defendants repeated their plea to the effect that the plaintiff's alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of the several sections of the Code of Civil Procedure above set forth.

The cause went to trial upon the issues as thus framed, whereupon certain evidence was presented by the respective parties which formed the basis for the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the trial court. These facts, which are substantially undisputed, may be briefly summarized as follows: On or about November 8, 1920, the plaintiff was a California corporation having an unissued capital stock of $1,000,000, divided into 10,000 shares of the par value of $100 per share. It had at that time and thereafter up to a time shortly before the commencement of the present action a board of directors of seven members, the individuals composing which were the six defendants herein and another who was deceased at the time this action was commenced. These directors were during said period, as expressly alleged in said complaint and as expressly found by the trial court, in control of the affairs of the corporation and of the expenditure and disposition of the moneys and property thereof. The directors on or about said date entered into a plan to purchase the plant of another corporation for the sum of $135,000, to be paid for in corporate stock of the plaintiff, and in order to carry into effect such purpose to sell $150,000 worth of the treasury stock of the corporation. They therefore caused the corporation to apply to the state corporation department for a permit to issue and sell said treasury stock, which permit when issued, among other things, provided that the compensation or commission to be paid for the sale of said shares of stock should not exceed 15 per cent.; nor should any commission or compensation be paid in connection with any sale made within this state except to an agent or broker holding a certificate from the commissioner of corporations authorizing him to act as plaintiff's agent in making such sales; a true copy of the permit was to be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber before his subscription should be taken. The permit authorized the sale of the stock for 25 per cent. cash, the balance of the purchase price to be evidenced by promissory notes payable on or before seven and one-half months from the date of said permit. Acting upon this permit, and in some cases in anticipation thereof, certain of the directors of the corporation undertook to make sales of the said treasury stock of the corporation to various persons without possessing any authorization from the state corporation department so to do in order to conform to the requirements of the aforesaid permit. The two directors who undertook so to do were Pelton and Faustina, who received, according to the findings of the trial court, as commissions on the sale of so much of said treasury stock as were made by them, the sum of $14,112, of which the sum of $12,009.50 was paid by the action of the defendants herein as directors of the corporation to their codirectors Pelton and Faustina before March 21, 1921, and the sum of $2,062.50 after March 21, 1921.

The court further found that the sum of $3,004.12 was paid as commissions to others than these two directors on account of similar sales of said stock. It would thus appear that the total sum paid out of the treasury of the corporation upon said sales of its treasury stock, according to the findings of the trial court, was $17,116.12. The total sum found to have been received by the corporation for the sale of its said treasury stock was the sum of $70,279.41, upon which, at the rate allowable for commissions under the terms of said permit, there would be payable to those legally entitled to receive the same the sum of $10,541.91. There are certain discrepancies in the foregoing findings of the trial court which may be corrected upon a retrial of the cause; as for example with respect to the total sum paid by or on behalf of the corporation to directors Pelton and Faustina as commissions for their services in selling said stock, the answer of the defendants expressly alleges that said directors received therefor the sum of $6,228.75 in cash, and also received from the corporation certain promissory notes of the face value of $10,000 on account of commissions for the sale of said stock. These two sums aggregate $16,228.75. The defendants undertake to evade the full effect of this admission upon the theory that the promissory notes so alleged to have been received by said two directors were property of the corporation as distinguished from money, and that for any unlawful transfer and receipt of said property the defendants cannot be held liable in this form of action. The evidence disclosed, however, that the promissory notes so taken over by these two directors consisted of installment notes made payable to the corporation by the purchasers of the stock which said directors undertook to sell under said permit, and that in many instances at least the payments made upon said notes were made to the corporation itself, and were by the action of its officers paid over to said directors, to whom said notes had already been assigned. The trial court properly treated these transactions as amounting substantially to a cash payment by the corporation to said directors as commissions for the making of said stock sales. The evidence upon the trial showed the total amount received by said two directors on account of said commissions to have been the sum of $16,858.25, and such should have been the finding of the trial court. If such had been the only errors occurring at the trial they might possibly be corrected upon this appeal without a retrial of the cause, but the trial court committed other and more vital errors in the course of the trial.

[1-3] When this cause was before the appellate tribunal upon the former appeal it was expressly, though quite too briefly, stated in its decision that the cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint was not barred at the time of the commencement thereof by any statute of limitations. The unexpressed reason for this ruling was doubtless that set forth in the complaint, to the effect that during the course of the transaction out of which this controversy arose and for a period of time up to within three years prior to the date of the commencement of the action the defendants were the directors of said corporation, and as such were in the full control of its affairs and finances. These averments of the complaint having been for the purposes of said decision taken to be true, it would follow, under what we deem to be a well-settled principle of law, that the statute of limitations does not commence to run against unlawful acts and expenditures made by or under the direction of the directors of the corporation while they were in full control of its affairs and of the expenditure of its funds. City of Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 540, 552; Pacific Vinegar Works v. Smith, 152 Cal. 507, 514, 93 P. 85; Whitten v. Dabney, 171 Cal. 621, 629, 154 P. 312. Following the foregoing ruling of the appellate tribunal and upon the trial of the cause the undisputed evidence in the case showed the aforesaid averments of the complaint to be true. This being so, the holding of the appellate tribunal to the effect that this action was not at the date of the commencement thereof barred by any statute of limitations must be held to have become the law of the case, particularly in view of the fact that the trial court in its findings declared: "That the defendants were directors of said corporation and controlled its affairs and expended its money as such directors and the court so finds." Notwithstanding the foregoing state of the record and of its above finding of fact, the trial court, after declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendants for the sum of $4,306.67, proceeded to hold: "With the exception of said sum of $4,306.67, all other amounts claimed by plaintiff in said complaint are barred by the provisions of section 359 and subdivisions 1 and 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure." The judgment of the court based upon such unjustified conclusion was clearly an error, and this fact alone would seem to compel a reversal of this cause upon appeal. The trial court, however, committed another and equally vital error or series of errors during the trial of the cause.

[4, 5] When this matter was before the appellate court upon the former appeal, that tribunal undertook to indulge in a course of reasoning the effect of which was to arrive at the conclusion that, as to the averments of the complaint with respect to payments made to the directors Pelton and Faustina and to certain brokers within the limit of the 15 per cent. allowed to be paid as commissions under the terms of the permit to sell its stock issued by the corporation commissioner, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the same in this form of action, even though it should be made to appear, as by the averments of the complaint it was made to appear, that said sales were made and said commissions paid in violation of the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act and of the permit issued thereunder, for the reason that the persons making such sales had not received the requisite certificate which would entitle them so to do. With this portion of the aforesaid opinion of the appellate tribunal this court was, however, apparently in disagreement since, upon petition for hearing in this tribunal, it was held that, while the decision of the District Court of Appeal reversing the former judgment of the trial court was correct in other respects which rendered it proper that the petition for hearing should be denied, this court proceeded to state (San Leandro Can. Co., Inc., v. Perillo, 84 Cal. App. 642, 258 P. 670, 673): "In denying the same, however, we withhold our approval as to that portion of said decision which indicates that upon the trial of said action the limit of the plaintiff's recovery would be the sum of $9,164.41. Upon the question as to what amount the plaintiff would be entitled to recover upon proof of the facts averred in his complaint we express no opinion." The clear import of this language would seem to be that of suggesting to the trial court that upon the trial of the cause which was to follow the reversal of the judgment the plaintiff should be permitted to make proof of those averments contained in its complaint to the effect that the payment of any commissions whatever to those making sales of the stock of the corporation covered by said permit were unlawful and were recoverable at the suit of the corporation in this form of action. When, however, upon the trial of this cause, the plaintiff proffered such proof the trial court refused to admit the same. The specific offer of the plaintiff which was thus refused had reference to the averments of paragraph 6 of the complaint, wherein it was in effect alleged that the directors of the corporation, who were and are the defendants in this action, had entered into a conspiracy among themselves to violate in certain ways therein set forth the provisions and limitations of the permit for the sale of said stock and had caused the same to be sold and the commissions resulting from such sales to be paid out of the funds and property of the corporation to the two directors Pelton and Faustina in violation of law and of the terms of said permit. Having refused to permit the plaintiff to make proof of the foregoing facts as set forth in detail in paragraph 6 of its complaint, the trial court made the following finding: "That an objection was sustained to the evidence offered as to the allegations of paragraph 6 of said complaint, and therefore no evidence was admitted in support thereof, and said allegations are found therefore to be untrue." Having made the foregoing finding, the trial court proceeded further to find: "That the damage sustained by said corporation herein was the sum of $7,883.25, and that of said amount $3,576.58 is barred by the provisions of section 359 and subdivisions 1 and 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That said $7,883.25 was money paid for commissions exceeding fifteen per cent of sales of said stock for cash." As a conclusion of law from the foregoing findings of fact the trial court found: "That plaintiff should have judgment against the defendants for the sum of $4,306.67, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the 21st day of March, 1921, and for its costs."

It seems clear to us that in thus limiting the plaintiff's proofs herein and in thus holding that as to the largest part of the plaintiff's cause of action it was barred by the provisions of the aforesaid statute of limitations, and in thus confining the recovery of the plaintiff to the sum of $4,306.67, the trial court has acted, not only in disregard of the law of the case with respect to the application of the statute of limitations, but also in disregard of the intimations of this court as to the proof which the plaintiff was entitled to make under the averments of its complaint, and as to the amount of recovery to which the plaintiff might be entitled upon the making of such proof. It is urged, however, by the respondent that, the corporation having been granted a permit to make sales of a certain amount of its treasury stock upon the terms and conditions stated therein, it was the right and duty of the individual directors of the corporation to engage in making such sales without the necessity of procuring the broker's certificate required by said permit in order to conform to the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended). This much may be conceded to be true, but it does not therefore follow that said directors because of the existence of such right and the performance of such duty would be entitled to withdraw from the funds and property of the corporation commissions for making such sales of stock in violation of the terms of the permit, which in conformity with the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act provided: "Nor shall any commission or compensation be paid in connection with any sale made within this state except to an agent or broker holding a certificate from the commissioner of corporations, then in effect, authorizing him to act as applicant's agent." To pay or receive commissions from the treasury of the corporation in violation of this provision of the permit and of the provisions of section 14 of the Corporate Securities Act (as amended by St. 1925, p. 970, § 9) would be clearly an unlawful act, and to thus disburse the funds and properties of the corporation a wrongful and illegal disposition thereof. Had the plaintiff been permitted to make its proffered proofs as to the circumstances and conditions under which sales of said corporate stock were made by the two directors essaying to make the same, and as to the withdrawal of the sum total of such commissions from the treasury of the corporation in payment of such commissions, the trial court would have been enabled to make findings conformably to our intimations in denying a hearing after the former decision.

The appeal herein having been prosecuted by the plaintiff from the limited form and amount of the judgment in its favor, it is ordered that the judgment shall be and the same is hereby reversed, with direction to the trial court to proceed with a retrial of the issues involved in this cause in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion.

PRESTON, J.

This is a family dispute centering around the control and management of a California family corporation organized in 1908 and known as the Keck Company. The father, G. O. Keck, and the brothers, A. W. Keck and Ralph D. Keck, complete the dramatic personæ. The latter, however, plays an unimportant role, leaving the father and the other son A. W. Keck as the principal actors. Both the father and the son Ralph D. Keck have died since judgment in this action and their respective personal representatives have been substituted as parties appellant.

The Keck Company has a capital stock of 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, and from the date of its organization until about the year 1919 it was an active concern engaged in extensive farming operations. It now owns real estate of the approximate value of $50,000. Since 1919 it has been a dormant corporation, but at that time it owned a considerable amount of liquid assets other than said real property. From its organization until the year 1922 it was under the active management of A. W. Keck. During that year, however, on account of both physical and mental illness he disappeared from the scene of action and remained away until about the year 1926, when he reappeared, apparently restored in both mind and body. In 1925 his place on the board of directors was filled, and, finding this out in 1926, as above mentioned, unfortunate differences in the family arose.

Prior to his illness, A. W. Keck had become indebted to the corporation for borrowed money, which said sum, together with sums advanced for his account during his illness, aggregated the total sum of $42,018.48. During the same period the father was a responsible member of a copartnership, known as Keck & Keck, composed of himself and the son Ralph D. Keck, which also became indebted to the corporation in the sum of $99,775.68, and the father individually became indebted to the corporation in the sum of $9,610.67. The said partnership had become practically insolvent and the son Ralph D. Keck had sold to his father his stock in the family corporation, so that at the period here involved the beneficial interest in the stock of said corporation was owned as follows: By the father 461½ shares, plus 77 shares; by A. W. Keck, 461½ shares. Although the latter's stock, with the exception of one share, stood in the name of A. W. Keck Company, a corporation, he was the sole owner of the A. W. Keck Company capital stock, so in reality the entire stock of the family corporation was owned by the father and said son, about 54 per cent. thereof by the father and about 46 per cent. thereof by the son.

In 1927, A. W. Keck, on behalf of himself and of the corporation owned by him, sued in equity on behalf of the Keck Company, naming as defendants said Keck Company, said partnership and his said father and brother, asking for an accounting between the said Keck Company and the other defendants, for judgment in favor of the corporation against all other defendants for the sums found due from them and for other ancillary relief not necessary here to record, except that a receivership was prayed for in order to prevent dissipation of the assets of said corporation. The defendants retaliated, charging that the plaintiff, A. W. Keck, was likewise heavily indebted to said corporation, Keck Company, and joined in the prayer for an accounting, following this with an offer to pay their indebtedness to said corporation when and after said plaintiff had first liquidated his obligation to it. The prayer was also that judgment be given in favor of the corporation and against A. W. Keck and the A. W. Keck Company.

Thereafter the case came to trial, an accounting was had by a referee and report made to the court, and as a result of such accounting the items of indebtedness above referred to were ascertained to be correct and are not here in dispute. Findings of fact were made in accordance with this accounting, followed by judgment in favor of the corporation and against G. O. Keck for the sum of $9,610.67, against G. O. Keck and Ralph D. Keck, copartners under the firm name and style of Keck & Keck, for the sum of $99,775.68 and against A. W. Keck in the sum of $42,018.48. Said judgment likewise enjoined the defendants from dissipating the assets of the corporation and from transferring the said partnership and assets thereof to it, or from borrowing from the corporation or loaning to themselves any of the assets thereof, and it concluded by holding the cause open for the purpose of entertaining a motion for the appointment of a receiver to enforce the decree, to protect the stockholders of said corporation and to carry out the other provisions of the judgment.

The defendants have appealed, although, as above stated, the judgment of the court below was practically in accord with the prayer of their answer. They make the sole contention for reversal that the court should have first required plaintiff A. W. Keck to pay and discharge his indebtedness to the corporation before judgment of any kind passed against them, attempting to call into operation the familiar principle in equity that he who seeks equity must first do equity. Appellants say that plaintiff may be or become insolvent, in which event they may be forced to pay the amounts due from them while he will not be required to pay the amounts due from him, but will thus be freed from his correlative obligation.

It is possible for a condition to arise out of this situation which might work to the disadvantage of the defendants, but we cannot see the necessity for making application of the equitable principle contended for, for the reason that the indebtedness from the respective parties to the corporation is admittedly correct and the judgment in the main is in accord with the prayer of the pleadings of all the parties. The action by plaintiffs really amounted to invoking the power of a court of equity to establish the rights and obligations of all the parties concerned. Moreover, the court has retained jurisdiction for the purpose of supervising the enforcement of its decree through the appointment of a receiver or other further proceedings in the matter and we feel that it has the power to prevent any threatened injustice in connection with the administration of this subject matter. While we regard it as unfortunate that a cause of this nature should reach the courts, still the clear duty of this court seems to be to uphold the action of the court below.

Accordingly, the judgment is affirmed.

LANGDON, J.

This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of the superior court of Yuba county in an action for unlawful detainer.

Plaintiffs, the owners of a hotel, leased the same to defendants on December 31, 1926, for a period of fourteen years and ten months from January 1, 1927. Rental in the sum of $1,500 was payable on January 1, 1927, and on February 1, 1927, and thereafter the sum of $1,800 was payable on the first of each month for the remainder of the term. In accordance with the terms of the lease, which are hereinafter set forth in part, the additional sum of $5,400 was deposited with the lessor by the lessee.

Defendants failed to pay a part of the rent due for the month of June, 1928. Plaintiffs gave the proper notice to quit and then brought this proceeding in unlawful detainer, and being unable to serve defendants, applied for a receiver. On July 3, 1928, the court made an order appointing a receiver, who thereupon duly qualified and took possession of the premises. The trial was held on July 23, 1928, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs for rent due to the end of July, amounting to $2,700, together with the costs of the action, and, in addition, the lease was canceled and possession restored to plaintiffs. The sum of $477.56, being profits collected by the receiver up to July 31, 1928, was subsequently ordered paid to the defendants.

Plaintiffs were required by the judgment to deduct the amount of their recovery from the $5,400 previously deposited at the time of the execution of the lease; the balance was directed to be returned to defendants.

Plaintiffs contend on this appeal that the judgment was erroneous in requiring the return of the sum originally deposited with them, and in giving to defendants the profits collected by the receiver. They claim that they were entitled to retain the entire deposit, and in addition to receive judgment for the unpaid rent and the receiver's profits.

[1, 2] With respect to the money collected by the receiver, the claim of plaintiffs is clearly unfounded. It is true that where a receiver is appointed in a proceeding in unlawful detainer, he takes possession for the benefit of the lessor; but in such case, the lessee is no longer liable for rent. Telegraph Avenue Corp. v. Raentsch, 205 Cal. 93, 269 P. 1109, 61 A. L. R. 366; Gordon v. Harris, 94 Cal. App. 682, 271 P. 779. The judgment in this case was in favor of plaintiffs for rent for the months of June and July. Obviously, the lessors are not entitled to both the rent for July and the profits of the business for that month, and since the judgment for rent for that period was greater than the amount collected by the receiver, we cannot see that plaintiffs have the slightest cause for complaint. Moreover, the court's order was made upon a settlement of the receiver's account, after judgment had been entered in the main action. This order settling the account, though appealable (Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 963), was never appealed from.

[3] The chief question presented by this case is whether the lessors were entitled to retain the deposit of $5,400, in addition to the judgment for unpaid rent. The determination of this question requires the interpretation of the following language in the lease:

"(o) It is further agreed by said lessee that he will, at the time the first month's rent is paid hereunder * * * pay to said Lessors, the sum of Five Thousand Four Hundred Dollars, this sum to be paid by said Lessors as security for the performance by said lessee of the covenants herein contained * * * and should he break any of the covenants * * * then the said Lessors shall have the right to keep the same as his own for liquidated damages, it being agreed by the parties hereto that in the event of the failure of said Lessee to perform the covenants herein contained, the damages to the Lessors would be irreparable and impossible to ascertain.

"Should the lessee perform all of the covenants herein contained * * * then said sum of Fifty-Four Hundred Dollars shall be applied as payment for the last three months' rent of the term of this lease." (Italics ours.)

In unmistakable language this provision states that the $5,400 deposit was made as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease, the sum to be retained, that is, forfeited by the lessor as liquidated damages in the event of breach by the lessee. It is settled in this state that such a provision in a lease is a penalty within the meaning of section 1670 of the Civil Code, and is void. Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 168 P. 114; Knight v. Marks, 183 Cal. 354, 191 P. 531.

[4] Plaintiffs urge that this case comes within the exception to the above rule where the money is not deposited as security for the performance by the lessee, but is given as an advance payment of the rent on the last few months of the term. In such a situation it has been held that the lessor may retain the money upon default by the lessee. But it is essential that the money be given as an absolute payment of rent in advance, and not as a deposit to secure the performance of the lessee. Wetzler v. Patterson, 73 Cal. App. 527, 238 P. 1077; Curtis v. Arnold, 43 Cal. App. 97, 184 P. 510; Sinclair v. Burke (Or.) 287 P. 686.

[5] The provision in question does not, in our opinion, come within this exception to the rule. A reading of it discloses its plain and obvious purpose, namely, to permit the forfeiture of the sum paid, upon breach of covenant by the lessee. This right of forfeiture is made to cover the entire term. It is recognized, however, that in the event that the lessee fully performs, the sum must be returned. It is accordingly provided that "should the lessee perform all of the covenants," then the sum shall be applied as payment for the last three months' rent. This is in no sense an advance payment of the rent for that period. Until the end of the term, the money is held as security; and until that time it is uncertain whether the money shall be applied on the rent. This interpretation is strengthened by the further provision in the lease that the $5,400 should be returned to the lessee upon the accidental destruction of the premises. This is, of course, wholly inconsistent with the idea of an absolute payment in advance, with title to the money passing to the lessor. See Wetzler v. Patterson, supra.

[6] Plaintiffs finally argue that the lease was ambiguous in its language covering the deposit; that one interpretation leads to illegality, and that therefore the other interpretation should be adopted. They also attack the refusal of the court to permit the introduction of parol evidence to show the intended meaning of the provision. We are satisfied that the trial court acted within its discretion in rejecting the offer of any such evidence. We are unable to perceive any ambiguity in the terms of the lease. The primary purpose of the provision for the deposit is clearly stated in the instrument, and under the law of this state, the provision is void.

The judgment is affirmed.

To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for hospital and nursing expenses, the employer and insurer bring certiorari.

Award affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and Edward O. Allen, both of San Francisco, and Wallace Rutherford, of Napa, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is a petition by an employer and his insurance carrier to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

The respondent O'Neill was employed by petitioner Gildersleeve as a laborer, and while so employed suffered a fractured spine. He received some medical treatment at the camp where he worked, and later was removed by his relatives to Napa. He placed his case in the hands of chiropractors, and received chiropractic treatment at the home of a private nurse. His recovery was only partial.

Petitioners, the employer and his insurance carrier, instituted proceedings to be relieved of liability for medical expense under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, section 9 (a) (St. 1917, p. 836, as amended), claiming that the employee had refused to accept a tender of medical and surgical treatment. The commission found this to be the fact, and made an order absolving petitioners from such liability. A writ of review having been obtained, the District Court of Appeal reversed the order, holding that from the record it appeared that "no tender of medical or surgical treatment was ever made by either the employer or insurance carrier." O'Neill v. Industrial Accident Commission, 91 Cal. App. 121, 266 P. 866, 868. New proceedings were then instituted by petitioners before the commission, and new testimony was taken on this issue. The commission concluded that the new evidence did not meet the conditions of a sufficient tender laid down in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, and therefore made an order granting reimbursement to the employee for hospital and nursing expense. The cost of the chiropractic treatments was not included in the award on the ground that they were not proper treatment for the injury. Petitioners then sought a new writ from the District Court of Appeal, which was denied without opinion. Whereupon a hearing in this court was had.

The holding of the District Court of Appeal was upon the ground that although the record showed some offers of medical attention made to the relatives of the employee, no offer was made to him personally. Petitioners contend that the evidence taken at the second proceeding before the commission established a tender to the employee and a rejection thereof by him.

[1, 2] Upon an examination of the record we are satisfied that there is evidence to support the commission's finding. The testimony does show a recommendation of hospital treatment made by two of the physicians who originally attended the employee, but it does not satisfactorily establish that these recommendations were authorized tenders made on behalf of the insurance carrier or employer. Moreover, they were made following a period in which the employee was badly neglected in the matter of medical attention, and it does not appear that the value and necessity of the prescribed treatment was made clear to him. The statute, of course, requires a denial of an award for medical expense only when the employee's refusal is unreasonable. In the face of conflicting evidence, and considering all of the circumstances, the commission concluded that there was no sufficient, unequivocal tender, and hence no unreasonable refusal, and this conclusion we cannot disturb.

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[3] Petitioner also seeks a reduction of disability indemnity under section 11 (e) of the act (St. 1917, p. 842) on the ground that the disability now existing was caused or aggravated by unreasonable refusal to accept proper medical treatment. This issue, like the first, is determined by the finding of the commission that there was not a sufficient tender of such treatment.

The award is affirmed.

The employee of the third party making the repairs at the owner's request opened the window by placing one end of a rod, kept in the case by the owner for such purpose, against the window frame and the other against the case, causing the window to project over sidewalk approximately five feet two inches above the sidewalk level. While the window was in such position the pedestrian's head came in violent contact therewith, inflicting injuries.

SEAWELL, J.

This appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit entered in favor of American Trust Company, a corporation. Said trust company conducts a banking business in its building located at the northwesterly corner of Grant avenue and O'Farrell street, a busy locality, in the city and county of San Francisco. The building is so constructed as to form a recess at the Grant avenue and O'Farrell juncture. This unoccupied space adds to the sidewalk width over which the public freely pass and repass. Within said recess and fastened to the building the trust company maintains a mechanical advertising device. The case which incloses this device is an ornamental structure, box-shaped, with its base resting upon the trust company's property. There is no barrier or marks distinguishing the space occupied by the case and immediately adjacent thereto from the sidewalk in general. It is approximately eight feet in height and a lesser dimension in width. The upper half of said case is finished with a plate glass through which the display is exhibited. This window is hung from the top by two hinges and opens upward and outward over the sidewalk. Its projection over the sidewalk when raised to a position perpendicular to the wall lines of the building is about two feet. The lower half of said case is of wood construction with double doors. Such appliances as are necessary or convenient for use in the maintenance of said device are kept in the lower portion of said case. A Mr. Waters, an employee of the trust company, originated the exhibits and installed the mechanical figures. On June 5, 1928, said device was out of repair and refused to function properly. Nelson and Green, copartners, from whom the exhibits were purchased, were notified of the mechanical trouble and they sent their employee, James Lowman, to put the mechanical device in working order. Mr. Lowman obtained the key to the case from the trust company. The trust company provided and kept in said case an iron rod approximately three feet in length which was used to keep the window raised when arranging or changing the exhibit, which was quite frequently done, and to repair the mechanical device as occasion might require. The window was raised by placing one end of the rod against the window frame and the other against the case. This arrangement raised the window to a horizontal position with the wall, causing it to project over the sidewalk about two feet at an elevation of approximately five feet two inches above the sidewalk level. Appellant, a stenographer by occupation, was on June 5, 1928, at about the hour of 1:30 p. m., on her way to a bank situate on O'Farrell street, and as she turned said corner on her journey her head came into violent contact with the overhanging window, thereby inflicting personal injuries upon her.

[1-3] Although there is no dispute of the fact that Nelson and Green employed the workman who negligently placed the window in a position which made it a menace to passers-by, nevertheless, the irresistible inference which flows from the evidence is that the workman made use of said appliance prepared and furnished by the trust company as a proper method of holding said window open in order to gain access to the interior of the case as its use should require. It further appears that red cloths were kept by the trust company in the case which were to be attached to each side of the window when open as warning signals. That circumstance is tantamount to an acknowledgment on the part of the trust company that a dangerous situation was created by the use of the rod in the manner described, and that additional precautions were reasonably necessary to avert personal injury to pedestrians. The workman Lowman first testified that he thought he used one of the red cloths as a warning signal, but finally admitted that he had no recollection on the subject. The appellant testified that she saw no such signal. This being an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, all the evidence and every reasonable inference must be construed most favorably to appellant's case. The window projecting over the sidewalk constituted a nuisance. Section 3479, Civ. Code. The respondent knew that if the rod which it furnished for use was used in the manner in which it was designed to be used, and as it had been used on other occasions, it constituted a hazard to the safety of pedestrians. This being so, it should in some form or manner have signified its disapproval of its use, rather than to have impliedly, at least, encouraged it. This is a question which should have been submitted to the jury.

Judgment reversed.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷34(1).

Lease was construed as contemplating use of garbage in raising hogs, and that failure, without lessee's fault, to secure garbage conferred right of rescission at lessees' option.

> Lessees had contract with a city to collect garbage, establish ranch, and feed garbage to hogs. For purpose of carrying out such agreement, lessees leased from lessor a ranch, lease providing that premises were to be used to aid in performance of such garbage contract, and that if, for any reason, contract should be unenforceable or void, or if lessees should for period of fifteen days in any matter whatsoever be prevented from gathering garbage, or if, without any fault upon their part, lessees would be prevented by law from using premises for purpose of raising hogs, then, at their option, lease should be deemed canceled, and all liability of lessees cease. After period of more than one year, third party obtained injunction against lessees, directing them to restrain from shipping to or receiving at such ranch any garbage and from feeding it to hogs thereon.

2. Landlord and tenant ⚷34(5).

When, under rescission clause, lessees notified lessor of intention to rescind, result was rescission, and termination of lessee's liability under lease.

Superseding opinion in 287 P. 113.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for appellant.

A. G. Bailey, of Woodland, for respondents.

PRESTON, J.

Appellant corporation, as plaintiff, brought this action in the court below in equity to enjoin a threatened demolition of certain improvements which, as lessees, defendants had erected on plaintiff's real property of about fifty acres in Yolo county, California.

The substance of the complaint was that defendant lessees were threatening to abandon said property and had so notified plaintiff and were about to tear down and remove said structures. Issue was joined on this complaint, but later a supplemental complaint was filed which alleged that said improvements had already been destroyed by the defendants subsequent to the filing of the original complaint; that thereafter and on April 3, 1929, defendants abandoned the premises and plaintiff therefore prayed for damages for the value of said improvements. Defendants by answer admitted the relationship of landlord and tenant, the surrender of the premises, and the tearing down and removal of the improvements as alleged, but justified their act upon the ground that, under the terms of the lease itself and by mutual consent as well, the lease had been duly rescinded, and that, by reason of such fact, they were entitled as a matter of right to remove the structures placed on said property, same being trade fixtures within the rule promulgated by section 1019 of the Civil Code and removable without injury to the freehold.

The claims of defendants in this respect were sustained by the court below in its findings and judgment in their favor, from which judgment plaintiff now prosecutes this appeal. The background of this litigation must be examined to understand the respective positions of the parties.

In April, 1927, certain of the defendants entered into a written contract with the city of Sacramento whereby they undertook to collect all the wet garbage from the hotels, restaurants, hospitals, and clubs of said city and to convey the same in sanitary steel garbage wagons, under direction of the city manager of said city, to a place without the city, and, further, to establish a ranch at a point not nearer than ten miles to the city limits of said city, for the feeding of said garbage to hogs. For the purpose of carrying out their agreement with the city of Sacramento, said defendants leased from plaintiff corporation for the period of ten years and two months, for the sum of $30,500, at a monthly rate of $250, its said fifty-acre ranch in Yolo county and established thereon a large band of hogs of considerable value. For the period of one year or more, they fed said garbage so collected from said places in Sacramento to said swine, and, for the purpose of adequately carrying on said business, they constructed the improvements here in question.

However, one Ohaver, a citizen and resident near the location of said ranch, instituted in the superior court of Yolo county an injunction proceeding seeking to restrain the defendants from shipping to or receiving at said ranch any of said garbage. Thereafter and on July 25, 1928, said superior court issued an order granting a writ of injunction, directing defendants to refrain, until further order of the court, from shipping to or receiving at said ranch any garbage or similar material and from feeding it to hogs thereon. This judgment has become final. Ohaver v. Fenech, 206 Cal. 118, 273 P. 555.

In the present action, the court below found, among other things, that in January, 1929, defendants rescinded, canceled, and terminated said lease, and later, on the 3d day of April, 1929, surrendered possession of the premises; that defendants made many improvements and alterations thereon, consisting of new buildings, barns, electric power lines, office building, boar pens, shavings room, sheds, pump building, electric wiring and fixtures, bone platforms, railroad track and cars, brood sow pens, pipes and plumbing fixtures, floors and partitions in the old barns, alterations to existing buildings, and many other improvements and alterations, all of which were made for the purpose of carrying on the business of raising hogs on the leased premises and to advance the purpose for which the land was leased; that all of them could be removed from the premises without injury to the freehold; that all of them were trade fixtures, and, further, that on April 3, 1929, defendants abandoned, vacated, and surrendered said premises by and with the consent of plaintiff.

Appellant relies for reversal upon two propositions: (1) That the lease itself provides that the improvements shall go to the lessor and (2) that the alterations and improvements were not trade fixtures, but were permanent fixtures to the freehold itself.

[1, 2] The lease between the parties was in writing and the foundation therein for appellant's claims will be found in paragraphs 11 and 17 thereof, which read as follows:

"11. It is hereby agreed that, except for changes in the interior of structures now on said premises, any alterations in, or improvements on said premises, made or constructed by said lessees during said term, or extension thereof, shall remain on said premises after the expiration of said term or extension and said lessees shall not be responsible for the removal thereof."

"17. It is further understood and agreed that the premises hereby leased are to be used by the lessees to aid in the performance of a certain contract between them and the City of Sacramento, whereby they contract to gather garbage in said City from the 1st day of July, 1927, to and including the 30th day of June, 1937. It is, therefore, agreed by the lessor that if, for any reason whatsoever, said contract between the lessees and said City of Sacramento be, or shall be, or shall become, unenforceable or void, or if said lessees shall, for a period of fifteen days, in any manner whatsoever, be prevented from gathering the garbage in said contract with the City of Sacramento, referred to, or any portion thereof, or if without any fault upon the part of the lessees, said lessees are prevented by law, or pursuant to law, from using said premises for the purpose of raising hogs thereon, then, at the option of said lessees, this lease shall be deemed canceled and of no further force or effect, and all liability of the lessees hereunder shall cease."

In our judgment the above two questions may be easily disposed of. In the first place it seems too clear for argument that the parties had in mind when contracting the existence of the agreement between the city of Sacramento and the defendants, and, further, that the reasonable interpretation of paragraph 17, in connection with other provisions of the lease, is that if, for any reason, the lessees are prevented by law from "using said premises for the purpose of raising hogs thereon" in the manner contemplated, which is by the use of said garbage for food for said hogs, the lessees shall have the right to terminate the lease, and their liability thereunder shall cease. A reading of the entire paragraph 17 compels this conclusion. For example, note that, if the lessees were prevented from gathering the garbage for fifteen days under said contract, this would work a rescission of the lease, and note the statement that the lease is made in aid of the execution of the contract. These things speak loudly compelling the interpretation that the lease contemplated the use of the garbage in raising hogs on said ranch, and failure, without fault on the part of the lessees, to secure said garbage for that purpose, was sufficient to confer the right of rescission upon them at their option. We therefore hold that, when the defendant notified the plaintiff of their intention to rescind the lease, the necessary result of such action was a rescission and cancellation thereof. This brought into operation the provision, "all liability of the lessees hereunder shall cease."

[3] As for section 11, it is true that it provides that "except for certain changes * * * any alterations in, or improvements on said premises, made or constructed by said lessees during said term, or extension thereof shall remain on said premises after the expiration of said term or extension. * * *" But clearly this provision speaks as of the lawful expiration of the ten-year period or any extension thereof, and it does not speak of the situation which shall obtain in the event of rescission by a failure of consideration or by operation of law of the lease prior to the expiration of the term thereof. Consequently, we hold that this provision is inapplicable to the parties in their present situation. See Pringle v. Wilson, 156 Cal. 313, 104 P. 316, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090.

[4] The case then reaches this state: Were the improvements so removed by the defendants trade fixtures within the meaning of the law and removable without injury to the freehold? This is largely a question of fact. The court has found affirmatively upon it, and we see no reason which would permit the disturbing of its finding.

It therefore follows that the judgment of the court below must be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

Appellate court held required to assume jury in awarding exemplary damages found slander was uttered and libel published with malice in fact, in view of instructions.

> The trial court instructed that award of exemplary damages depended directly and solely on presence of malice in fact in the mind of defendant, and that if malice in fact was present, jury might give exemplary damages, and if such malice was absent, jury could not allow exemplary damages.

2. Libel and slander 🔑120(1).

Language being libelous per se and published with malice in fact, exemplary damages could be awarded without awarding actual damages.

HOUSER, J.

In separate counts of a complaint plaintiff sought damages against defendant on account of alleged libel and slander, respectively. The following verdict was returned by the jury:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find for the plaintiff and assess her damages in the sum of ——— ($———) dollars as actual damages and the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars as punitive damages, making a total of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, this 20th day of September, 1928."

From the ensuing judgment defendant has appealed to this court.

[1] The first point presented by appellant as a sufficient reason for reversal of the judgment is that because by its verdict the jury failed to assess any actual damages, the attempted assessment of punitive damages was "against the law; contrary to law and void."

If, on the trial of an action of the character of that here under consideration, the evidence should disclose the undisputed fact that an alleged slander per se was uttered through inadvertence or mistake in the identity of the slandered person to one who neither believed in the truth of the slanderous words nor repeated them to any person other than to the person who was slandered, and then only at the request or solicitation of such person—from which it would seem apparent that no actual damage resulted from the slanderous utterance—it may seem an anomaly in the law that, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover a judgment as for actual damages other than for a nominal sum of money, nevertheless a judgment based on a verdict for substantial punitive damages should be sustained. But in the instant case, among other statements of the law which were given by the trial court to the jury for its guidance in determining what damages, if any, should be awarded to the plaintiff in the action, the following appears:

"* * * The award of exemplary damages depends directly and solely upon the presence of malice in fact in the mind of the defendant. If it was present they may be given. If it was absent they cannot be allowed. * * *"

Taking such instruction into consideration, and assuming (as we should) that the jury gave heed to it, the conclusion must follow that because the jury awarded punitive damages to the plaintiff, it must have found that with "malice in fact" the defendant gave utterance to the slander and published the libel against plaintiff.

[2, 3] Although throughout the several jurisdictions of the United States a lack of uniformity prevails in the decisions with reference to the question of whether a judgment founded solely upon an award for punitive damages may be sustained (37 C. J. 127; 33 A. L. R. 384, and authorities there respectively cited), and although some of the adjudications emanating from the appellate tribunals of this state (Lewis v. Hayes, 165 Cal. 527, 132 P. 1022, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 148; Warfield v. Krueger, 96 Cal. App. 671, 274 P. 764; Chavez v. Times-Mirror Co., 72 Cal. App.

694, 237 P. 1085; Pickwick Stages v. Board of Trustees, 54 Cal. App. 730, 215 P. 558; Wright v. Baldwin, 47 Cal. App. 147, 190 P. 377) present indications of a rule to the contrary, the opinion in the case of Childers v. San Jose Mercury Printing & Pub. Co., 105 Cal. 284, 38 P. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40 contains a direct statement of the law in substance that where, as in the instant case, the alleged libel or slander is libelous per se, an award of exemplary damages is not dependent upon an award of actual damages. The instant case presents a stronger situation, in that the language of which complaint was made was not only libelous per se, but as well, according to the implied finding by the jury, it was uttered and published by defendant with "malice in fact." Since it would appear that in order to sustain a verdict for exemplary damages it is enough that the plaintiff was entitled to actual damages, even if not awarded by the verdict, it follows that the point suggested by appellant is not well taken.

[4] On the trial of the action, after plaintiff had rested her case in chief, defendant presented a motion to the trial court to the effect that an order of nonsuit be entered as against the plaintiff. The ground of the motion was that as to each count contained in the complaint the communication or publication respectively alleged to have been uttered or published by defendant was privileged within the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Code. The motion was denied, and appellant herein presents for consideration of this court the question of whether, in making such ruling, prejudicial error was committed by the trial court.

As to the first count in the complaint, since the answer thereto contained no defense that the communication of which complaint was made was privileged, it is plain that no error occurred in the order to which attention has been directed. Besides which condition the circumstances shown by the evidence were such that no privilege could attach to the situation in question. Relating to the second count, and as to which the defense of privilege was presented in the answer, on examination of the record herein it is equally clear that the contention of appellant cannot prevail. Assuming that the alleged libel was of such a character that, within the terms of the statute, its publication was privileged, nevertheless, because of the facts and circumstances surrounding its publication, the evidence was sufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the question of whether the privilege accorded to defendant was deemed to have been lost by reason of the fact that the libel was published by defendant maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause for believing that such publication constituted a true statement of facts.

Regarding the further contention by appellant that the verdict was for an excessive amount, and consequently must have been rendered under the influence of passion and prejudice, it need only be said that, considering the evidence relating to each of the two counts in the action, together with that part of the evidence which disclosed the social and financial standing of each of the parties to the litigation, it cannot be said that "the amount awarded is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense, and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury was under the influence of passion or prejudice." Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 363, 386.

The judgment is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for new trial is dismissed.

Feb. 9, 1931.

Criminal law ⚷1171(1).

Prosecutor's attempt in cross-examining defendant to ascertain whether defendant would permit prosecution to call defendant's husband as witness held not prejudicial (Pen. Code, § 1322).

> On cross-examination of defendant, district attorney asked her whether she would waive privilege of forbidding husband to testify in case, and defendant's counsel's objection was overruled, whereupon district attorney again asked witness to tell jury and court whether she would object to husband testifying, and she replied, "I will do as my attorney says." On rebuttal district attorney called defendant's husband as witness, and objection to his testimony was sustained, and court instructed jury that such witness was not a competent witness.

CONREY, P. J.

As presented to the court by appellant, the appeal herein is based solely upon the contention that the district attorney, in the trial of the case, was guilty of misconduct prejudicial to the defendant. The conduct of which appellant complains had relation to an attempt made by the district attorney to ascertain whether or not the defendant would permit the prosecution to call the defendant's husband and obtain his testimony as a witness for the people. "Neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both. * * *" Pen. Code, § 1322.

The victim of the alleged assault was one Dr. Cooley. The defendant, having become a witness in her own behalf, admitted that both she and her husband were present at the time and place when the shots were fired by which Dr. Cooley was wounded, but denied that the shooting was done by her. On cross-examination the district attorney asked her whether she would waive the privilege of forbidding her husband to testify in this case, and permit him to testify as a witness if called as a witness for the people. Counsel for defendant objected to the question, but that objection was overruled, whereupon the question was repeated in these terms: "Go ahead, Mrs. Moore, and tell the jury and the court whether or not you object to your husband testifying in this case as a witness for the People?" Her answer was: "I will do as my attorney says."

On rebuttal, after the defense had closed, the district attorney called defendant's husband as a witness and asked him if he was willing to testify as a witness for the people if his wife would give her consent for him so to testify. The witness replied in the affirmative. Thereupon counsel for the defendant objected to testimony from this witness, and declined to waive the statutory privilege. Thereupon the court instructed the jury that said witness was not a competent witness and instructed the jury to disregard "the entire testimony of this witness, even his being sworn as a witness." An assignment of misconduct was then made, upon the ground that the district attorney in bringing this witness before the court in the manner described had done this for the purpose of prejudicing the minds of the jury.

We are of the opinion that it was unfair to the defendant for the district attorney, as a part of the cross-examination of the defendant, to interject the questions to which we have referred and call upon the witness to "tell the jury and the court" whether she would object if her husband was called as a witness. An answer to such inquiry could easily have been obtained from the defendant or her attorney, in a far less conspicuous manner. The defendant should not have been required to "tell the jury" about her objection to the examination of her husband as a witness against her. But there is nothing in the statutes which requires that such inquiries, preliminary to the calling of a witness, shall be secret or not in the presence of the jury. The ordinary method would be to offer the husband as a witness by requesting that he be sworn and by asking questions. If no objection was made on the part of the defendant, she would have been presumed to have consented. People v. Singh, 182 Cal. 457, 483, 188 P. 987. But if she did object, the fact of her unwillingness would be manifest to the jury, with whatever incidental effect her refusal to give consent might have upon them. Giving to the matters complained of the most liberal interpretation in favor of the defendant, they fall short of constituting that serious and prejudicial misconduct which in this case will justify a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed. The order denying motion for a new trial is affirmed.

Action by John Lawrence Campbell against Julian Merger Mines and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This action was brought in the form of the common count for money had and received to recover from the defendants $5,000 paid by plaintiff for 5,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporate defendant Julian Merger Mines. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

It is not necessary to recite the evidence in detail. There is some evidence to the effect that the defendant C. C. Julian told plaintiff that while he did not have a permit from the corporation commissioner to sell the stock, he had a federal permit; that is, that the company was "incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, or something to that effect." The plaintiff also testified that the defendant C. C. Julian promised him a commission on the stock he might sell, but that although this stock was really purchased for his friend Samuel Kleinman he received no commission thereon. The stock was issued in plaintiff's name. His counsel during the cross-examination interposed and said: "I offered to stipulate that at the time of the 5000 stock transaction in evidence that this plaintiff knew that the Julian Merger Mines had no authority from the corporation commissioner to sell the stock and that in this transaction he was equally culpable with the Julian Merger Mines in purchasing the stock contrary to the Corporation Securities Act." Defense counsel replied: "I will accept the stipulation and stop my examination right now."

The stipulation carries us further than the fact that plaintiff knew that the defendant corporation had no permit. It connects up with the testimony concerning commissions and unequivocally says that the plaintiff is equally guilty of wrongdoing with the defendant. We need not consider in the present action what would have been the outcome had his participation been limited to a purchase with knowledge only of the nonexistence of the permit. Under the circumstances here, he was not entitled to recover, and the case of Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock, etc., Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36, 39, is squarely in point. It is there said: "The entire transaction was an attempt to circumvent the law. The notes and agreements were each of them made in violation thereof, and are therefore against the policy of the law, as he claims, and void. * * * In such a case the court will give no relief even if the point is not raised by either party."

appeal. Rules of the Supreme and District Courts of Appeal 1, § 1, rules V and VI; sections 953a and 954, Code Civ. Proc. In cases where a mere inspection of the record shows that appellant is entitled to no relief, it has been held that a motion to dismiss an appeal is not the proper remedy, but a motion to affirm the order appealed from should be granted.

In Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118, 118 P. 526, in which case a mere inspection of the record disclosed that appellant was entitled to no relief, it was held that, as a matter of convenience, the court could entertain a motion to dismiss, saying in the concluding part of the opinion: "Ordinarily it can matter little whether the form of the order made in the premises be one of dismissal, or one of affirmance for lack of proper record. In the present case, however, jurisdiction over the appeal having been vested under the new system by the notice given by appellant to the clerk, the proper order would be one of affirmance of the order upon appeal for lack of record showing error." HOUSER, J.

By a separate information, each of the defendants was charged with the crime of robbery; also, with a prior conviction of a felony. By stipulation of the several interested parties, the two actions were tried simultaneously. From a judgment of conviction, as well as from an order by which his motion for a new trial was denied, each of the defendants has appealed to this court.

The details of the story of the commission of the offense for which the defendants were placed on trial do not materially differ from those attending any other robbery of recent years in this vicinity. It is only in the remarkable facts which were presented to the jury in the defense of the defendants that one may realize the possibility, if not the probability, that an injustice to the defendants may have resulted from the judgment of the court.

A restaurant in the eastern portion of the city of Pasadena was the scene of the robbery. At the trial of the action the proprietor of the restaurant, his wife, and each of two patrons of the establishment identified each of the defendants as one of the persons who committed the robbery. However, such identification of defendant Charles Lee Quinn was somewhat weakened, particularly by the fact that at least as to two of such witnesses, on an occasion following the date of the robbery, when afforded a most favorable opportunity to identify said defendant, they failed to recognize him or to associate him with the commission of the offense. A part of the evidence introduced by defendants consisted of an unquestioned showing that on the date when the crime was committed, and covering a period of many days both preceding such date as well as subsequent thereto, defendant Roy Vernon Quinn was serving a sentence, and during all such time was supposedly incarcerated, in a jail in the city of Los Angeles. However, it appeared in evidence that the so-called "honor jail" in which Roy Vernon Quinn presumably was confined at the time when the robbery occurred consisted of a large room on the ground floor of a one-story building having ordinary windows which had no iron bars to prevent the escape of defendant therefrom, but that, as a sort of "precaution," defendant, together with several other prisoners who occupied the same "honor jail," were guarded night and day by two officers who at intervals, and especially at 10:30 o'clock p. m. and 7 o'clock a. m. of each day, "checked" the defendant as being present in the jail—from which it would follow that the only apparent possibility that defendant Roy Vernon Quinn personally participated in the commission of the offense for which he was on trial was that at some time between the hours of 10:30 o'clock p. m. and 7 o'clock a. m. of the following day he escaped from the "honor jail" in which he was confined in the city of Los Angeles, made the necessary preparation to commit the crime, went to the restaurant in the eastern part of the city of Pasadena where the crime was committed at about 1:30 o'clock a. m., returned to, "broke into," the "honor jail" from which previously he had escaped and resumed his character as an inmate thereof, all without the knowledge, acquiescence, or consent of either of the two guards who presumably were watching the window and the door exits of the jail for the purpose of detecting and frustrating any escape therefrom which might be attempted by any person incarcerated therein, if not of preventing any unlawful or clandestine entrance thereof.

In the defense of Charles Lee Quinn, testimony was given by several witnesses which tended to establish for him an "alibi," in that, if such witnesses spoke the truth, the impossibility of his guilt was satisfactorily established.

But especially in view of the verdict returned by the jury, which presumably was concurred in by the judge of the trial court, in addition to such a unique situation was the added testimony of a man named Abbott, who at the time of the trial in question was being held in custody in the Los Angeles county jail awaiting his own trial on a charge of robbery, to the effect that he and an unnamed companion together committed the robbery for which defendants Roy Vernon Quinn and Charles Lee Quinn were then on trial, and that neither of such defendants participated in any way in its commission. Such an extraordinary situation as regards the evidence in a criminal action should demand a corresponding attention by a reviewing court to the reasons assigned by the appellants for a reversal of the judgment against them.

[1, 2] Over the objection of counsel for defendants, the prosecution was permitted to ask the witness Abbott the following question: "What charge are you in jail now on?" to which the witness answered, "Robbery."

Although, in itself, the fact that the witness voluntarily testified that it was he, together with an unnamed companion, who committed the robbery for which defendants were then on trial, might place him in such an unenviable light that his credibility as a witness might have been seriously questioned, nevertheless, the defendants in the instant action were entitled to the benefit of the rule which for the purpose of impeachment forbids "evidence of particular wrongful acts, except * * * that he had been convicted of a felony." Section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Hamblin, 68 Cal. 101, 8 P. 687; People v. Un Dong, 106 Cal. 83, 39 P. 12; People v. Warren, 134 Cal. 202, 66 P. 212; People v. White, 142 Cal. 292, 75 P. 828. Had the jury not been placed in possession of evidence of the fact that at the time when the witness gave his testimony he was then an inmate of the county jail awaiting his trial on a charge of robbery, it is possible that the jury might have had a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants in the instant action, which necessarily would have resulted in their acquittal.

[3, 4] In describing the jail in which defendant Roy Vernon Quinn supposedly was confined at the time when the robbery in question was committed, the head jailer at the prison made the following statement: "This jail is a big open jail, three big rooms, they are all larger than this, about twice the size of the court room, there is windows all around this place, and there are two men that watches these men nights and days, they are checked in and out, but as far as knowing whether they are really there all the time or not, one can get away from us very easy."

A motion made by defendants to strike the "conclusion" of the witness was denied. Identical action was taken by the trial court as to a subsequent statement made by the witness that it was "possible for a man to get out of there in the middle of the night and come back in the morning and not be missed." However, other statements made by the witness, to wit, that "I have had men get away from there and come back," and that "it is possible. I have caught them doing it," by order of the court were stricken from the record.

From a consideration of the foregoing, it is plain that the answers of the witness, to which objections made by counsel for defendants were overruled, not only were conclusions of the witness, but as well that the further conclusions of the witness to which attention had been directed, and which were ordered stricken from the record, but had the effect of accentuating the other conclusions which were left undisturbed for the consideration of the jury. It is further manifest that, because of the asserted reason that one of the statements had been "stricken out," the conduct of the trial court in refusing to admonish the jury that "that evidence shall not be considered," added to the prejudice of the defendants. No argument should be necessary to establish the point that, after the conditions surrounding the incarceration of defendant Roy Vernon Quinn had been fully described by the witness, the ultimate question of whether sufficient evidence had been presented to create in the "mind" of the jury a reasonable doubt of whether said defendant was in jail at the very time that the crime was committed was one solely for determination by the jury, unaided by any suggestion by the witness that, because others had been able to do so, it was possible that the defendant Roy Vernon Quinn might have escaped the jail, committed the robbery, and thereafter returned to the jail, without the knowledge of any one charged with the duty of keeping him continuously in prison during the time of his sentence thereto.
